A number of citizens of Luce township, Spencer county, have filed a petition with the county commissioners asking permission to inclose a large body of land subject to overflow, under the provisions of the acts of 1875. This is the first application under the new law.

Robert Vaughn is supposed to have been drowned while in a float Wabash, last Friday. The last seen of him he was sitting on the river bridge. Afterward his hat was found on the bridge, and the rock below, immediately at the edge of the river, was sprinkled with blood.

A fiend named Turpin, who lives south of Lebanon a few miles, one day last week whipped his wife terribly, then took her out fastened her to a tree, and set her on fire; and but for the interference of some neighbors hearing her screams, she doubtless would have burned to death.

Mr. John F. Spiegelhelder, of Jeffersonville, was found dead on the Charlestown road, five miles back of town, and it is not known whether his death was accidental or suicidal. He had gone out hunting in the morning, and his gun, with one barrel empty, was found lying beside him.

The dwelling-house of Elias Cooper, seven miles from Vevay was burglarized last Tuesday night, and a fine watch, twenty dollars in money, and some clothing taken. Mr. Cooper had sold his farm the day before, for cash, and was supposed to have a large amount of money in the house, but, having deposited it in the bank, it was all saved except some pocket change.

At Spencer, one morning last week, a fire broke out in F. T. Batterton's hardware store, and burned five large business houses and a livery stable, leaving but two buildings in the square, Miller's hotel and saloon. Total loss, $20,000; insurance, $9,000, in Eastern companies. The principal losers are Batterton, $7,000; J. E. Johnson, grocer, $3,000; William Moore, livery stable, $4,000.

One evening last week the wife of Isaac Sellers, who lives in German Township, near South Bend, on a farm belonging to Buffalo Miller, of Chicago, heard that her son had met with an accident. He lived about a quarter of a mile away, and she started for his house on the run. Upon her arrival at his house she dropped on the floor dead. She was a large woman, and it is supposed she died of apoplexy brought on by the unusual exercise.

The case of the State of Indiana vs. the Terre Haute Railroad Company, involving about $1,500,000, which has been in the courts about four or five years, has been decided in the superior court. The case will probably go to the supreme court on the sustaining of the demurrers. The effect of the decision is that the State cannot recover the money claimed for the school fund because of her own neglect in the matter of necessary legislation precedent to any valid claim against the surplus funds of the railroad.

An Indianapolis dispatch says: "The palace sleeper 'Castalia,' on the Kankakee route, was thrown from the track, west of Lafayette, last Tuesday night, and entirely wrecked. Among the passengers injured were Harry Crawford, Chicago, badly; D. W. Ferrall and Richard Brown, also of Chicago; Morris [illegible], of Indianapolis; conductor Lewis and the sleeping-car conductor, Davis, not seriously. Fortunately the stoves in the sleeping-coaches remained covered, and a repetition of the recent horror in Vermont was happily averted. These two accidents should suggest the necessity of the use of stoves which will not spread fire and death when sleeping-cars are overturned.

The Western Druggists' Convention met at Indianapolis last week, fifty-eight firms in Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Burlington, Cleveland, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Alton, Keokuk, Peoria, Louisville, Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Detroit, Toledo, Lafayette, Fort Wayne, and Columbus, O., being represented. James Richardson, of St. Louis, was made President, and A. B. Merriam, of Cincinnati, Secretary. The principal object of the meeting was to consider the expediency of doing away with the drummer system. After considerable discussion the following resolution was passed: Resolved, That the question of the employment of commercial travelers is one for each firm to settle for itself.

A special from Evansville says: "The greatest excitement has been created among politicians over the discovery of frauds in the city offices. The investigating committee appointed by the Council to examine into alleged frauds said to have been committed by County Treasurer Wm. Koch while he was City Collector, in 1873, have concluded their labors, and have submitted their report, showing that Koch defrauded the taxpayers and the city of upward of $6,000 during 1873 by false entries, overcharges, inserting fictitious names, using dead men and men removed from the city, etc., to cover his cheats. City Treasurer Ohning to-day confessed to the Mayor that he has been carrying a false balance, and that his accounts are $4,200 short. He has persistently refused to make settlement with the Auditor, and the deficiency would not have been discovered had not Ohning been called on for money, which he could not produce. Ohning is a cripple, having been in the war. He has been treasurer since 1871, being elected five terms in succession. He is a poor man, and the discovery will ruin him unless his bondsmen come to his rescue, which they refuse to do. Koch is known as the most popular politician in the county. He has held various city and county offices for the past ten years, and was never defeated. He denies the charge, and implicates his deputy, Tom Sinnich. Koch and Sinnich were both in office when Benjamin Sansom was Collector, and are supposed to have received some of the amount that was stolen in that period. The grand jury will be asked to investigate at the next meeting."

An Artificial Mother.

Mr. T. B. Rogers, the famous poultry-raiser at Wethersfield, has "sensed the precise thing," and has invented what he calls an "artificial mother" for the rearing of young chickens. He estimates that about 50 per cent. of chickens hatched are lost by suffering from cold, by being stepped on by their mother, by cats and other animals, and in various other ways. He also finds that chickens to be profitable should be hatched in the winter. He has hatched three broods in nine weeks with one hen—that is, he takes away the chickens as soon as hatched and places fresh eggs under the hen, and in this way keeps her busy propagating chickens. Mr. Rogers' next move was to get some invention that would take care of the chickens when hatched, and he has constructed what he calls an "artificial mother." This is a box with two compartments, and about three feet by two and a half feet wide. In the rear is a lid covered with wool, which shuts within nine inches of the bottom; this is cut off from the front part by a strip that can be raised on hinges. The front is protected by lattice work, giving plenty of air and light, and on the outside are tin troughs, in which gravel, food and water are placed. The chickens can easily get their bills into these, and when they have got their fill they can run under the wool-covered lid, which is so soft and comfortable that they imagine they are under the old hen's wings. Mr. Rodgers had in one of these boxes yesterday a brood of twenty one chickens, sixteen of which were hatched last Thursday, and five on Sunday. They were all as lively as crickets, and seemed perfectly at ease. He took them to the Springfield poultry show on the noon train, where they will undoubtedly attract a good deal of attention. Mr. Rogers deals exclusively in light Brahmas, and thinks they are the best layers, as well as the most profitable fowls for the table.—Hartford Courant.

Counting Votes.

A diagram 15 inches long by 5¼ inches high is divided by vertical lines into 100 equal spaces, numbered consecutively at the top, every tenth line being drawn more heavily than the rest and marked by more conspicuous figures. Thirty spaces are then divided off by horizontal lines, numbered at the sides as 100, 200, etc., up to 3,000. The diagram will then contain 3,000 squares, and is known as Borwick's self counting register. In counting votes or tallying parcels a mark is made for each vote or parcel in one of the squares, beginning at the top and left hand, and working to the right. The figures at the sides show at any time the number of hundreds registered, and those at the top the excess over the last hundred. If each vote is marked as soon as called, and only a single mark entered in a square, of course error is impossible.

The best time for felling timber is when the tree contains the least sap, and that is the case in midsummer, and midwinter. In general, all soft woods, such as elm, lime, poplar, and willow, should be felled during winter. Oak, alder, beech, and pine are better cut in summer.

Among an invoice of old paper stock received at a Norwich paper mill recently was $50,000,000 in canceled United States bonds.

HOLD ON.

Perhaps You Hadn't Better be so Fast About Going to the Black Hills—Hear what this Man Says About Them.

The Denver News publishes the following letter from Fort Laramie, Wyoming territory:

"I think [illegible] should deter many persons from going where thousands will find nothing but disappointment. I arrived here yesterday from the "hills," and, like many others, found I had made a great mistake in going there. Persons going to the hills with the expectation of finding gold without digging hard for it will be grievously disappointed. As a general thing, the diggings are deep—from fifteen to thirty feet; the country is flat (the gulches have but little fall), and great expense is attached to opening claims in most localities. Very little prospecting has been done, and but little gold has been taken out; at Custer City mining is entirely ignored, and town lot speculation and house building have taken the place of mining. Everybody owning claims there is on "the sell." A very few claims in any of the gulches are showing paying prospects. There is water only about three months in the year, and a claim must be first-class to pay expenses. It will take three months to open a claim at Custer. Deadwood creek, ninety miles north of Custer, is probably about as good as anything found there yet, and in this gulch there seems to be a second deposit of gold, in about two feet of earth, and it prospects tolerably well. But below this is from six to eighteen feet that contains but little gold until bed-rock is reached, and then five dollars to the pan will not more than pay for working. The new comers are very much excited, but the old miners are nearly all anxious to sell. If there are any mines in the Black Hills that will warrant a stampede like the present one, I have failed to find them. And that is the honest verdict of all the parties with whom I have talked, who know anything about mines. They may yet discover rich diggings, but they certainly have not got them now, and the chances for another California are not good.

It makes one's heart sick to see the poor devils who are going to the mines minus money, blankets, grub, or even guns. They may be met by dozens, begging their way; and the weather for the past month has been cold, windy and extremely disagreeable, and there are no ranches beyond Fort Laramie where these impecunious tramps may find shelter.

Flour and groceries have been obtainable at prices quite reasonable at the mines, and this has proved a most fortunate fact, for but few had taken in more than enough grub to last them on the way. Corn is $18 per 100 pounds. Freight from Cheyenne has shot up from three to six cents to twelve and twenty cents per pound. I don't see how these blanketless and penniless fellows will find grub unless ground hogs and prairie dogs are plenty.

On an average, about forty persons leave Cheyenne every day, and there are not a tenth part of the arrivals at the hills. At the present rate of immigration there will be from 20,000 to 25,000 persons in the hills by the 1st of July, and, judging by my own observations, nine-tenths of them will be disappointed and disgusted—a starving crowd, as most of them have their last dollar invested in their outfit. If the mines should turn out good, a year hence is soon enough to go there.

My advice to the majority is, that if they can get a good chance to make board and clothes, they had better give the Black Hills a wide berth, for before another sixty days passes a change will take place, and an army of disgusted and foot-sore gold seekers will turn homeward.

Third-Class Postage.

The present outrageously extortionate rate of postage on printed or third-class matter has proved a source of very considerable profit to the express companies. A great many packages which formerly passed through the mail pouches are now sent by express. The house of representatives passed a bill for the reform of this evil several days ago. Since then Senator Hamlin, chairman of the committee on postoffice affairs, has introduced a bill which would be a great improvement on the present law. It provides as follows:

"For distances not exceeding two miles, one cent for each two ounces or fractional part thereof; for distances between [illegible] and 800 miles two cents; for distances between 800 and 1,500 miles, three cents, and for each additional 1,000 miles one cent additional for each two ounces or fractional part thereof. A special rate, however, is proposed for transient newspapers and magazines, namely, one cent for every two ounces or fractional part thereof, for all distances not exceeding 1,000 miles, but for any greater distance double this rate is to be paid. The bill also provides that all occasional publications, prices current, catalogues, and annuals, and all regular publications devoted primarily to advertising purposes, or for free circulation at nominal subscription rates, shall hereafter be considered and charged as third-class matter. Other provisions authorize the writing of a brief form of presentation, or of a brief description upon books and magazines, or any other articles mailed as third-class matter, and allow insufficiently prepaid matter to be carried to its destination in cases where there has not been an evident intention to underpay the full amount; provided that double the deficiency shall be collected at the other end. When the sender is known, however, he is to be notified and required to make full prepayment."

The present law was passed in the last hours of an expiring congress, and the only excuse for its passage offered was the plea that it was supported under a misapprehension. Prompt work should be made of its repeal. The present rate is one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof, and it was further provided that no package weighing more than four pounds should be mailable. A statement from the postmaster at New York shows that the revenue of the government at that office from third-class matter has fallen off several hundred thousand dollars since the present law went into effect. Throughout the country the remailing of transient newspapers has been so far stopped as to be a serious embargo upon the dissemination of knowledge.

The Mishap of a Luncheon Party

A cruel disappointment was that of a party of ladies and gentlemen exploring the depths of the Bonanza mines the other day. It was arranged that a lunch was to be eaten on the 1,500-foot level, and therefore at noon large baskets of dainties, both liquid and substantial, were lowered into the depths. They decended first among a group of honest Cornish miners, delving on the 1,200-foot level, who in absence of any instructions, decided, after much discussion, that it must be an American national holiday, or something of the kind, above ground, and that this was a kind [illegible]. They therefore fell to [illegible] with much vim. When the exhausted excursionists inquired for their refreshments, they discovered only the empty hampers and about twenty brawny miners full of chicken salad, Roederer, etc., dancing a Cornish breakdown by the fitful light of the flaring torch.—San Francisco News Letter.

PASSING EVENTS.

Revenues for the first six months of the fiscal year amounted to $147,146,000, at which rate the revenue for the whole year will be about one million in excess of the estimate. The final result will depend on the volume of the spring importations.

Italy has its falls from grace in high society as well as the rest of us. The Marquis Mantegazza of Milan has been discovered as the forger of King Victor Emanuel's name to the amount of $40,000. He was a man in high position socially, and in business circles a railroad director, and a sort of banker in addition.

A recent investigation shows that the number of persons who own land to the amount of more than one acre in England and Wales, outside of London, is 269,000, while those who own less than one acre are 703,000. Although these figures seem to convict Stuart Mill and and John Bright of inaccuracy, in stating the owners of the soil at 30,000, it may well be doubted if a fuller statement of the results of the investigation might not confirm, in a striking manner, the general statement that the agricultural land is in the hands of a comparatively few persons.

A Sandusky (Ohio) paper gives the following and sequel to an elopement: "In the summer of 1850 Harlan Case, collector of the port of Sandusky, stole $22,000 in gold, customs revenue, from the Government, and ran away with the wife of his deputy collector, Henry Francis. For years nothing was heard of the parties. An Ohio missionary on the island of Ceylon recently met Case and Mrs. Francis there, the latter dying from a broken heart, and now dead. Mr. Francis left here shortly after the defalcation and elopement, and is supposed to have committed suicide. Case was formerly collector at Buffalo, and is well known all along the lakes. He has relatives here."

Since the year 1859, when old Comstock stumbled upon a deposit of ledge rock among the hills around Virginia City in Nevada, the yield of silver has amounted to a total of $273,000,000. Last year alone the Comstock lode yielded about $50,000,000. The most productive mines in this lode, and their respective yields for the past year are as follows: Virginia Consolidated, $11,567,902.70; Crown Point, $4,874,322.58; Belcher, $5,498,935.55, and Ophir $1,048,236.16. The state of Nevada added, during 1875, not less than $40,000,000 to the world's aggregate bullion. For the year 1876 the production of the State will be at least $55,000,000, and of the whole Pacific coast, $100,000,000.

A recent estimate of the comparative growth in population of six of the principal nations of the world shows that Great Britain has increased from 27,000,000 in 1848 to 32,700,000 in 1875; France had in 1848 a population of 35,700,000, and in 1875, 36,500,000; Austria had in 1848, 37,000,000, and in 1875, 38,000,000; Russia in Europe had 60,000,000 in 1848, and 72,000,000 in 1875 (some doubt is thrown on the accuracy, however, of the last figures); Italy had 22,000,000 in 1861, and 27,800,000 in 1875; and the United States had 22,000,000 in 1848, and 44,000,000 in 1875. So Uncle Sam can make a very good showing by way of comparison on his first centennial.

Mrs. Lockwood, the irrepressible woman lawyer at Washington, D. C., is having a rough time in the court of claims, where she has several important cases. The judge refused to recognize her. Then she had a claim assigned to her that she might present in her own name. The court ruled her out because she had not stated the fact; then because she had not stated her precise interest in it, and finally because she is a femme covert, the wife of a man who legally owns her, and thus destroys her individuality. It will, therefore, be necessary for her to get a divorce from Dr. Lockwood in order to maintain her personal rights in the court of claims. As she does not intend to be beaten, it is said that she intends to apply heroic treatment to the case.

The innocence and child-like simplicity of some people is shown by the story of a farmer, described in an Anoka (Minn.) paper, as follows: "As William Mogle, Esq., of this city, was on his way to Minneapolis, last Friday, he overtook a man from Hennepin County with a load of hay, on which were two large-sized women. A short distance this side of Minneapolis the hay man stopped his team, and Mr. M. observed that he was vigorously digging a hole in the hay. Mr. M. drove on and passed him, and on looking back the women were no longer visible. The two teams entered Minneapolis about the same time, the load of hay was driven at once on the scales and weighed, and as the driver had turned a corner the women emerged from their retreat. Somebody paid for these women at the rate of $10 per ton."

A story brought out by James Parton's marriage: "I married a widow who had a grown-up step-daughter. My father visited my house very often, fell in love with my step-daughter, and married her. So my father became my son-in-law, and my step-daughter my mother, because she was my father's wife. Some time after my wife had a son; he was my father's brother-in-law, and my uncle; for he was the brother of my step-daughter. My father's wife—i. e., my step-daughter—also had a son; he was, of course, my brother, and in the meantime my grandchild, for he was the son of my daughter. My wife was my grandmother, because she was my mother's mother. I was my wife's husband and grandchild at the same time, and as the husband of a person's grandmother is his grandfather, I was my own grandfather."

THE BROOKLYN HORROR.

Burning of the Home for Aged People—Sickening Scenes of Death, Destruction and Suffering—Thrilling Leaps for Life by the Aged to be Crushed and Bruised Below.

We glean from the New York papers the following heart-rending details of the destruction by fire of the Brooklyn Home for the Aged, by which some twenty old and infirm people met death in its most appalling form. The home was under charge of the Little Sisters of the Poor. They there afforded a home to the aged and indigent of all religious persuasions, and have by this noble work earned the blessings of large numbers of destitute and infirm, whose condition especially appealed to their sympathies. These Sisters of the Poor are for the most part of French extraction, and have had eighteen homes in the United States, conducted on the same principle that they conducted the institution on Bushwick avenue. Their funds are obtained by their own appeals to the charity and philanthropy of the public, and they ask for no other assistance. The fire broke out at 4 o'clock in the morning, and so rapidly did it spread that in less than half an hour the whole east wing of the building was in flames. The alarm was transmitted to engine 17, on DeKalb avenue. The engines were on the spot and began their work with courage and promptitude. Soon after their arrival they were reinforced by other fire companies from the eastern district, under command of the assistant chief engineer. The scene that confronted them was such as to baffle description. Within the building, as seen from the outside, the aspect was tragic in the extreme. "Save me!" "Save me!" rose with piercing emphasis from the cracked and feeble voices of old men who were bed-ridden, re-echoed by women who were crippled. With the energy of despair, and in the wild effort to avert death, the mere thought of which makes the heart stand momentarily still, the aged creatures besieged the windows, and opening them allowed a current of air to pass in and fan the flames. Their screams were dreadful. One poor old man, as the flames rushed toward him, where he stood in a third story window, got upon the window-sill, and jumped (or, rather, threw himself down upon the ground.) He was killed instantly and his example came near having a fatal effect upon another of his companions, who imitated it, and was carried from the spot with his bones broken and his joints dislocated, suffering terrible agony. In the woman's department, after the panic had in some degree subsided, many of the females sank into inertia, and, after the police dragged them away from their cots on which they had lain down, they returned to the room and insisted on going to bed again. It was with the greatest difficulty that they could be induced to leave, and when they were led outside, they wandered about aimlessly until many of them were picked up by charitable persons in the vicinity and provided with shelter. Others of them insisted on saving the beds on which they had slept; others bewailed the sad condition of the sisters, and all of them gave way to idiosyncrasy wholly foreign to the supreme necessity that impelled the officers to get them out as quickly as possible. Meanwhile the terrible work of destruction was going on in the ill-fated east wing. There the flames, gathering energy, as if stimulated by the despair of human beings, shot from the basement to the first floor, and in rapid succession to the roof, through which their forked tongues projected, in fifteen minutes after the fire got well under way. The work of demolition was rapid, and to avert its spread the firemen worked with determination. They were, however, impeded by the male inmates, who, on the firemen going inside, insisted in clinging to them, and thus hindered them in their efforts. Shortly before the roof fell in, which occurred about 5 o'clock, the police were obliged to go up and rescue from it a number of old creatures who had fled thence in terror. At the hour of 5, however, the roof over the east wing gave way and fell, carrying in its descent the debris of the charred floors, the whole pile of rubbish descending to the basement. A volume of smoke rolled upward as it fell, and the firemen continued to pour a liberal volume of water upon the ruins beneath, which, with the burning wood and iron work of the cots, etc., that had fallen in it, hissed and sizzled. When the smoke cleared away, the firemen saw that the effort they had made to save the building had resulted successfully. They had cut the roof over the first tier of dormitories, and had thus cut off the approach of the flames to the second tier, although into the latter the fire had rushed, scorching the beds beneath their infirm and prostrate occupants. In one of these rooms on the third story, second tier, a horrible sight presented itself to the gaze of the fireman who first was able to make his way through smoke and flame into it. There, stretched upon their pallets, the mattresses, quilts, and even pillows, of which had been singed by fire, being partially covered with water that had subdued the flames around them, lay the corpses of nine unfortunate creatures, some of whom were paralytics, and all of whom had been unable to leave their beds. A few of them were burned, and the hair upon their heads singed, but all doubtless died from suffocation caused by smoke. On the second floor, likewise, one old man was found dead seated in a chair. He also died of asphyxia, and had been so infirm that he was unable to leave his seat. The firemen, however, continued the work of pouring water upon the embers, and when these cooled they began the search for those who were burned. Their labors brought from beneath the debris the charred and mangled bodies of eight men, whose remains fell with the floors on which they perished. This made in all eighteen dead victims of the holocaust, including those who died from suffocation. Those burned were of course unrecognizable, and their blackened remains presented a sickening sight as the firemen dragged them out and gave them in charge to the sisters, the clergy, and the brethren from St. John's college. These, in turn, conveyed the remains to the basement of the institution, and there wrapped them up in sheets and blankets to await the arrival of the coroner.

Post-Traderships—Fat Jobs.

The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, says a Washington correspondent, has never made a report to the House before, and a Cabinet officer was never before impeached. This Committee has only just begun its work. It is now the purpose of the Chairman to summon all post-traders and to investigate in detail the circumstances of their appointment. The bureau offices of the War Department are also to be examined, as it is stated that some of them have pecuniary interests in these traderships. The Committee already claim to have information about several of these appointments. It is stated that the trader at Camp Supply paid $10,000 annually for his post. The tax at Fort Sill amounted to $40 per selling day, which was nearly all paid by command. The income of Marsh was $40,000 annually, which was extorted from the soldiers and officers at the fort. The prices charged were downright robbery. An ex-army officer, who has spent a great many years on the frontier, and who has long been familiar with the profits arising from these traderships, furnishes the following statement as to the number and profits of these posts.

The capital necessary for a trader to start a single post is $15,000. A five-company post of infantry or cavalry is called a single post. The annual profits to the trader of a five-company cavalry post are about $30,000, with additional profits derived from contracts for forage. The profits at a single post from the sale of goods alone amount to $40,000. These posts, as they are managed by post-traders, yield from regular sales fully $15,000. The three best posts are Fort Laramie, with from six to ten companies; Fort Sill, with ten companies; Fort Buford, with from seven to ten companies. These yield from 50 to 100 per cent. profit. The other posts are Fort Russell, Fort Richardson, eight companies; Fort Sully, six companies; Fort Union, ten companies.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, March 21, 1876.

I took a seat in a street chariot the other evening to go down to dinner, and as I done so, a young lady came in and sat down just opposite. She wore a beautiful white hat, a $200 silk dress, and her dark eyes shone out through her dotted veil like stars. As it happened I was nearest the box in which the fare is deposited, and my fair companion handed me her ticket to be so deposited. This is often done as a matter of convenience, to prevent passing to and fro in the car. As I did so she said "thank you." The words caught my ear by the peculiar tone in which they were uttered. Taking the advantage of the silence that is usually preserved in these places, and of her indifferance to external objects. I brought to mind my limited knowledge of physiognomy, and applied it to the case before me. I had scarcely got seated in my meditations, asking myself who she was, whether she was alone in this heartless city, and a hundred other questions, when her eye caught my gaze before I could avert it. She struggled for a moment to appear at ease, and then turned toward the window. By this time we were the only occupants of the chariot. She soon observed this, and with an effort asked me the name of the street down which we were then going. On being told it was "K," she asked for the nearest point to "H" street, stating that she wanted to find the Hon. ——. A suspicion flashed across my mind, and I told her it would be impossible to find the house, without first learning the number. She seemed to be greatly distressed at this and said she was very anxious to see the gentleman. She looked sad and dispirited and I expected to see her burst into tears every moment. There was an air of mystery about her and I became so curious that I asked her from whence she came. "From the West. I am here by no fault of mine, I have been promised a position in one of the departments, and came here six weeks ago. I have been staying at a private boarding house, and now have but little money left. The person who promised me a place has failed to secure it, and I want to find Mr. ——, to borrow money to get home."

The above is her story, boiled down in a few words, and I have no doubt it is a truthful one. Taking a small directory from my pocket I hunted up the name of the Congressman, and gave her the number of his residence. She thanked me, and stepped from the chariot as the driver called out "Fifteenth street," and I saw her no more.

But will her story end here. Will she get the money and go home, or will she be seen again dressed in gaudy colors, flashing along the streets, until down in the holds of vice she ends her life. She had beauty, and beauty is purchasable, and there is money here to be expended for that purpose. If she comes in contact with it, one more unfortunate will be added to the score. But I hope she will reach a genial western home, wiser in the things of this world, and happier in the possession of that which is brighter, more valuable to her than gold. There is not one in ten who can pass through such a trial, and escape degradation, and few should peril themselves in the chances.

Washington is different in more than one way from other cities. One of its greatest features is the practice of hawking things about by pedestrians. Morning, noon and night you can hear queer yells, and strange gibberage from these "hawkers." When the voice is not used, instruments of noise are brought to bear upon afflicted humanity.

The other morning I stood on the terrace of the Capitol and heard half a dozen bugles, sounding from as many directions, and it called up for a moment the lively scenes of the war. I thought a cavalry charge was to be made upon the Capitol. Presently a stout colored man hove in sight, and in his hand he carried a tin bucket, while his voluptuous lips encircled the small end of a bugle. He had milk for sale, and he was zealous in his tramp from street to street in the sale of the lacteal fluid.

Here comes another, who is perpetrating a yell that would do credit to a Comanche. He is perched on a one horse wagon, and has a quantity of coal which he will deal out by the peck or half bushel. Still a third is seen struggling with a hand bell which keeps up a series of gyrations through the city. He also carries a basket and will supply you with butter, or what they call butter here, and eggs. And in this way most every article of produce is peddled around, to the convenience sometimes of purchasers, and discomfort of late sleepers. A great big burly fellow passes my room every morning, issuing forth his infernal yell about coal. He's one of those early birds, about six o'clock in the morning, just when sleep is the sweetest. I have borrowed a revolver for his special benefit.

POLITICAL.

One of our Indiana men, formerly a member of Congress, is under arrest. Kilbourn, chief of the District real estate ring, who refused to testify against the members of his little combination, has been consigned to jail by a resolution of the House of Representatives. Kilbourn has a good deal of nerve and a large amount of the honor which is said to exist among a certain class, and as the House has no power to imprison him for a long period, will probably prefer comfortable quarters in prison to peaching on his powerful "pals." It is thus that investigations are stifled, and the corrupt are allowed to escape.

The political auction in New Hampshire came off according to announcement, and the party with the most money was the successful competitor, as was to be expected. They are a thrifty set in the Granite State, and as they carry on their elections always on a cash basis, many an honest yeoman doubtless went home rejoicing last night, with some of Uncle Sam's crisp greenbacks in his pocket. Apart from this they are also a steady going set, not easily shaken from their convictions, and being firmly convinced that the rebellion must be put down they will probably continue to vote for a vigorous prosecution of the war for the remainder of the century. In about seven years from now the news about Belknap and Babcock and Robeson and the rest will reach New Hampshire, and if by that time any Democratic leaders should arise in the State who are not phenomenal fools, it is possible that they may get up an interesting election. Meanwhile an election in New Hampshire is about as important as a battle among ghosts, though the organs will play their sweetest tunes and there will be rejoicing in every custom house in the land in response to this "first gun."

My friend, Mr. Baker, introduced a resolution in the House the other day. Mr. Cox substituted the following:

RESOLVED, That the people of the United States constitute a nation in the sense, to the extent, and for the purposes defined in the Federal Constitution.

RESOLVED, That the Government of the United States is a Federal Union, and was formed by the people of the several States in their sovereign capacity; that the rights and powers of the United States Government are defined and limited by the Federal Constitution, and these tights and powers cannot be enlarged or diminished except by an amendment to the Constitution.

RESOLVED, That the rights of the States have the same sanction and security in the Constitution as the rights and powers of the Federal Government, and that local domestic government by the several States within the limits of the Constitution is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the liberties of the citizen and the continuance of our republican system of Government.

RESOLVED, That the doctrine that a State has a right to secede from the Union is in conflict with the idea of a "perpetual union" as contemplated by the Constitution and should be regarded as being forever extinguished by the results of the recent civil conflict.

When the yeas and nays were called, Mr. Baker voted against it. This is the first time I have known Mr. Holman and him to vote on opposite sides. I began to congratulate myself that Baker was all right, but I fear he has gone too far on the other side. I am a War Democrat, and had no sympathy for secession. The only way I can account for it is that Mr. B. sits between two Democrats, though why he went so far as to not vote for such good Union resolutions as the above, I can't for the life of me, understand.

The question is asked: "What have the Republicans done?" Well, they helped put down the war of rebellion and save the Union, and then turned round and made a more deadly assault upon the government than ever the confederate squadrons in the field did. They have debauched the civil service, stolen hundreds of millions of dollars from the public treasury, ruined trade, paralyzed industry, created a mountain of national indebtedness, defiled the bench, prostituted the Senate, and lowered everywhere the standard of public and private morals. They have introduced an era of bribery, fraud, rascality and corruption to which no parallel can be found, except in the declining days of the Roman empire, or in the reigns of the French Louis. Its crimes cry trumpet-tongued to heaven against its continuance in power.

THE WAY WE GROW OLD.

A broken toy; a task that held away
A yearning child-heart from an hour of play;
A Christmas that no Christmas idols brought;
A tangled lesson, full of tangled thought;
A homesick boy; a senior gowned and wise;
A glimpse of life, when lo! the curtains rise
Fold over fold,
And hangs the picture, like a boundless sea—
The world, all action and reality—
So we grow old.

A wedding, and a tender wife's caress;
A prattling babe the parent's life to bless;
A home of joys and cares in equal part;
A dreary watching with a heavy heart;
And death's dread angel knocking at the gate,
And hope and courage bidding sorrow wait
Or lose her hold:
A new made grave, and then a brave return
To where the fires of life triumphant burn—
So we grow old.

A fortune and a generous meed of fame,
Or direful ruin and a tarnished name,
A slipping off of week and month and year,
Faster and faster as the close draws near;
A grief of day, and with to-morrow's light,
A pleasure that transforms the sullen night
From lead to gold;
A chilling winter of unchanging storm;
A spring replete with dawns and sunsets warm—
So we grow old.

Old to ourselves, but children yet to be
In the strange cities of eternity.

A DAY IN PETTICOATS.

"I couldn't think of such a thing."

"But you must. My happiness depends on it. Here, put on the thingumbobs, the what's his name."

And my friend Bob Styles held up before my hesitant gaze a suit of female apparel.

His idea was that I should personate his lady-love for one day to prevent anybody from suspecting the truth—namely, that she had joined him in a runaway marriage party—until it should be too late for interference; that is, until the minister should have tied a knot between them. that nothing but a special grant of the Legislature could untie.

This scheme was not actually so absurd as it appeared at first sight. Maggie Lee was a tall, queenly woman, with an almost masculine air, and at that time I had a very slight form—almost effeminate, so that in fact there was really but little difference in that point. Then I had light hair, tolerably long, and a fresh complexion. Part my hair in the middle, put a bonnet on my head, and few persons would have suspected but I was really one of the softer sex. These accessories also gave me quite a decided resemblance to Maggie Lee, especially when, as in this case, the disguise was her own.

Then the day chosen for the runaway match was an auspicious one. Maggie's father was to drive her to D——, a small village near where she lived, and there she was to join a sailing party down D—— river, to the grove three miles below, from which the party was to return in the evening in the carriage.

Our plan was that I should be in waiting in the village, and should go on the boat with the sailing party, while Maggie, after leaving her father, should slip off with Bob across the country.

At last I got dressed, and presented myself before Maggie Lee, blushing a great deal, I believe, feeling very much pinched about the waist, and with an uncomfortable consciousness that my shirt sleeves were too short, or wanting altogether.

Everything finished in the way of toilet, Bob Styles took me into his light wagon, drove me over to D—— by a secluded route and left me at the hotel, where the sailing party was to assemble. Several of the picknickers were already there, and they greeted my cavalier cordially (everybody knew Bob Styles), asking if he was going with them, etc. He told them he was not.

"Pressing business engagement, you know, and all that sort of thing. Duced sorry I can't go though. I just had time to bring Miss Lee over, and now I'm off. Mr. Bimby, this is Miss Lee, Miss Withergall, Miss Lee, "and he rattled off a string of brief introductions, which convinced me that few of the company were acquainted with the young lady whom I was personating—a very fortunate thing for the preservation of my disguise.

Mr. Bimby, a tall, legal-looking man, with a hook nose, and eye-glass and finny hair, seemed to be prepossessed with my personelle, and I overheard him whisper to Bob Styles. as he went out:

"Nice looking girl, that Miss Lee."

"Yes," answered Bob, with a mischievous glance at me, "she is a nice girl, though a little go ahead sometimes. Keep a little lookout on her, will you?"—then lowering his voice—"not a bad match for you, old fellow; she is rich."

"Is she?" said Mr. Bimby, his interest deepenig.

"On my honor," replied Bob. "Forty thousand dollars in her own right. Good day!" and he was gone.

Maggie Lee, artful creature that she was, had told her father that the sailing party was to assemble at another hotel, and thither he had taken her. Having business in D——, he left her there, merely saying that he would send a carriage for her at 11 o'clock. She, like a dutiful daughter, kissed him good-bye, and before he had gone a hundred rods, took a seat in Bob Styles' light wagon, which had driven up to the back door as old Lee's carriage drove away from the front, and the old story of headstrong love and prejudiced age was enacted over again.

As for us, of the picnic excursion, we had a delightful sail to the grove, but somehow I could not enjoy it as much as I ought to have done. When I walked on board of the boat, I felt awkward, as if everybody was looking at me. I found Mr. Bimby, as I had suspected, a young and rising lawyer, mighty in Blackstone and his own opinion. He insisted on paying for my ticket (the boat was a regular excursion packet) and purchasing enough oranges, pears and candies to set up a street stand. Four or five times I was on the point of swearing at his impudent officiousness, but bit my tongue just in time to prevent the exposure. But it was not with him that I found my part the hardest to play.

No, the young ladies were the difficult ones to deceive. For instance, there was one among them, a beautiful girl of seventeen, just returned from boarding school, who had not seen Maggie Lee for three years. Of course she was delighted to see me, when she found out that I was Maggie, which, by the way, did not occur until after we had started. She threw herself into my arms, pulled my veil aside, and kissed me half a dozen times in a manner that made my fingers tingle for an hour. It was very nice, but if I had been in propria persona I would have liked it better. As it was, I felt as if I were obtaining goods under false pretenses, and that Lawyer Bimby might issue a warrant for my arrest on that ground at any moment.

A whole knot of crinoline then surrounded me on the upper deck of the boat, to the utter exclusion and consequent disgust of Mr. Bimby and the other gentleman. I kept very quiet, only speaking monosyllables in a falsetto voice; but the others—Lord bless you! how they gabbled! Under a strict promise of secrecy the little boarding school maiden, who had kissed me so affectionately, revealed all her love affairs, and also became unpleasantly confidential about other matters, innocent enough in themselves, but not customarily talked of between ladies and gentlemen.

I was terribly embarrassed, but it would not do to give up then. As soon as my trick should become known, Bob Styles' trick would also come out, and, as news of that kind travels fast in the country, he and his lady love would be telegraphed and followed before they could reach Philadelphia, where the knot was to be tied.

The river breeze was very fresh where we sat, and I noticed that several of the ladies were glancing uneasily at me. I couldn't divine the reason, until Jennie, my little friend from boarding school, laid her face dangerously close to mine and whispered: "My dear Maggie, your dress is blowing dreadful high—your ankles will be town talk with the gentlemen!"

Now I was conscious of having a very small foot for a man, and had donned a pair of open worked stockings, which came nearly up to my waist; with a pair of gaiters borrowed from the servant girl, in all of which toggery my running gear looked quite feminine and respectable; but the idea of the gentlemen talking about my ankles, and of being cautioned thus by a young girl, who would have been frightened to death if I had told her the same thing yesterday, was too much for me. I burst into a sort of strangulated laugh, which I could only check by swallowing half of my little filigree lace-edged handkerchief. The young ladies all looked at me, in apparent astonishment at such a voice, and I wanted to laugh all the more. Fortunately Mr. Bimby came to my rescue at the moment and edged himself in among the crinoline.

"May I sit here?" he asked, pointing to a low stool near me.

"Certainly," I simpered, in my high falsetto.

"Ah, thank you," said Bimby, with a lackadaisical air which nauseated me, as coming from one man to another; "you are as kind as you are fascinating!"

"You flatter me!"

"I? No, indeed; praise of you cannot be flattery, Miss Lee."

"Oh, sir, really you are a naughty man," I said, in the most feminine tone I could command.

He cast a languishing glance at me through the black lace veil, and I fairly began to fear for his feelings.

We soon arrived at the grove, and found our band engaged beforehand—awaiting us. Of course dancing was the first amusement, and lawyer Bimby led me out for a schottische. It was hard, at first, for me to take the lady's part in my dance, but I soon got accustomed to it. When a waltz was proposed, I resolved to have a little amusement at the expense of the unfortunate Bimby.

I first made him purposely jealous, by dancing with two other young fellows, one of whom I knew, in my own character, but who suspected me as Maggie Lee. This young man, who was a great woman-killer, a sort of devil-may-care rascal, who made the ladies run after him, by his alternate wrath of action and coolness of protestation, I selected to play off against my legal admirer. I allowed him to hold me very closely and occasionally looked at him with a half fascinating expression. When we stopped dancing he led me to my seat, keeping his arm about my waist, and I permitted it. Having thus stirred Bimby up to feats of wrathful valor, I asked one of the gentlemen to direct the musicians to play a waltz. Bimby came immediately.

"Ahem—a—Miss Lee, shall I—a, have the honor of—a—trying a waltz with you?"

I smiled acquiescence, and we commenced. Now I am an old stager at waltzing. I can keep up longer than any non-professional dancer, male or female, whom I ever met. As long as the Cachucha or Schonnebrunnen ring in my ears, I can go on if it is not for a year. Not so Bimby. He plead want of practice, and acknowledged that he soon got dizzy.

"Aha, old boy," thought I, "I'll give you a turn, then!"

But I only smiled, and said that I should probably get tired first.

"Oh yes," he exclaimed, "of course, I can waltz as long as any one lady, but not much more."

For the first three minutes my cavalier did well. He went smoothly and evenly, but at the expiration of that time began to grow warm. Five minutes elapsed, and Bimby's breath came harder and harder. On we went, however, and I scorned to notice his slackening up at every round, when we passed my seat. After some twenty minutes, the wretched man gasped out between his steps:

"Ah, a-are you not get-getting tired, Miss Lee?"

"Oh, no!" I burst forth; "Oh, no, I feel as if I could waltz all night."

The look of despair that he gave me was terrible.

I was bound to see him through, however, and we kept at it. Bimby staggered, and made wild steps in all directions. His shirt collar wilted, his eyes protruded, his jaw hung, and altogether I saw he could not hold on much longer.

"This is delightful," I said, composedly," and you, Mr. Bimby, waltz so easily!"

"Puff—puff—puff—ah puff—yes—oh puff—delightful," gasped he.

"Don't you think it ought to go faster?"

His eyes rolled heavenward in an awful agony.

"Ah—puff—I—puff—don't—puff—I don't know."

When we neared the musicians, I said "Faster, if you please," and they played a la whirlwind.

Poor Bimby threw his feet about like a fast pacer, and revolved after the manner of a teetotum which was nearly run down. At last he staggered a step backward, and spinning away from me, pitched headlong into the midst of a small bevy of ladies in the corner.

I turned around and walked to my seat, and sent the young woman-killer for a glass of water.

The miserable lawyer recovered in time to see me thank his rival for the water.

I got some idea from this of the fun the ladies find in tormenting us poor limbs of the other sex.

At this juncture, and before Bimby had time to apologize for his accident, Jennie came running into the pavilion which served as a ball room. As she came near I perceived that her hand were clutched tightly in her dress, and I positively shuddered as she whispered to me:

"Oh, Maggie! come and help me fix my skirts—they are all coming down!"

What should I do? I was in agony. A cold perspiration broke out upon my forehead. I wished myself a thousand miles away, and anathematized Bob Styles' masquerading project inwardly with fearful maledictions.

I said I was tired out—could not somebody else go?

No, nothing would do, but I must accompany her to the house of a gentleman who owned the grove, and assist her to arrange her clothing. So I went.

What if it should be necessary to remove part of the raiment? What if she should tell me to do some sewing? What, if in the midst of all the embarrassment of being closeted with a beautiful girl of seventeen in a state of comparative freedom from drapery, my real sex and identity should be discovered by her!

However, I nerved myself up for the task, and went with Jennie to the house designated. An old lady showed us into her chamber, and Jennie let go her dress. As she did so, a—pardon my blushes—petticoat fell to the floor. She was about to proceed when I alarmed her by a sudden and vehement gesture.

"Stop!" I cried, frantically, and forgetting my falsetto; "stop! don't undress, for God's sake!"

"And why not?"

"Because I am a—can you keep a secret?"

"Why, yes—how frightened you do look! Why, what is the matter, Maggie—you—why—oh—oh! oh! oh!!!"

And she gave three fearful screams.

"Hush, no noise, or I am lost," I exclaimed, putting my hand over her mouth. "I swear I mean no harm; if I had I would not have stopped you; don't you see?"

She was all of a tremble, poor little thing; but she saw the force of my argument.

"Oh, sir," she said, "I see you are a man; but what does it all mean? Why did you dress so?"

I told her the story as brief as possible, and exacted from her a promise of the most secret secrecy.

I then went outside of the door, and waited till she had arranged her dress, when she called me in again. She had heard of me from Maggie and others and wanted to hear all the particulars; so I sat down by her, and had a long talk which ended in a mutual feeling of friendship, and old acquaintanceship, quite wonderful for people meeting for the first time. Just as we started back to the pavilion I said I must relieve my mind of one burden.

"And what is that?" she asked.

"Those kisses. You thought I was Maggie Lee or you would not have given them. They were very sweet, but I suppose I must give them back."

And I did.

She blushed a good deal but didn't resist, only when I got through she glanced up timidly and said:

"I think you are real naughty, anyhow."

When I returned I found lawyer Bimby had quite recovered from his dizziness, and all hands ready for supper, which was served in the ball-room. I sat between Bimby and Jennie, and made love to both of them in turn; to one as Maggie Lee, and to the other as myself. After supper, at which I astonished several by eating rather more heartily than young ladies generally do, we had more dancing and I hinted pretty strongly to Mr. Bimby that I should like to try another waltz.

Finding it rather dry amusement to dance with my own kind, I soon abandoned that pleasure, and persuaded Jennie to stroll off into the moonlight with me. We found the grove a charming place, full of picturesque little corners, and rustic seats, and great gray rocks leaning out over the river. On one of these latter a little bench was placed, in a nook sheltered from the wind, and from sight.

Here we sat in the full flood of the moonlight, and having just had dinner, I felt wonderfully in need of a cigar. Accordingly, I went to a little stand near the ball-room, and purchased several of the wondering women who sold refreshments. Then returning to the seats by the rocks, I gave up all fears for my incognito, and reveled in the pleasure of solitude, the fragrance of my cigar, the moonlight and little Jennie's presence.

How long we sat there heaven only knows. We talked and laughed, and sang, and looked in each other's eyes, and told fortunes, and performed all the nonsensical operations common amongst young people just falling in love, and might have remained there until the month of August, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and eighty-one, for aught I know, had not the carriages been sent to convey us home, and the rest of the company began to wonder where we were.

This wonder begot questions, the questions fears, and the fears a search headed by the valiant Bimby. They called and looked and listened, but our position down in the sheltered nook among the rocks prevented them from hearing us, or we them.

At length they hit upon our path, and all came along single file, until they got to the open space above.

Then they saw a sight.

I was spread out in a free and easy position, my bonnet off, and my hair somewhat towzled up. One foot rested on the ground and the other on a rock, about level with my head (regardless of my ankles this time), and there I sat, puffing away in a very unlady-like style, at a highly flavored Concha.

Jennie was sitting close beside me with her head almost on my shoulder, and her waist almost encircled by my arm. Just as the party came along above us, I laughed out in a loud masculine voice.

"Just think of poor what's-his-name there—Bimby. Suppose he knew that he had been making love to a man?"

"Hush!" cried Jennie, "Look! there he is—and, oh, my gracious! there is the whole company!"

Yes, we were fairly caught. It was of no use for me to clap on my bonnet, and assume falsetto again—they had all seen too much for that. Besides, by this time, Bob Styles and Maggie Lee were doubtless one flesh and my disguise was of no further importance, so I owned up and told the story.

Bimby was in a rage. He vowed to kill me, and even squared off, but the rest of the party laughed at him so unmercifully and suggested that he should waltz it out, that he finally cooled down and slunk away, to take some private conveyance back to D——.

Bob Styles and I are living in a large double house together. He often says that he owes his wife to my masquerading, but he don't feel under any obligation to me, for I owe my wife to the same thing.

N. B.—My wife's name is Jennie.

Sing, O Sing!

Be cheerful. Snap your fingers at the decrees of fate. If the sun goes under a cloud, and you feel that the shadows are creeping about your threshold, turn on the gas. Let there be light. If suspense weighs down upon you, and a feeling of oppression commences to envelop, throw up the sash and pull off your coat; whistle something that is gay, and if a creditor comes in ask him to sit down. If any one is to be worried over the event, let it be him. Why not? He ran the risk in trusting you; he took the chances of his volition. You obtained whatever it was you asked for; you enjoyed it when he didn't. Why should you weep over it because you are unable to repay? Let him do the swearing, and when he gets to fuming talk to him cheerfully, and act so that when he shall leave you he will not think you a hard-hearted man. That's the way the Englishman did. He owed debts, debts, debts. He had assets, 0, 0, 0. His creditors came in. He seated them, and in a philosophical but cheerful way he gave them the history of his predicament, and then in a sang froid way he assured them that there wasn't even the shadow of a ghost of a show of a dividend. He said it in such a way that they couldn't be persuaded to doubt his word. Still, one of them said he might do something. He shrugged his shoulders and asked them to suggest. He was a fine singer. They said to him in an ironical way, "You can give us a song." He went to the grand piano. He ran his finger playfully over the ivory keys, and throwing his head back he commenced to sing. He sang a charming ballad, "Then You'll Remember Me"—sang it so sweetly that the echoes seemed to nestle in the folds of the damask curtain as if they could not go away—so softly that Shylock's heart would have softened had it been there. How appropriate! Remember him! Yes; how could they forget him? They might have suggested to him that other ballad, "How Can I Leave Thee?" but, then, what was to be gained by staying? But they could remember him. The Englishman felt better. He felt that they would do as he requested, if he couldn't do as they had requested. Happy thought for him; he could book, though they couldn't, for they had as much booked against him then as they wanted. Give your creditors a song. There is a ripple in melody which sounds like the tinkling of silver. It's that joy which, though it comes from the world the world cannot take away. Blessed be the cadence of song, the lullaby of heaven, the poetry of the heart, the broken sheaf of sunshine where the birds nestle and plume their wings. Sing! oh Sing!—Omaha Herald.

The Minnesota Centennial Commission Disbands.

The Centennial State Board of Commissioners who were to see that Minnesota was properly represented at Philadelphia have closed their career. They overrated the liberality of the State and had laid the ground work for a very fair display of our products at the great exposition, and had leased a room where the accumulations could be stored and packed previous to their shipment, but the Legislature having failed to make any appropriations, the house was closed yesterday, and its sign taken in, the members of the board being only too glad that they have escaped the necessity of footing the bills out of their own pockets for rent, grain sacks, and other articles which are held as the assets of the thoroughly collapsed and painfully demoralized enterprise.—St. Paul Dispatch.

Supplying England with Food.

England depends largely on America for her living. Besides wheat and corn, great quantities of vegetables, butter and fruit are yearly sent away. We sometimes ship $7,000,000 worth of cheese and lard to England in a single year. New articles of produce are continually added to the list. Fresh peaches were tried last summer. The first attempt proved a failure, but the second did better, assuring final success. Now fresh beef is exported with satisfactory results. Three vessels of one line have been supplied with refrigerators, and the meat is found to suffer no deterioration on the voyage. Thus, a new market will be opened for our cattle trade, and the English people will be supplied at cheaper rates with the substantial food of life.

The Native City of Apostle Paul Devastated by Flames.

Tarsus, the city of St. Paul, was, on the night of the 20th of January, the scene of a great fire, which reduced the bazar to ruins, and effected damage to the estimated extent of £150,000. For a city which under the Romans was as renowned for its culture as for its commerce, the existing fire-brigade arrangements seem hardly to be up to the mark. The fire broke out in a closed shop, the proprietor of which had been absent some days. The shop contained a quantity of lucifer matches, and also a number of rats; the latter, it is supposed, took to gnawing the former, and hence the conflagration.

Unfortunately Tarsus, although it contains about 20,000 inhabitants, is at this season of the year without any supply of water. There was an old fountain in the middle of the bazar, but it had been dry for some time, and, as there was a strong breeze blowing, the fire spread rapidly without any effort being made to extinguish it. After some little time the Governor appeared on the scene, accompanied by the police force and one small fire engine. With praiseworthy energy he at once dispatched two horses to bring some water, and, two loads of this article having having been obtained, the small engine was set to work. The Governor, however, suddenly took it into his head that his first duty was to protect a powder magazine, situated in an isolated spot at some distance from the town, and he therefore hurried off to the magazine, taking the police with him.

With no water, no Governor, and no police, of course the fire was master of the situation; and so were the thieves who abound in Tarsus, and who reaped a rich harvest by carrying off the goods which were dragged out of the shops for safety as the fire extended. The town was, in fact, given over to pillage, and but for a sudden change in the wind the larger portion of it would no doubt have been destroyed. By pulling down some wooden sunshades the progress of the flames was at last arrested, and, happily, no lives were lost, but one man in his fright threw himself into a well and met what ought to hav been a watery grave.—Pall Mall Gazett

The Queen's Horses.

"John Paul" has been into the royal stables in London. Besides horses for her own use, the Queen has to keep a mount for equerrys, exons and other exigencies, so she has 160 in all. Most are of the Hanoverian breed, from stock introduced by one of the Georges. But there are some finer strains of blood to be seen—lithe-limb beauties, with arching necks and quivering nostrils—showing at least an admixtuse of Arabian. The favorite horse color is bay, with black legs. On state occasions lamp-black and oil are used to bring legs that fall short of the standard shade up to a proper tone, so the groom said. In one of the stables the horses on one side were white as milk; on the other coal black. Here we saw the eight cream-colored steeds which were to draw her Majesty to Parliament on opening day; the harnesses—also imported by the Georges—red leather, the trimmings gold-plated on copper. The immense state carriage, a legacy of the same reign, was not to go out; the Queen has not driven in it since the royal consort died. And little wonder. Cinderella's pumpkin looked like a coach; this coach looked like a pumpkin. As a circus wagon it would be a success, and will some day be sold for one. Yet the original cost—as the groom's story goes—was £8,000.

A Great Pumping Engine.

A late number of the Scientific American has illustrations of a remarkable steam pumping machinery, lately completed at Hammersmith, Eng., for the drainage of the Ferrara Marshes, Northern Italy. The tract to be drained covers an area of 200 miles. The machinery is calculated to discharge 456,008 gallons of water per minute, or 656,640,000 gallons per day, being about six times the capacity of the Croton Aqueduct, which is able to deliver 110,000,000 of gallons per day. The water delivered by these remarkable pumps forms a stream 103 feet wide and four feet deep, having a speed of two miles an hour. One day's delivery would fill a reservoir one mile square to a depth of three feet nine inches. In view of the completion and successful operation of gigantic and economical machinery like this, the drainage of the Zuyder Zee, in Holland, which is about to be commenced, is rendered a comparatively easy task. The Zuyder Zee area to be drained is 759 square miles. Models of this machinery are to be exhibited in the British department of the Centennial exhibition.

Smoke as Protection Against Frost.

The production of artificial clouds of smoke is a common appliance against frost in France and Germany. Mons. Vinard has recommended a plan which is perfectly successful, and which consists in carefully mixing gas tar with sawdust and old straw, and piling up this mixture in large heaps in the vineyards. The mixture remains inflammable more than a fortnight, in spite of rain and weather. When required for use smaller heaps are made from the larger ones, about two feet in diameter, and distributed in and around the vineyard. If there is little wind, these heaps burn freely for about three and a half hours, and produce a very dense smoke. The artifical cloud which thus enwraps the vines considerably decreases the radiation from the ground, and thus prevents frost, which is greatest toward morning in calm spring nights.

The First Cabinet Scandal.

Edmund Randolph, Washington's first Attorney-general and afterward Jefferson's successor in the State Department, a poor man, fell into money embarrassments, and the French Minister, Mr. Fauchet, wrote home that he had personal reasons for believing Randolph was corruptible; the Secretary of State had signified to him his readiness to be bribed. The letter miscarried, was printed at London, and Randolph retired protesting his innocence. That was the only cabinet scandal of the money sort until the Floyd-Thompson episode in Buchanan's time.—Springfield Republican.

MY SONG.

BY FREDERICK LOCKER.

You ask a song,
Such as of yore, an autumn's eventide,
Some blest boy-poet carol'd—and then died.
Nay, I have sung too long.

Say, shall I sing
A sigh to beauty at her window-pane?
I sang there once; might I not once again?
Or tell me whom to sing.

The peer of peers?
Lord of the wealth that gives his time employ—
Time to possess, but hardly to enjoy—
He cannot need my tears.

The man of mind,
Or priest, who darkens what is clear as day?
I cannot sing them, yet I will not say
Such guides are wholly blind.

The orator?
He quiet lies where yon fresh hillock heaves;
'Twere well to sprinkle there those laurel leaves
He won—but never wore.

Or shall I praise
A cypress? Wreath of glory and of gloom—
To march a gallant soldier to his doom—
Needs fuller voice than mine.

No lay have I,
No murmured measure meet for your delight,
No song of love and death to make you quite
Forget that we must die.

Something is wrong—
The world is overwise; or, more's the pity,
These days are far too busy for a ditty,
Yet take it—take my song.

Pith and Point.

CAN ladies with enameled faces be said to belong to polished society?

A LEADING maxim with almost every politician is always to keep his countenance, and never keep his word.

A PERSIAN proverb says: "There are only two days for which to feel anxious. One is the day that is past, the other is the day to come."

WHEN you see a fellow-mortal slip into a stairway and rub his back against the old tacks driven into bill-boards, that means buck-wheat. It's working out on him.

A DOCTOR attending a punster who was very ill apologized for being late one day by saying that he had to stop to see a man who had fallen down a well. "Did he kick the bucket, doctor?" groaned the punster.

A LONDON paper says that "the Spanish General, Moriones, rested his army for a few moments when on the point of attack." The point of a tack isn't generally considered a good place to rest, even for that brief period.

"DO YOU trust anybody nowadays?" asked a beautiful young lady of a jeweler, as she toyed with the diamonds in a case before her. "No, ma'am," said the jeweler, "I don't trust anybody with anything; in a lady's case, I shouldn't dare to trust my feelings."

THERE is a female fiercer yet,
And wusser nor a hornlet;
A female that don't come down as still
As snowflakes falling on the sod,
To execute her own free will,
As lightning does the will of God,
But crashes down with iron jaw;
This female is our mother-in-law.

A DANBURY man has exhibited a prudence which is remarkable. Before making an engagement with a young lady, whose steady company he was keeping, he carefully examined her head, and finding an unusually large deposit of dandruff, has left her. The lady thinks it is dandruff, and we have no doubt she is right.—Danbury News.

THE Harvard Lampoon aims this shaft: Oxford—"I say, where's Harvard?" Cambridge—"O—ah—somewhere in the States I believe." Oxford—"Where's Yale?" Cambridge—"There you have me, old boy—don't know. Why?" Oxford—"They want us to row at a place called Centennial, next summer." Cambridge—"O, indeed Ha, ha!"

YESTERDAY was an excellent day for sudden sit-downs. A giant citizen, slowly propelling himself up Michigan avenue, went down on the flagstones with a jar and a groan which were heard across the street. As he got up, a kind-hearted citizen halted and asked: "Did it hurt you much?" "Not a great deal," replied the embarrassed and infuriated victim, "but if I can get the least shadow of an excuse to pound some one to death I'll do it!"—Detroit Free Press.

TWO SIGNS that spring is at hand were noticed yesterday by an observing citizen. He saw a blue-bird in Cass Park. It was a fine, healthy bird, and as its songs of joy floated heavenward the citizen clasped his hands and meekly said: "I wish I were a better man." One block further down he saw a hall carpet on a clothes-line. A woman and a club were making that article of commerce get up and dust, and the woman's face wore a happy smile as she looked up at the clouds and planned to have all the carpets up by Saturday night. As the citizen read her thoughts he clasped his hands and remarked: "I wish I had been hanged in Texas!"—Detroit Free Press.

Making Short Work of It.

In the town of Hopkinson, Mass., lived a certain Deacon Small. In his advanced age he had the misfortune to lose the rib of his youth. After doing penance by wearing a weed on his hat a full year, he was recommended to a certain Widow Hooper, living in an adjoining town. The deacon was soon astride of his old brown mare, and on arriving at the widow's door he discovered her in the act of turning the suds from her wash-tubs. Said the deacon:

"Is this Widow Hooper?"

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"Well," continued the deacon, "I am that little bit of an old dried-up Deacon Small, and have one question to propose to you."

"Please propose, sir."

"Well, madam," said the deacon, "have you any objection to going to Heaven by way of Hopkinton?"

"None at all, deacon," was the reply. "Come in, deacon."

Suffice it to say they were married the next day.

Women Murdered in New York.

During the past five years forty-two women have been murdered by men in New York City. Not one of the murderers has been hanged, and only six were sentenced to imprisonment for life; twelve were given sentences of seven years and under in the State Prison, two were sent to the Penetentiary for ten and thirteen years, respectively, and two received sentence, one for nine and one for thirteen months. Seven of the wife murderers committed suicide; the rest escaped punishment.

FOR THE LADIES.

The New Reign of Calico Dresses.

[From the New York Sun.]

It will, we know, be a subject for congratulation to all ladies to learn that "calico dresses" are again in fashion. That calico is no longer kept within doors, in the form of morning wrappers and chamber robes, but brought out in styles that simulate foulards; it is going, as soon as the weather is a little warmer, to be seen on the streets, made up in pretty composite costumes that can scarcely be distinguished from summer silks. The figures and colors of these calicoes are ingeniously made to favor this simulation. They have solid grounds of dark or pale blue, purple, grey, brown, and full glossy black, on which are bars, checks, plaids, stripes, or more dashes of color or of white. Some of the stripes are jardiniere; that is, flowered. A few have bouquets of flowers or sprigs; comparatively few are sprinkled with leaves and single flowers on the solid ground.

These prints are of all kinds, American, English, and French manufacture. French percales and cambrics and lawns are also brought out in the same style, and intended likewise to be worn on the street, or on the promenade at watering places and summer resorts. There are two styles of make-up for these calico dresses, equally popular and pretty. The first is the princess polonaise, worn over a skirt moderately flounced or ruffled. The polonaise is very long, buttoning up all the way from the bottom to the throat. It fits tight to the figure, and is draped in the "pull-back" style in which we are sorry to say all draperies are arranged. The back of the corsage is in the Marguerite style, with a point fitting over a broad box pleated bouffant, which is looped gracefully over one of those deformities, a long bustle. These are universally worn, and with the present style of draping the skirts make a woman look like what Punch styles "a Venus de Medici before and a Venus de Hottentot behind." The trimmings of these calico costumes are of the same material of a different figure, as, for instance, stripes are used to trim figured goods, and plaids for striped, or vice versa. The sleeves, generally of a different kind of calico from the basque or corsage, are coat-shaped, and trimmed with several overlapping ruffles at the wrist, falling toward the hand, or with deep gauntlets of the trimming material. The other popular style of making print suits is with a deep round overskirt, draped back, and a basque with a Continental waistcoat. Sleeves with gauntlet cuffs, and one deep pocket, placed low down on the left side of the skirt.

Minor Fashion Notes.

None of the imported dresses are made to be worn with bustles.

The coat sleeves are very close fitting, and have small cuffs, if any.

The aprons or overskirts of striped goods suits are prettier when cut bias.

Bright ribbon bows again appear among the braids and puffs of the hair.

Raw silk Algerine suiting is appropriate and pretty for little children's costumes.

Silks of dark colors, checked with white hair lines, are much in vogue this spring.

Iceland wool-crotcheted lace is the proper thing with which to trim flannel skirts.

The pretty capotes or cap bonnets this spring are furnished with strings; which may be either of lace or ribbon.

Parasols for mourning are made of black silk, lined with thinner silk, and edged with a sidepleating of black crape.

The newest lace neckties are small scarfs of large meshed cashmere net, edge with a deep border of cashmere lace.

For girls from four to ten, kilt pleated skirts, very short, with the sailor blouse waists or waistcoat and jacket, are shown.

The brocades of this season are in small leaf and vine patterns, showing two shades of one color, or harmonizing color.

Ties are seen among the latest importations of brocaded silk, with bunches of flowers embroidered artistically in the ends.

Silk or thread stockings, to be fashionable, must be dark brown, purple, or blue, profusely embroidered in gay colors.

White silk handkerchiefs, with delicate colored borders, have entirely taken the place of linen ones among the fashionable.

The fashion of vailing silk dresses with laces, cream or black, grows in favor. The sacque and point are the pieces used for the purpose.

Hints on Coffee.

Prof. Daniel C. Eaton, who occupies the chair of botany in Yale College, in the course of a lecture on "Coffee," brought out the following points: In 1850 the whole production of coffee in the world was estimated at 713,000,000 pounds, of which Brazil furnished 400,000,000, Java 140,000,000, Ceylon and San Domingo each 40,000,000, Cuba and Porto Rica 25,000,000, Venezuela and Sumatra each as much, and all other countries including Arabia, Costa Rica, Jamaica, etc., only 16,000,000. From these figures it will be seen that only one man in three drinks Java coffee, and probably only one in one hundred gets any Mocha, and yet you will find it difficult to buy a pound of coffee in this city to-morrow which the dealer will call Rio. It is all called Mocha, or Java, or possibly Maracaibo.

By far the greatest part of the coffee used in the United States is Brazilian or Rio coffee. Indeed Brazil produces more coffee than all the rest of the world put together. There are marked differences in the appearance of some of these coffees, as well as considerable difference in flavor. Taking three of the best known kinds, for example, Rio, Mocha and Java, we notice that the grains of Java are larger than either of the others, and of a slight, yellowish-brown color. Rio coffee has larger grains than Mocha, and the color is usually considerably darker and somewhat more inclined to greenish.

In flavor Java is much milder than either of the others, and Mocha is richer and spicier than Rio, while Rio is the strongest of the three, and, indeed, is perhaps the strongest of all coffees. It is true of all coffee that the fewer broken and discolored grains in it the better the coffee, and no cup of coffee can be really excellent unless all imperfect grains are removed before the coffee is roasted.

The best coffee here obtainable is an equal mixture of Java and what is called Mocha. As the grains of one are much larger than that of the other they should be roasted separately, but ground together.

The common cheap ground coffees contain usually a little coffee, and here the bulk is supplied mostly with either peas or rye. Chicory is too high priced to be used to any great extent, and the people who think that if their coffee is not really pure it contains only a little chicory, are probably drinking peas and rye, made dark and bitter with burnt sugar. The higher sounding title of the coffee, the poorer the quality as a general thing.

The Pacific Railroads to be Brought to Judgment.

The lower house of Congress some time ago instructed its Judiciary Committee to inquire and report what legislation is necessary to secure the Government against loss on account of the subsidy bonds issued to the various Pacific railroad companies. The subject was referred to a sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. Knott and Lawrence. The latter have submitted to the full committee their report, embodying a number of important recommendations. The report goes into an elaborate examination of the relations which exist between the Pacific railroads and the Government. It shows by detailed statistics and computations that, after applying all the means now provided by law for the disbursement of the interest advances, there will be a deficiency of at least $150,000,000 in principal and interest when the subsidy bonds mature. This result is arrived at without allowing the Government to calculate compound interest on its advances. It is argued that the companies will not be able to pay this sum in addition to their first mortgage indebtedness to private parties, and the belief is expressed that they do not expect to. The sub-committee therefore recommend the passage of a bill of which the main features are as follows:

First. The Government is to retain in the treasury all money which is or may be due to the companies, and apply it to their indebtedness to the United States.

Second. It requires each company to pay to the Government semi-annually such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and which invested at interest will, at the maturity of the subsidy bonds, create a fund sufficient to pay the principal.

Third. It requires the creation of a similar fund to pay at the maturity of the subsidy bonds the amount of the interest not then reimbursed by services, and by the five per cent. of the net earnings now required to be paid into the treasury.

Fourth. It prohibits each company from making any dividends while it is in default of complying with any of these requirements for semi-annual payments.

Fifth. It gives the Government a right of action to recover all money due or to become due, and to take possession of any, or to operate any road in default.

Indians Preparing for Bloody Work.

A late letter from Fort Ellis, Montana Territory, says: "The extensive plains in our valleys have been clear of snow the most of the winter, and this mild season has afforded hostile Indians a favorable opportunity to prepare themselves for bloody work at an unusually early period. The most trustworthy information from all points confirms the belief that active hostilities will soon open. The Sioux, Cheyennes and Arrapahoes are making extensive preparations for an outbreak; they have been purchasing large quantities of arms and ammunition, going as far south as the Indian Territory for that purpose. For some time past their warriors have been absent from the agencies roving in the Big Horn, Powder river, and Tongue river counties, with the intention, it is believed, of opening hostilities on the frontier settlements, before military or citizen defense can reach the threatened parts. If this be the case the savages will meet with a sad disappointment, as troops from all the surrounding forts are rapidly moving toward the heart of the Sioux country; also citizens by hundreds, who are arming themselves and moving hastily to the front. Everything tends to confirm the belief that all hostile Indians will be compelled to surrender or fight to the last man."

Velocity of Electricity.

Prof. Lovering, of Cambridge, in his admirable paper on measuring the velocity of electricity, presents the following facts, which may answer the frequent inquiry how fast electricity can move over the wires. Eliminating the somewhat unscientific character of the query, Mr. Lovering states that in 1869 Prof. Winlock, of Harvard, sent electric signals from Cambridge to San Francisco, and thence by other lines to Canada, and back again to Cambridge, over a loop of wire measuring 7,200 miles. This long journey was performed by electricity in about two-thirds of a second, and no small portion of this brief interval was lost in bringing into action the thirteen repeaters which were interpolated into the circuit. The total transmission time between Brest, France, and Duxbury, Mass., by way of St. Pierre, was .816 of one second. The total distance by cable is 3,329 nautical miles, the distance from Brest to St. Pierre being 2,580 nautical miles, and that from St. Pierre to Duxbury 749 nautical miles. By calculation then, the transmission time between Brest and St. Pierre was .639 of a second, and between St. Pierre and Duxbury .177 of a second. So that the two branches were traversed—one at the rate of about 4,000 nautical miles a second, and the other at the rate of 4,230 nautical miles a second.

An Encouraging View of Trade.

The cotton goods exported from New York last week were valued at over $250,000, or at the rate of $13,000,000 a year. This would be a larger trade in this line, by two millions, than was done even in the exceptionally prosperous year 1860. For fifteen years the exports of cotton goods have been small and unworthy of special notice. The revival of this branch of trade is one of the hopeful features of the situation, and is attracting much attention.—New York Evening Mail.

THE population of Naples was 451,000 souls on the 31st of December, 1875.

Poor Organs.

The following from the New York Christian Advocate, written by its editor-in-chief, Dr. Currie, some years since, is yet more true to-day than when it was written; as the popularity of the instrument has extended, the number of incompetent makers has increased. There are now few articles in reference to which the public is more deceived and imposed upon than in parlor or cottage organs. This is attested by thousands of such instruments now standing utterly useless, all over the country, which are but a few months or years old:

CABINET OR PARLOR ORGANS.—As usual in such cases, the new and large demand for these instruments has induced a great number of persons to engage in their manufacture, some of whom are quite unequal to the business they have undertaken. It requires something more than the mechanical skill of the artificer in wood and iron to make and prepare for use a musical instrument; and yet some have evidently brought nothing else to their aid in the business. The result is that the country is becoming filled with inferior and defective instruments. Large sums of money are expended for valueless articles, and the people are defrauded of their needed musical education. The evil is intensified by the fact that these inferior instruments are, on account of their inferiority, most industriously urged upon the public. Because they cannot compete with better ones in the open market, they are pressed upon the public by direct solicitations; and because they offer larger commissions, they are those most commonly offered by agents and hawked by peddlers. And as most purchasers are unable to judge the relative merits of these things, the inferior articles are often bought when better ones are desired, and would be cheerfully paid for.

Induced by these considerations, we have been at some pains to ascertain what instrument of the many now soliciting the public favor combines the greatest amount of real excellencies. We have prosecuted this inquiry entirely independently of aid or direction from interested parties. The opinions of some of the best musical critics, composers, and performers have been obtained, reports of experiments made in the ordinary use of various instruments in churches, schools, and families have been compared, all of which with singular unanimity concur in assigning the first place to the Cabinet Organ of Mason & Hamlin—a decision that corresponds with our own previously formed convictions. * * * We have written these things without solicitation from any one, and without the knowledge of those whose pecuniary interests we may seem to favor. The interest of our readers is the object we have sought especially to promote, and in that interest we have prosecuted our inquiries, and we record our convictions.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Newspaper Statistics.

From the "Newspaper Press Directory for 1876" we extract the following on the present position of the newspaper press: "There are now published in the united kingdom 1,642 newspapers, distributed as follows: England 320; Provinces, 956; total, 1,276 Wales, 57; Scotland, 152; Ireland, 138; Isles, 19. Of these there are—Daily papers, England, 98; Wales, 2; Scotland, 16; Ireland, 19; Isles, 1. On reference to the first edition of this directory (1846) we find the following facts, viz., that in that year there were published in the united kingdom 551 journals; of these 14 were issued daily, viz., England, 12; Ireland, 2; but in 1876 there now established and circulated 1,642 papers, of which no fewer than 136 are issued daily. The magazines now in course of publication, including the quarterly reviews, number 657, of which 238 are of a decidedly religious character, representing the Church of England, Wesleyans, Methodists, Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, and other Christian communities."—London Times.

AN easy method of breaking glass to any required form is by making a small notch, by means of a file, on the edge of a piece of glass; then make the end of a rod of iron red hot in the fire; apply the hot iron to the notch, and draw it slowly along the surface of the glass in any direction you please; a crack will be made and will follow the direction of the iron. Round glass bottles and flasks may be cut in the middle by wrapping round them a worsted thread dipped in spirits of turpentine, and setting it on fire when fastened on the glass. This process is familiar to old campaigners, with whom glass bottles are more plenty than tumblers, and the former is thus utilized to supply a want of the latter.

AT our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

Pimples, Eruptions, Rough Skin.

The system being put under the influence of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for a few weeks, the skin becomes smooth, clear, soft, and velvety, and being illuminated with the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory. The effects of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. While one to three bottles clear the skin of pimples, blotches, eruptions, yellow spots, comedones, or "grubs," a dozen may possibly be required to cure some cases where the system is rotten with scrofulous or virulent blood poisons. The cure of all these diseases, however, from the common pimple to the worst scrofula, is, with the use of this most potent agent, only a matter of time. Sold by dealers in medicines.

HEADACHE.—There are various causes for headache, as derangement of the circulating system, of the digestive organs, of the nervous system, etc. Vegetine can be said to be a sure remedy for many kinds of headache, as it acts directly upon the various causes of this complaint—nervousness, indigestion, costiveness, rheumatism, neuralgia, biliousness, etc. Try the Vegetine. You will never regret it.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.—The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry. Sarsaparillian and Its Associates. Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of DR. RADWAY'S Sarsaparillian Resolvent, THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscle, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awaken fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, where in this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF WILL AFFORD INSTANT EASE.

INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS, INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, INFLAMMATION OF THE BOWELS, CONGESTION OF THE LUNGS, SORE THROAT, DIFFICULT BREATHING, PALPITATION OF THE HEART, HYSTERICS, CROUP, DIPTHERIA, CATARRH, INFLUENZA, HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE, MUMPS, NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, COLD CHILLS, AGUE CHILLS.

The application of the READY RELIEF to the part or parts where the pain or difficulty exists will afford ease and comfort.

Twenty drops in half a tumbler of water will, in a few moments, cure CRAMPS, SPASMS, SOUR STOMACH, HEARTBURN, SICK HEADACHE, DIARRHEA, DYSENTERY, COLIC, WIND IN THE BOWELS, and all INTERNAL PAINS.

Travelers should always carry a bottle of RADWAY'S RELIEF with them. A few drops in water will prevent sickness or pains from change of water.

IT IS BETTER THAN FRENCH BRANDY OR BITTERS AS A STIMULANT.

Price 50 Cents. Sold by Druggists.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, MAR., 30, 1876.

Democratic Central Committee.

In view of the early meeting of the Democratic State Convention, April 19, and the absence of the chairman, T. C. Mays, on the advice of political friends, I, as one of the committee, request the members of the Democratic Central Committee of this county, to meet in Auburn at 10 o'clock a. m. to make such steps as may be deemed necessary to select 19 delegates to the State convention, and transact such other business as may come before them.

FRIDAY, APRIL 7th, 1876,

JAMES McCLELLAN.

The following are the balance of the committee:

F. M. Bacon, Butler; Jere. Plum, Waterloo; Geo. Barney, Concord; J. M. Goetschius, S Richland; B. F. Blair Newville; J. M. Urie, N. Richland; W. Richmond, Stafford; John Potts, Fairfield; W. S. Blair, Wilmington; F. C. Waterman, Smithfield; C. C. Walters, Auburn; Martin Hook, Franklin; J. M. Campbell, Troy.

Emma Mine Schenck has got his corporeal frame back on American soil. He stands before the American people in the light of a confidence operator. Grant has had a good deal of poor luck with his foreign ministers and home appointees. But who could expect that all of the Grant connections would be first class. But the only question now is: Has Grant got any honest relations?

One thing thou lackest, most noble Republic, and that is a bureau for the dissemination of true political knowledge, so that the poorer classes, such as are unable to procure the proper kind of reading matter, may be able to form an intelligent opinion on subjects that are of vital importance to the successful conducting of our government. If such was the case, it is not likely that we would be compelled to bear up under the disgrace that the Republican party by its infamous corruption has brought upon us like an avalanche.—Plymouth Democrat.

The New York Herald, a paper similar to the Cincinnati Commercial, professing independence, yet generally in the interest of the Republican party, has been forced to say, "The election of a Democratic House of Representatives in 1874, now proves to be a national blessing. Not that the Democratic party is the custodian of the honor of the country, but that the existence of a powerful opposition in Congress is necessary to honest administration. Would a Republican House have investigated the corruptions of the War Department? Never! Party pride prohibited the admission that inquiry was needed.

Blaine's War Record.

[New York Sun.]

There is no mystery about the way in which Mr. Blaine kept out of the army. Like many other patriots who would have made admirable Brigadier Generals, he successfully struggled against his martial temperament, and continued to grow rich in the service of his country at a safe distance from the front. Then, in the dark hour of need, which he can not even now as he says, after the lapse of thirteen years, recall without a shudder. Mr. Blaine was drafted. Again he managed to master his belligerent propensities, and hired a substitute. This substitute it may be added, was comfortably provided for in the Provost Marshal's office at Augusta, Me., but was soon transferred to the County Jail for forging soldier's certificates of discharge. Mr. Blaine did not procure another representative. His military record ended, by proxy, behind prison bars, and it was not until a dozen years after that he himself began to fight the battles of the rebellion And ever now he cannot recall them without a shudder.

Mr. George William Curtis the editor of Harper's Weekly, spoke some pretty plain words at the Syracuse convention. He said:

"Mr. President, it was the saying of a great English statesman, in a great emergency, that 'Plain words are best.' The hour has arrived for plain words in the Republican party and its counsels in the United states as Republicans. I have already said what is deep in the hearts of every one before me, that while we are justly proud of the great men and the great measures with which our party is historically identified, we as Republicans, are yet conscious what we need at a time when every one of us knows, whether any of us are willing openly to confess it or not, that that party name that we cherish so sacredly has been stained with foul disgrace; the corruption of the administration exposed in every direction and culminating at last in the self-confessed bribery of the Republican Secretary of War; the low tone of political honor and of political morality that has prevailed in official republican service; the increasing disposition of the officers and agents of the administration of this country to prostitute the party organization relentlessly and at all costs to personal ends, has everywhere aroused the apprehension of the friends of free government, and has startled and alarmed the honest masses of the Republican party."

All right, but when the thieves and rascals of the Republican party shall put their candidates in the field in a few months Mr. Curtis will forget all this and join heart and hand with the men who have brought so much dishonor and disgrace upon the American name, and Nast will be let loose to rake up the embers of the late war, and set section against section, as he has been doing for the last ten years. If Mr. Curtis would live up to his professions his fellow-citizens would have a good deal more respect for him than they have now.

Is Your Life Worth 10 Cents.

SICKNESS prevails everywhere, and everybody complains of some disease during their life.—When sick, the object is to get well; now we say plainly that no person in this world that is suffering with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint and its effects, such as Indigestion, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Sour stomache, Heart-burn, Palpitation of the Heart, Depressed Spirits, Billiousness, &c, can take GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER without getting relief and cure. If you doubt this, go to your Druggist and get a sample bottle for ten cents, and try it. Regular size 75 cents. Two doses will relieve you.

Select School.

A select school will be commenced at the rooms in Ensley's block, on Monday April 3rd 1876, and continue three months. The rooms are light, pleasent and centrally located. An excellant opportunity is here offered to those who wish to advance themselves in the common branches and higher English. Pupils living out of town, will be assisted in finding boarding places, or rooms for boarding themselves, by calling on the Principal, or any of the Board of Trustees.

RATES OF TUITION.

The California Senate has passed two bills of an extraordinary nature in regard to the press. One requires that the signatures of writers shall be affixed to articles, and the other that a newspaper shall retract any statement proven to be libellous. As Senator O'Connor truly remarked no signature law has ever been heard of before in any State of the American Union in England Ireland, or Scotland, or any English-speaking State or nation. The two enactments are as absurd as they are unconstitutional. The law may punish an editor for libel, but it cannot compel him to give the use of his types paper and presses for a retraction of the libel. That is a matter for his own judgment and conscience.

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

We purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The importer has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and wholesale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these intermediate profits. No middlemen with us. We are having a great run on Prunes. The Finest

PRUNES ONLY 8c A POUND.

They hardly ever sell lower than 12½c. and when you consider that Dried Apples are 12c, we all know a pound of Prunes will go farther and are considered much richer eating.

TEAS REDUCED

A penny saved is two pence got." Ten cents reduction on teas. The continued dullness in trade east, coupled with the large number of failures in the tea trade, has completely demoralized the market. Teas we used to sell at $1,40, and lately $1,10 per pound, we now fell at $1 per pound. The best uncolored Young Hyson, Imperial or Gunpowder, the very best qualities, now $1 per pound. Other grades as low 25c per pound, up to 30, 50, 60, and 70c per pound. Japan now 80c. was 90c, the best Oolong now 35c, was 85c.

Totten & Bodine have their new drug store in good shape, and as Mr. T. is thoroughly posted in the business, every thing will work like clock-work. Give them a call, in McIntyre's new block, opposite Miller & Casebeer's dry goods store.

Not within a period of five years do we remember a time when the country was so mud bound as within the past three months. The pecuniary loss to the farmers and business men of the town would have constructed many miles of good gravel road.

We notice many visible signs of improvement in our city. The people are waking up to the fact that we have one of the best localities in the state. We believe the time has come for general activity on the part of our business men Let the good work go on.

Last Monday night we were visited by a heavy snow storm. The snow fell the depth of eight inches, and the winds blew strong and loud, making snow drifts on every corner. Joe. Abright made one near the post-office on Tuesday, which we think was done unintentionally.

Sentimental editors are going into ecstacies over the wonderfully small feet of Mrs. Belknap. She may have small feet, but don't it knock the poetry out of those delicate hoofs to reflict that the present administration could not furnish whitewash sufficient to cover up her tracks?

Now is the season of the year when the spring poets starts out in search of inspiration, to the wooded hills, purling brooks and overhanging cliffs; and with coat buttoned up around his throat, and poetic fervor dampened, comes back in a shower of select and asks if anybody ever saw such disagreeable weather.

It is all nice enough to talk about "Beautiful Snow" around Christmas and New Year's, but when it comes and makes itself numerous on St. Patrick's Day and in the close neighborhood of April 1st, with fair prospects of continuing until the 1st of May—it is about time to call it by its right name. "Beautiful Snow" bards will please take notice.

A robin was seen last Monday, with an almanac spread out before it, closely studying the "weather conjectures" department. It is suppose that the furious snow storm that was raging at the time, had set Mr. Robin to reflecting if he hadn't been a little premature in breaking up house-keeping in his Southern home.

Three hunderd men of intemperate habits, and many of them confirmed drunkards, met in one room at the Hippodrome, New York, where Moody and Sankey are holding their meetings, one evening last week, and falling on their knees besought God's help to abstain from intoxicating drinks. The scene is represented as an intensely affecting one.

It is announced in the Chicago Times, that the Black Hills are a humbug and an illusion; that immigrants are robbed in open daylight, by unprincipled adventurers; that there is no protection for white people beyond Fort Laramie, and that, on the whole, respectable American citizens had better not go for gold to the Black Hills.

An engineer at Garrett has a job of running two engines for pumping water into the tanks for the B. & O. railroad. One of the engines is at Garrett and the other at Bloomdale. The way he masters the situation is by having his wife, who is said to know as much about it as himself, run the one at Garrett, where they live, while he attends the one at Bloomdale.

The usual manner heretofore has been for the central Committee of the county to select the delegates. This has been the case more for convenience than any other purpose, but while this has been the practice, it has never denied to the several election precincts, their right in the selection of their proper member of delegates. If any such precincts have or will so do, let in be reported in time to the gentleman who issued the call, in the care of this office.

On last Friday evening Roberson's Bell Ringers and Minstrel Troupe gave one of their splendid entertainments, at Ensley's Hall, and were listened too by a large audience, taking into consideration the condition of the weather at the time. They gave their audience a fine treat, and displayed much talent in their vessatile role. Jimmy Field is a brick, and the entire troupe are far ahead the average traveling players.

How much for that load wood?" inquired a lady, last Monday, of a wood merchant, who had about a half a cord of wood on his wagon. "Well," drawled out the good, honest fellow, at the same time making a calculation in the mud, "I guess it ought to be worth three dollars." The lady reminded him that it was the wood, and not his wagon and team, that she wished to buy, and passed on in search of a wood broker more merciful than the three dollar" shark.

The B. & O. R. R. Company have given notice that they will carry freight to the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia at regular rates, but will return the same, if unsold, free; making it virtually half rate. Passenger fares will probably be the same as by other lines, which is 25 per cent reduction, or three-fourths full fare. This will not meet the expectations of the public and we hope the matter will be reconsidered Many have supposed it would be even less than half, and a great many who wished to go will have to deny themselves the privilege.

From some cause or other, we have frequent complaints from our subscribers at Fairfield Center, on account of the irregularity of getting the COURIER it sometimes being a week old before it reaches them. Where the trouble is we do not pretend to know, but it must be somewhere in the mail routes, as we mail it regularly from this office on Thursday, and the paper should reach them the same week of its publication, by all means. We do not wish to blame any particular one with this irregularity but must have it stopped, as it is inconvenient to us, and to our subscribers at that place.

Rev. Mrs. Cone, of Goshen, has been in the city several days, visiting her many friends. Mrs. C. is a lady of fine ability, a fluent speaker and one who is greatly interested in the temperance cause. She was astonished very much to find, that during her short absence from our city, the temperance people of Auburn had entirely forgotten their duty in this direction. It was hard for her to know, after laboring zealously for several years with our temperance men and women, that the saloon business has more than doubled during her brief stay from our city. The temperance societies should be re-organized and some effort made to lessen the sale of this deadly poison.

COMSUMPTION CURED.

AN old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

Downfall of Smithers.

The other day old man Smithers was going to his home on Ensley Avenue, with a paper sack full of eggs in one hand, and bucket of molasses in the other A lot of wicked boys styling themselves "Mulligan Guards," began to pelt him with snow-balls. The old man in trying to dodge the balls, let his feet slip out from under him, and came down on his eggs like a ton of brick; throwing the molasses all over him. When he got up he was the most forlord looking creature we ever saw. With a mixture of eggs and molasses, looked like a turkey buzzard after taking a swim. He fairly danced with rage, and at last he gave vent to his feelings by catching one of the guards, and playing the "Devils Dream" on the seat of his breeches with a shingle. The boy singing the obligato solo to the old man's accompainment. Boys you are not charging upon a flock of geese, when you get after old man Smithers.

On to-morrow night, at Ensley's Hall the comedy of Caste, or Life of an Actress will be produced by Mr. Jas. Lowrie, assisted by the best home talent of Auburn. There is no doubt but this play will be well rendered, as the parties holding characters show great zeal in their daily pretices for preparation, and those of our citizens who favor them with their attendance may expect a splendid entertainment, and we hope they will be patronized by a large audience. The reputation of Mr. L. as a fine actor, and his peculiar talent in laying a piece for the stage, bespeaks for him the wishes we have expressed above Let all come out and enjoy a happy time.

Last Saturday quite a lively scene was enacted on our streets, in which two of our citizens were the chief actors. Byron Raisier made a wager with Isaac Cool, that he could go to the livery stable and saddle a horse and reach the stable of the upper hotel, before Mr. Cool could make the distance on foot. The wager was promptly accepted and both parties made a start—Cool struck out across lots, and didn't stop to let down any bars or open gates on the road, but went over them like a hound would, if he was after a red fox and in this manner won the wager. Next time you make a wager Byron, we advise you to specify the route to be taken. Bully for Cool.

In these days of swamp highways the farmer's hand hitches up, about 5 a. m., drives out to the wood-pile and loads his wagon until the wheels sink through the mud up to the hubs. Then he lashes his horses to jerk the wagon out, drives to town with half a load—and if the harness holds together and the anima's don't give out, he will get to town in time to find workingmen going home to supper. Unless he sells his wood for little or nothing he will have the pleasure of driving back, thus doing a hard, miserably hard days work for nothing. Good roads would change this somewhat How much would it cost to make a good gravel road leading from every point in the city. Business men and farmers reflect upon it.

It is all right. The Republicans are free from all odium caused by the Fort Sill expose. It has been ascertained that Belknap's wife, who caused his fall, was a rank secessionist during the war. That settles it. Let the Republican party rejoice.

Gen. Ingalls made Mrs. Grant a present of a $4,800 watch. Result, Ingalls was made Quarter-Master General at Washington, where the stealings are immense. This is the way the Republican party purify themselves.

It immediately arrests its progress, and if perseveringly used, will never disappoint in a cure. Go to Davenport's Drug Store, and get a sample bottle free. Sept. 30 y

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, March 25, 1876.

DEAR COURIER.—A deputation of ladies from this city, Baltimore and other points were before our Committee this morning urging an appropriation for a Reform School for girls. One of their arguments was that so many girls were ruined by those in office, that it had become an actual necessity to provide for them. Mrs. Spencer, a very intelligent lady, said, in the course of her remarks, speaking of her experience here in Washington:

"One of these unhappy victims, a beautiful girl, came to see me this week to tell me they would not take her at the hospital, and it was evident her days were numbered. She, the daughter of a soldier, and was seduced at fifteen by a General in the army, afterwards a Representative of the people, a member of the House."

We also had Marsh the celebrated witness before the Committee yesterday, accompanied by his wife. He testified that he had not the remotest idea of leaving the country when he left Washington, making a complete refutation of the Radical charge that the Democratic members of the Committee had assisted in his escape. Mr. Marsh is apparently on the shady side of fifty. He stands about six feet in height, is very erect, and has a wiry and bony frame. His large brown eyes throw a good deal of animation into a face, which can well be called handsome. He has no beard, and is closely shaven, with the exception of a moustache trimmed to mathematical nicety, and a cross in color between black and iron gray. His forehead extends well up on the cranium, and where it reaches the hair shines with the polish of ivory. Where the forehead leaves off a thin growth of iron gray begins, which is cunningly arranged to cover a great area of head development to the best of advantage. Mr. Marsh, from his nose down resembles very much Col. A. McClure, the Pennsylvania politician and Philadelphia editor. His legs are long and of the pipe-stem order. In dress Mr. Marsh is faultless. Last night he wore a pair of light pants with overgaiters to match, a well fitting black coat and vest, and black necktie. He wore but little jewelry. His open coat displayed a heavy, though not gaudy, gold watch chain. On the third finger of the left hand he wore a heavy seal gold ring.

Mrs. Marsh is a short, stout lady, her gray hairs indicating that she is not far behind her husband in number of years. She wore a handsome brocade silk, an elaborately embroidered drab shawl, and diamond jewelry. There was an austere expression about her, yet her form and features were beautiful. She seemed entirely possessed under the numerous questions put to her. She emphatically denied that Mrs. Belknap even intimated to her that Mr. Pendleton had paid her (Belknap) a cent to get the Kentucky Central Railroad claim through.

I have neglected to mention the "Old Club House," fronting Lafayette square now occupied by the government. The recent Belknap developments have brought it to the front, and a brief history of it will be found to be as strange and eventful as it is painful. It would seem that misfortune has followed fast upon any and all that have inhabited that ghostly mansion. It is sometimes known also as the Seward House. Gen. Belknap when he first came to Washington there occupied appartments, with his wife, and his residence there, though his wife did not die therein, yet adds tragic reminiscence to its terrible history. We gather from a Washington paper additional facts relative to the people who formerly inhabited it. J. C. Spencer, when Secretary of War, resided there and his son was hung for motiny to the yard-arm of the vessel on which he was cruising. A member of the Cabinet who perished in the fatal explosion which, during Tyler's administration, converted a pleasure party on the Potomac into a funeral of statesmen, also had lived in that house, though I believe he was residing elsewhere at the time of his tragic death. The attempted assassination in that house of Secretary Seward, the death therein of his lovely daughter, and the killing of Barton Key immediately after he left its threshold, are some of the other melancholy associations of the old house, built with prize money by Commodore Rogers, the father of the wife of Gen. Meigs. A singular and very sad coincidence connected with the death of Mrs. Carrie Belknap it will be as well to recall now. Mrs. Grant continued her receptions the spring of 1870 and always invited a number of ladies, both matrons and maidens, to receive with her. At her last reception that year Mrs. Carrie Belknap and Miss Maggie Beck, both handsome and popular Kentuckians (the latter lady the daughter of James Beck, the Representative in Congress from his State, and Senator elect), were the receiving party. Before another public reception was held at the White House, the flower-covered coffins containing the remains of both Mrs. Belknap and Mrs. Corcoran, "nee" Beck, the latter a bride of a few weeks, wearing her wedding robes as a shroud, rested side by side in the chapel of Oak Hill. The two died within a few days of each other.

The House Committee are busy, ferreting out the fraud and corruption of the administration, and the Radical press in this part of the country are equally busy in doing all they can to prevent further investigation. They are now crying that it is costing the country thousands of dollars and is a waste of time to do so. Probably it was a waste of time to show how Belknap was swindling the poor soldiers on the frontier and making money out of the graves of dead union soldiers in the national cemeteries; probably it was a waste of time to show how Orvil Grant, the bro. of the President, is the paid solicitor and agent of a score of firms in different cities, to obtain contracts at exorbitant prices for worthless goods from the government; probably it was a waste of time to prove how the country has been swindled out of hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars in the postoffice Department, the Department of Justice, and in almost every other branch of the service. The organs of the administration may think this a waste of time, but the people who have to foot the bills look upon it in an entirely different light. Doubtless they knew all about it. They shared in the spoils, but there was a large number of persons who were in blissful ignorance of the rascality at Washington until it was unearthed by the present House of Representatives.

Maddened by the Belknap exposure, the Radical leaders are resorting to every desperate measure their situation can suggest to divert the public attention from the frauds and rascalities now being unearthed in the different departments at Washington.

As a part of their programme they scattered broadcast over the land, vague charges and inuendoes implicating Pendleton, Hendricks, Randall and other Democratic leaders, in certain questionable transactions, although no man was found in either party to give any credit to the charges.

I have never been a bitter partisan in the strict sense of the term, and I never want to appologize for official wrongs done by political friends. But that is not the rule with the administration party. A year or two ago it was charged that the Republicans were assessing office holders for means to carry on elections. This was denied on the stump by Republican orators, and was hooted at by the press. But the testimony taken before the Committee the other day substantiates the fact conclusively. One firm of post traders, Republicans, testified that they had paid between six and eight thousand dollars for campaign purposes, within a few years, and that they done so in order to hold their position. This from one point alone among hundreds of others, who were compelled to do the same thing.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE book-keeper of the Marine Bank of New York city, Hadden by name, has absconded with $36,000 of the institution's funds.... Scranton, Pa., has just experienced a destructive conflagration. Loss estimated at $150,000.

THE WEST.

SEVERAL members of the Chicago whisky ring, including A. C. Hesing, Jacob Rehm, and a portion of the crooked distillers, have pleaded guilty to the soft impeachment. Sentences have been deferred until all the pending whisky-fraud cases have been disposed of.... Springfield, Ill., has been visited by a disastrous conflagration. Bunn's Opera-house and three adjoining business houses were burned, involving a loss of about $170,000.... Gen. E. L. Merritt, of Gen. Sheridan's staff, who has just returned to Chicago from an expedition to the Red Cloud agency, says there is some gold in the Black Hills, but not enough to support one-half the people who are already there. Gen. Merritt thinks the coming spring will find many of those who have gone to the Hills prostrated by exposure and disease, and litterally starved to death. If they are fortunate enough to live through the winter, they cannot move, for the snow is deep on the ground, the streams are frozen hard, and the only running water found is upon the surface of the ice, which will not break until June.

THE distillery of Dickinson, Abel & Co., one of the "crooked" ones of Chicago, has been condemned by the United States District Court, and forfeited to the Government.... The St. Louis police the other day made a raid on all the policy shops in the city, and seized all the tickets and other property belonging to the lottery business.... Richard D. Curry, an Omaha colored gambler, has been convicted of assaulting with intent to kill Edward Rosewater, editor of the Omaha Bee, and sentenced to four years in the Penitentiary.

HON. WM. B. CALDWELL, one of the oldest members of the Cincinnati bar, died in that city last week. He was on the Supreme Bench of Ohio for many years, and was a lawyer of great ability.... At Salt Lake, Utah, the other day, John Wiggins was sentenced to be shot June 23 for the murder of John Kramer, the prisoner choosing this mode of death in preference to hanging or decapitation.

A BOILER in the Union Pacific Railroad Company's rolling-mill at Laramie City, Wyoming, exploded the other day with terrible force, completely wrecking the south half of the mill, instantly killing four men, and seriously wounding ten others.

SOUTH.

CHARLESTON, S. C., has been scourged by a disastrous conflagration. The fire broke out in the morning, at the corner of King street and Rogers' alleys. No water being in the neighborhood, and the wind blowing a gale from the southeast, the flames spread with increditable rapidity. The fire raged for eight hours, and only stopped for the want of material. Heartrending scenes were witnessed during the progress of the flames, and, to add to the confusion, bands of negro robbers sacked every house to which they could gain admittance. Hundreds of persons were rendered homeless and penniless. The loss is estimated at $500,000, with very little insurance.... The recent snow-storm extended itself over nearly the entire southern section of our country, and was the heaviest visitation of the kind that the oldest inhabitant can recall. At Cairo the snow was fourteen inches deep, and at Memphis, and points farther south, it was ten and twelve inches on a level.

CHIEF JUSTICE A. O. P. NICHOLSON, of Tennessee, is dead. Deceased was United States Senator in 1840, member of the Southern Convention of 1850, and editor of the Washington Union during Pierce's administration.

WASHINGTON.

THE Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections have began its investigation of the charges brought against Senator Spencer, of Alabama, that he secured his election by corrupt means. Ex-Senator Matt Carpenter is counsel for Spencer.... A Washington dispatch says Maj. Bluford Wilson, Solicitor of the Treasury, and Washburn, Chief of the Secret Service, have gone to Montreal to endeavor to secure the return of Marsh.

CONGRESSMAN FERNANDO WOOD has just had narrow escape from a painful death. There was an abscess in his throat which threatened to close the windpipe before it broke, and the Washington surgeons had despaired of reaching it. The eminent surgeon, Dr. Sayre, of New York, was sent for, and immediately undertook the extremely dangerous task of lancing the abscess from the inside of the throat, near the carotid artery. The operation was successful, but Wood will necessarily be an invalid for from six months to a year.

PRESIDENT GRANT having guaranteed the witness Marsh and his wife immunity from prosecution, the pair returned to Washington the other day for the purpose of telling all they know about Belknap, post-traderships, and other matters of interest.... The Treasury Department received last week from San Francisco fourteen tons (500,000) of silver, to be set aside in anticipation of the silver redemption of the fractional currency.

The House Pension Committee has decided to recommend the transfer of the Pension Bureau to the control of the War Department.... Ex-Senator Stewart was before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, last week, and gave his explanation of his connection with the Emma mine as counsel for James E. Lyon. He contradicted Lyon's story, as told to the committee some time ago, in nearly every particular.... Treasurer New has finally decided to resign, on account of a pressure of private business.... J. S. Evans, the post-trader at Fort Sill, was before the Committee on Expenditures of the War Department, the other day, and detailed all the circumstances surrounding his obtaining permission from Marsh to remain at Fort Sill. It was a matter of necessity with him, he said, to come to terms with Marsh. Secretary Belknap told Evans he had promised Marsh a place, and Marsh had selected Fort Sill. Evans saw Marsh, who appeared to understand all about the matter. He went to New York with Marsh, where a written contract was signed. Evans said he was introduced to the Secretary of War by Gen. Rice, of Iowa, and paid him $1,000 for the introduction. He thought this was enough, though Rice wanted $1,500.... Respecting what has been said about the recent correspondence of the Attorney-general with District Attorney Dyer, intended to reflect upon Gen. Babcock, he (Babcock) makes and authorizes the publication of the following statement: "I found a copy of the letter lying open upon my desk at the Executive mansion. I do not know how or by whom it came there. It was without any envelope or direction to anybody. It was not marked official or confidential. There was nothing to show that it was intended for the President, and he informs me that he never saw it. The copy appears to have been made in the Attorney-general's office. Finding this copy open and without direction upon my desk, I presumed it was put there for my inspection and use, and accordingly I placed it in the hands of my counsel for such action as they might think proper in regard to it."

THE witness Marsh, about whom there has been such a hubbub, was before the House Judiciary Committee again the other day, and repeated his testimony against Belknap. He made profession that he desired to state the entire truth, without reserve. His testimony was not consistent with his profession, unless it be that his memory is unlike that of the majority of men. He could remember that he was careful to destroy every shred of paper which could show a direct connection with the late Secretary of War, but he could not remember the slightest detail, or even the subject-matter of the most important conversations with Gen. Belknap. Marsh admitted his testimony before the Clymer Committee with one inconsiderable exception. That exception was an incomplete phrase which was omitted from the printed report.... The President has nominated to the Senate Hon. John A. Bentley, of Wisconsin, for United States Commissioner of Pensions, vice McGill, who resigns on account of the inadequacy of the salary.... Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines has once more recovered judgment in the United States Supreme Court in her suit for the vast estates in and around New Orleans to which she lays claim.

CALEB P. MARSH, refreshing his memory, now recollects distinctly having talked with Secretary Belknap about the article upon post-tradership extortions which were published in the New York Tribune in February, 1872; and that he informed the Secretary that the contract with Evens was then in force. Marsh has also explained to the Committee of Congress the reason that impelled him to run off to Canada. He says when he read the debate in the House upon the proposed impeachment of Belknap, he was led to apprehend that he might be arrested and prosecuted on a criminal charge.

GENERAL.

HON. RICHARD H. DANA has reconsidered his determination to appear before the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs to answer the charge of literary piracy urged against him as ground for the rejection of his nomination to be Minister to Great Britain.

A LETTER from the Black Hills, printed in a St. Paul paper, says the extravagant reports sent to Eastern and Western papers about the immense yield of gold are immense frauds. The writer says that since his stay in the hills he has visited almost all the leading gulches, and has not yet seen a pay streak or a place where bed-rock has been reached. He says there is undoubtedly gold, but poor men's diggings are scarce, and if gold is to be taken out it will take capital to do it. There are about 2,500 men in the hills, and more are arriving daily, while many disgusted pilgrims have turned their faces homeward.

EDWIN BOOTH's theatrical tour through the South was remarkably successful. He was greeted with ovations everywhere. Mr. Booth will fill a series of Western engagements, opening in Chicago, at McVicker's Theater, on the 6th of April.... Five States have now totally abolished the death penalty, viz.: Maine, Rhode Island, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa.

THE National Council of the Order of Sovereigns of Industry was in session at Cleveland last week. Eleven States were represented. The reports of the officers make a favorable exhibit of the affairs and prospects of the order.

HENCEFORTH the manly and courageous pastime of wife-beating will be attended with some unpleasant consequences in California. Gov. Pacheco has affixed his signature of approval to the act which provides that men found guilty of wife-beating shall be publicly whipped.... It is reported from Washington that army headquarters are to be removed from St. Louis, and re-established at the capital.

POLITICAL.

A WASHINGTON telegram states that at a caucus of the Republican Senators the other day, there was a general "interchange of views respecting the general policy that should be adopted in regard to the large reductions made or contemplated by the House of Representatives in the customary annual appropriations. After a long discussion on the subject, it was unanimously agreed, as the sense of the caucus, that the necessary efficiency of the civil service would be seriously impaired if a sweeping reduction be made in all its branches by the application of the reported policy of the House committees to cut down nearly all salaries 10 per cent., and the force employed 20 per cent., and also that the action of the House in proposing to abolish a number of our missions to South America, and reduce the salaries of the principal ministers in Europe, is unwise and impolitic. It was therefore agreed that the Senate Committee on Appropriations should pass upon each item of reduction in the various bills separately, and should recommend concurrence only in those reductions which, after separate examination, are found compatible with the continuance of the requisite efficiency. Wherever such reductions can be made the Republican majority of the Senate will vote for them, but, on the contrary, unless similar good reasons can be shown for concurrence in any recommendation of the House touching a matter of importance, the issue will be met with unyielding firmness."

A SHORT time since the President sent to the United States Senate the name of Mr. R. P. Derickson to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the First Illinois (Chicago) district. On Monday he recalled the name of Mr. Derickson and substituted that of Joel D. Harvey. The Senate has confirmed the nomination.

THE New York Republican State Convention, for the appointment of delegates to the National Convention, was held at Syracuse last week. George Dawson presided. A resolution was adopted instructing the delegates to Cincinnati to vote for Roscoe Conkling for President. The platform declares for hard money.... The Democracy of Pennsylvania held their convention at Lancaster on the same day. In their platform they declare for general amnesty, demand the repeal of the Resumption act, and favor "such steps for the resumption of specie payments as will most surely and speedily reach that result without destroying the business interests of the country." The delegates to St. Louis were left uninstructed. A motion to instruct for Judge Black was voted down.

WASHINGTON advices report that there is a proposition on foot among Congressmen for the formation of a non-partisan finance compromise. The plan, it is stated, is to re-enact the law allowing the holders of United States notes in sums of $50, or any multiple thereof, to fund them at their own option into a gold bond, bearing interest at the rate of four per cent., and payable after thirty or forty years. All notes thus funded the bill will provide shall be canceled and destroyed, and shall never be reissued.

FOREIGN.

A PARIS cablegram gives brief particulars of a shocking railway calamity near Lattertach, France. A passenger train, while crossing the river Ill, was precipitated into the rapid current by the giving way of the bridge. There were some forty or fifty people on board, every one of whom perished.... The great manufacturing city of Manchester, England, has had a destructive conflagration. A block of shipping warehouses was consumed, entailing a loss of two or three millions of dollars.

KING ALFONSO of Spain made his entry into Madrid on the 20th of March, at the head of 25,000 troops. Three days festivities followed, and everybody in the city, Carlist sympathizers excepted, was happy and jolly.... The number of slaves in Brazil, according to recent official returns, is 1,409,448.... Vesuvius is belching fire again.... The Italian Ministry has been bounced, and a new Cabinet appointed.

AN armistice of twelve days' duration has been agreed upon by the Turks and Herzegovinians.... The French Governmental budget for 1877 estimates the revenue at £534,400,000, and the expenditures at £533,400,000. No increase of taxation is proposed.... The return of peace in Spain has caused the issue of a decree establishing a relief fund for invalid and wounded soldiers, and for the families of those killed during the war. One year's service is remitted for all men now in the army.... The Galveston News prints a special dispatch received from Rio Grande City, stating that news was received that the Mexican forces had been badly defeated by the revolutionists, with the loss of 1,500 men and all their artillery and wagons.

THERE was a snow-storm in Rome and other portions of Southern Europe on the 20th of March. This is extraordinary, more so even than the foot of snow which fell in Tennessee on the same day.

THE members of the Irish Rifle Association have unanimously voted to accept the invitation of the National Rifle Association of America to compete for the championship of the world.... After an animated debate in the British House of Commons, the Royal Titles bill, making Queen Victoria Empress of India, has passed to its third reading. The vote stood 309 for the bill and 134 against it.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

MONDAY, March 20.—Senate.—Wright rose to a personal explanation. It was for the purpose of denying a newspaper report that he had in his service a private secretary paid for by the Government.... The bill to supply the deficiency ($150,000) for feeding the Sioux Indians was passed.... The Senate spent some time in discussing the bill providing for an agreement with the Sioux Nation in regard to the Black Hills, and the bill regulating the mode of counting the votes for President. No action was taken on either measure.

House.—Banning and Sayler presented the petitions of various distillers of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois, protesting against any change in the present plan of collecting taxes.... The most important feature of the House proceedings was the introduction by Atkins (Tenn.) of a bill repealing the Resumption act, accompanied by a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. The motion was rejected—yeas, 109; nays, 108; not two-thirds in the affirmative. The following is the vote in detail:

YEAS.

Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Baker (Ind.), Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Brown (Ky.), Burchard (Wis.), Cabell, Caldwell (Ala.), Caldwell (Tenn.), Campbell, Cannon, Cate, Caulfield, Clarke (Ky.), Clark (Mo.), Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, De Bolt, Debrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Evans, Faulkner, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Fuller, Goode, Goodwin, Gunter, Hamilton (Ind.), Harris (Ga.), Harris (Va.), Harrison, Hartbridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Hays, Hereford, Hewitt (Ala.), Holman, Hopkins, House, Hunter, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Jenckes, Jones, Jones (Ky.), Kelley, Knott, Landers (Ind.), Lewis, Lynde, McFarland, McMahon, Milliken, Morgan, Neal, New, Oliver, Phelps, Phillips (Mo.), Phillips (Kan.), Poppleton, Rea, Reilly, John, Reilly, J. B., Rice, Riddle, Robbins, (N. C.), Robinson, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Sheakley, Smith (Ga.), Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stevenson, Stone, Terry, Tucker, Van Vorhes, Vance (O.), Vance (N. C.), Waddell, Walker (Va.), Wallace (Pa.), Wells (Mo.), Whitthorne, Williams (Ind.), Williams (Ala.), Yeates, Young—109.

NAYS.

Bagby, Bagley, G. A., Bagley, G. H., Baker (N. Y.), Ballou, Banks, Barnum, Bass, Beebe, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Bradley, Brown (Kan.), Burchard (Ill.) Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Cox, Crapo, Cutler, Denison, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Ely, Farwell, Foster, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Hall, Hamilton (N.J.), Hancock, Hardenbergh, Hathorn, Hendee, Henkle, Hewitt (N. Y.), Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kehr, Kimball, Landers (Conn), Lapham, Leavenworth, Luttrell, Lynch, March, McCrary, McDill, Metcalf, Miller, Morey, Monroe, Morrison, Nash, Norton, O'Brien, Page, Payne, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Randall, Reagan, Robbins (Pa.), Sampson, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Singleton, Smalls, Smith (Pa.), Strait, Stenger, Stowell, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Townsend (Pa.), Throckmorton, Tafts, Walker (N. Y.), Wallace (S. C.), Ward, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wilke, Willard, Williams (N. Y.), Williams, A. S. (Mich.), Williams (Wis.), Williams (Del.), Williams, W. B. (Mich.), Wills, Wilson (Iowa), Wood (Pa.)—108

TUESDAY, March 21.—Senate.—Cameron (Wis.) presented a joint resolution of the Wisconsin Legislature against bridging the Mississippi river.... Petitions were presented by Wright, Logan, Dawes, Cooper, Sherman, Dorsey, Christiancy, Ingalls, Windom and others, from Good Templars and other temperance organizations in their several States, all praying for the passage of a Prohibitory Liquor Law in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and also for the passage of a law prohibiting the use of liquors among the officials of the civil, military and naval service.... Allison, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the West Point bill, with the recommendation that the Senate adhere to its amendments and ask for a committee of conference. Agreed to, and Allison, Logan and Wallace were appointed as such committee on the part of the Senate.... The Senate again debated, without action, the bill prescribing the mode of limiting the Presidential vote... Executive Session.—The Foreign Relations Committee reported back the nomination of Richard H. Dana, Jr., to be Minister to England, with the recommendation that it be not confirmed. It was placed on the calendar with the adverse report for future consideration.

House.—Bright offered a resolution, instructing the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to inquire into the management and disposition of the captured and abandoned property. Adopted.... Jones (Ky.), from the Committee on Railroads and Canals, reported a bill to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and St. Louis railroad to construct a narrow-gauge railroad from tide water to St. Louis and Chicago. Recommitted.... Caulfield, from the same committee, reported a bill making it a misdemeanor for any person in the employ of the United States to solicit or contribute funds for election purposes, or to canvass in any election in any State, county, or district in the United States. Blaine offered an amendment to include Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, and to add the words, "And contribution of money or other valuable things as herein prohibited by any Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress while he is a candidate for Congress shall, in addition to the penalties herein prescribed, operate as a disqualification to his holding his seat." Amendments were also offered by Reagan, Hewitt of Alabama, and Brown of Kentucky, which are to be considered when the bill next comes up.... The House went into Committee of the Whole, Cox in the chair, on the Legislative and Judicial Appropriation bill.... Speeches were made by Hubbell against the Morrison Tariff bill, and by Foster, of Ohio, a member of the Appropriation Committee in criticism of the reductions proposed in the Legislative Appropriation bill, claiming that they are of so sweeping a character as seriously to impair the effective working of the various departments of the Government. Holman defended the bill, and declared that the committee in preparing it had but one object in view, and that was to make all proper and necessary reductions consistent with efficiency, and that no personal or partisan consideration had been displayed in the action of the committee.

WEDNESDAY, March 22.—Senate.—The Senate proceedings were very tame, the better portion of the session having been consumed in discussing the bill to regulate the mode of counting the Presidential vote. No action was taken on the bill.

House.—Rice, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill providing that all pensions on account of death wounds received or wounds contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1871, shall commence from the date of the death or discharge and for the payment of the arrears of the pension.... The House took up the Judiciary Committee's bill prohibiting contributions to election funds by officers of the United States Government, the question being on the amendment offered by Blaine to extend the application of the bill to Senators, Representatives and Delegates in Congress. A lengthy debate ensued, and several amendments offered and adopted. The bill was finally passed—yeas 173, nays 8.

THURSDAY, March 23.—Senate.—The Senate devoted another day, without reaching a vote, to the consideration of the bill prescribing the mode of counting the votes for President and Vice-President.

House.—A. S. Williams (Mich.), from the Military Committee, reported a bill authorizing commissioned officers to make deposits under the act of May 15, 1872. Passed.... Also a bill repealing the law which forbids the appointment to any position in the army of any person who served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the Confederate States in the late rebellion, passed.... Banning, from the same committee, reported a bill regulating the pay of army officers. The bill fixes the pay as follows: General, $10,000; Lieutenant-general, $8,000; Brigadier-general, $6,000; Colonel, $3,500; Lieutenant-colonel, $3,000; Major, $2,500; Captain (mounted), $2,000; Captain (not mounted), $1,800; Adjutant, $1,800; First-lieutenant (mounted), $1,600; First-lieutenant (not mounted), $1,500; Second-lieutenant (mounted), $1,500; Second-lieutenant (not mounted), $1,400.... Phillips (Kansas) introduced a bill for the relief of settlers on public lands within railroad limits.... Baker (Ind.) introduced a bill to promote the mining resources of the United States.... The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, and several speeches were delivered.

PASSING EVENTS.

THE House Committee on Territories has agreed to report favorably on the Oklahoma bill to establish a Territorial government in the Indian country, and is now engaged in perfecting the details of the scheme.

IN England, it is proposed to form a committee for the collection of subscriptions to the complete works of Walt Whitman, whose poverty excites much more active sympathy among literary people abroad than at home.

THE Prince of Wales, having to his own satisfaction, doubtless, carried out the programme in India laid out for him by the wise men who sit in council with his royal mother, is now on his way home. A great deal of money has been spent and a vast amount of tom-foolery gone through with to very little purpose.

THROUGHOUT Louisiana at present a remarkable natural curiosity is to be seen. On many orange trees is ripe fruit of last year's growth (which is now most deliciously sweet), partly-grown green oranges from blossoms of early winter, and fresh blossoms which have now appeared at the proper period. Such a thing was never before seen in that part of the country.

JEREMIAH S. BLACK, of Pennsylvania, James B. Beck, of Kentucky, and Chas. J. Jenkins, of Georgia, have been selected by the States of Maryland and Virginia to settle the long-standing boundary dispute between them. They will sit in Washington, commencing in April, and the examination of the case, with the hearing of witnesses, is expected to occupy about three months.

MR. SHERMAN, of Ohio, has introduced in the United States Senate a bill to limit the jurisdiction of the heads of departments in the allowance of claims. It provides that no claim against the United States in any executive department, after being finally considered and rejected by the head of that department, shall be subsequently considered or allowed in whole or in part by the head of that department, but, if presented again, may be referred to the Court of Claims. It also prohibits consideration and allowance by departments of any claim that occurred more than two years before its presentation, providing that such claims must be referred to the Court of Claims, if within the limits prescribed.

THREE military expeditions are now in motion for the Wind river and Big Horn region, west of the Black Hills, in Wyoming Territory, where, it is known, the hostile Sioux Indians and their allies are concentrating for the purpose of a general war against the whites. General Crook and Colonel Reynolds, at the head of ten companies of cavalry, are moving northwesterly from Fort Fetterman, in Wyoming, while General Custer, with cavalry, is simultaneously moving southwestwardly from Bismarck, Dakota, and another cavalry force is moving southeastwardly from Fort Ellis, in Montana. The three expeditions will co-operate, and, if necessary, consolidate against the common enemy. Some bloody work is expected.

OLD uncle Daniel Drew has followed the custom of the time, and joined the innumerable caravan of bankrupts. Mr. Drew has been one of the largest, and also one of the most unscrupulous operators in Wall street for many years. He is entitled to little or no sympathy in his financial troubles—certainly not to so much as his creditors, for he never settled his contracts until he was forced to do so. His practices have frequently been as reprehensible and demoralizing as those of the man who presides over a faro-table. The gross amount of his liabilities, secured and unsecured, is stated at $1,500,000. It is doubtful whether his contributions of $250,000 to the Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, N. J., and $100,000 to the Wesleyan University at Middleton, Ct., will hold, though they are secured by mortgages on his farms.

THE Egyptian army, which has just gained an important victory over the Abyssinians, consists of about 15,000 infantry and a few hundred cavalry, with troops of camels and mules, and three batteries of artillery. The nominal commander-in-chief, Ratib Pasha, rendered himself noted in the time of the late Said Pasha by attempting suicide because he had been publicly insulted by his august master. Gen. Loring, who is really in command, is a North Carolinian, who fought bravely in the Mexican War, and lost an arm in the assault on De Belen gate. He held the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the regular army prior to the civil war, in which he was on the Confederate side. He is still in the prime of life, and has been largely instrumental in reorganizing the Egyptian army. Gen. Loring is accompanied by several American officers, including Cols. Dye, Field, Derrick, Major Loss, Capt. Porter, and Dr. Wilson. The officers of the expedition are all of the Caucasian race. The soldiers are mainly Arabs. Prince Hassan, who was present at the recent battle, is the Khedive's third son. He was educated at Oxford, and studied military science at Berlin. The Abyssinians under King John are supposed to number about 80,000, half of whom are said to be armed with modern weapons.

A Settler.

Naturally the lady correspondents at Washington have been particularly gushing and exuberantly exercised about the Belknap matter; and it begins to appear as if they cannot be done with their sickly sentimentalisms and moralizings. It is amazing the number of faults and shortcomings, both moral and physical, which they have discovered in Mrs. Belknap which they never thought of mentioning before. One expatiates upon her "big hands;" another declares with gusto that her nose is an "unmitigated pug, far too small and expressionless for the rest of her face." The latest writer, however, settles her unfortunate sister with: "It never seemed to me that the soul of that proud lady had any message for my soul."

THERE are ten widowers in the United States Senate.

Veritable Babes in the Wood.

Two small children, sons of Mr. Gubser, aged respectively three and five years, and a child aged five years, son of Mr. Smith, wandered from their homes last Wednesday evening, got lost in the woods, and were not found until Thursday morning. Shortly after the disappearance of the children a large crowd collected and began to scour the woods in all directions. The search was continued without cessation during the whole night. Daylight made its welcome appearance, but brought no trace or tidings of the little wanderers. At one time about one hundred persons were engaged in the search. Thursday forenoon, about ten o'clock, Mr. Gubser's youngest child was found. The little fellow was lying on his back, chilled to numbness, and perfectly helpless. A little dog belonging to Mr. Smith had followed the children off. The faithful creature was found lying on top of the child, and endeavoring to keep its little master warm. It seems remarkable that instinct should have taught the dumb brute so much, for had it not been for the warmth derived from the dog's body the child would inevitably have perished with cold. Search was continued for the other missing children, and they were found about two hundred yards from the youngest child. Both were lying down, clasped in each other's embrace, almost frozen. Snow began to fall rapidly about twelve o'clock Wednesday night, and continued to descend without interruption until some time after the finding of the missing ones. The night was dark and windy and extremely cold, and it is really a matter of wonder that the little truants did not perish before morning. It is thought they could not have survived more than two hours longer, when they were fortunately discovered. Luckily they were comfortably clad, or else they would have died from exposure to the pitiless storm.—Portland Oregonian.

Pleasures of Life in Texas.

Galveston News: "A man named Adams went into the store of Mr. Anderson, at Savoy, one day last week, and, raising a difficulty with him, threw a four-pound weight at him, but fortunately missed him. Anderson then threw a four-pound weight at Adams, and, striking him on the head, killed him. Weighty arguments."

Dallas Herald: "At Bolivar, Denton county, Wednesday morning, coming from a party, Mr. Askey wished to accompany Miss Miller home. Her brother objected, and Askey went on ahead, procured a shot-gun, and shot Miller through the neck, killing him instantly. No excitement over it, as Miller was considered a bad man. Askey was plowing to-day."

Jefferson Times: "On Wednesday, while Probate Judge Bancroft, of Texarkana, was arguing some trivial case before Squire Bush, in that city, some hard words ensued between the parties. Bush stepped from his desk, saying, "I adjourn this court to give you a licking," at the same time knocking Bancroft down. After he got up, he repeated the blow, knocking him over a bench. Bancroft drew a knife and cut Bush twice—once in the face, from forehead to chin, the other time in the stomach. It is thought he cannot recover."

Would It Be Any Harm?

It is leap year, and if a tidy girl with red cheeks feels a palpitation of the heart for some worthy young man, would it be any harm for her to call upon his father speak about the weather, the bad roads, the hard times and the bad state of society, and then remark:

"Mr. Quincy, I have an affection for your son George, and I think I could soon learn to love him."

Quincy would look at her from the corner of his eye, and she would continue:

"I can wash, bake, cut over clothes, sew, play the piano, manage a servant, do embroidery, sing, speak good grammar and make a home happy."

Quincy would look from the corner of his other eye, and she would go on:

"I hear that he is home nights, is saving, well educated, sensible, has no bad habits, and is just the kind of husband I want. I don't expect any money with him, but will do my share of work, planning and saving to help him secure a home and a bank book. With your permission I should like to pay my addresses to him."

Mr. Quincy would tell her to go ahead, if he was a sensible man, and would there be anything wrong about it?—Detroit Free Press.

From the State House to a Prison Cell.

Josephus Sooy, Jr., late treasurer of New Jersey, was arraigned for sentence in Trenton, the other day, for the embezzlement of $47,000. Chief Justice Beasley said: "The fact of your being here at this time, convicted of such a crime, is a shock not only to the court but to the community. Your offense was one never before committed by an official in this State so high in office as yourself. The court feels a certain amount of sympathy with every man arraigned at this bar. Still, in looking at your case, we can see no extenuating circumstances. You were surrounded with friends of high position, and should not have been overcome by temptation. The sentence of the court is that you be confined in the State prison for a term of three years, and thence until costs are paid."

Sooy was overcome, and sank into the prisoner's box. He is sixty-eight years of age. The general impression is that he has been a tool in the hands of certain Philadelphia sharpers, who have secured the greater part of the money.

AUSTILL, an Alabama negro, planned to poison the family of his employer in Eastern Shore. He put arsenic in a water tank from which they usually drank. Soon afterward he ate dinner with them, and all were at once taken ill. The poisoned water, contrary to his expectations, had been used in cooking. He confessed his crime and died, but the others recovered.

THE father of all newspapers is the venerable Pekin Gazette, which is over 1,000 years old. It is a ten-page paper, with a yellow cover; has no stories, no "ads," no marriage or death notices, no editorials, no subscribers. It simply contains the official notices of the Government.

A PHENOMENON.

Extraordinary Abnormal Development of Vision.

The San Francisco Morning Call has a long account of a remarkable human phenomenon discovered in that city. For some time, according to the Call, there have been rumors of a strange abnormal development of vision on the part of a lad named Johnny Palmer, who resides with his parents in South San Francisco. The boy is about nine years of age, and has been regarded by his parents hitherto as almost totally blind. On the evening of the 12th of December last, the boy was in bed, and for some reason the curtains of an adjoining window had been removed. His parents were seated in another room, when suddenly they heard the child utter a cry, and, hastening in, beheld him sitting up in bed gazing intently at the moon, which was shining full in his face. He imagined it to be about 200 yards distant, and could distinguish objects on it with perfect distinctness. These facts becoming known to the California college of sciences, a committee composed of Drs. Bryant, Gadbury, and Goldson sought the youth for the purpose of testing his powers. They found that nothing had been overstated, and that this extraordinary vision was possessed by the lad. He described what he saw, and his description before the committee agreed substantially with that made on previous occasions to private parties. He completely overturned the theory of the "inhabitability" of the moon by declaring that he saw moving objects upon its surface, and minutely described them. The committee conclude from what the boy states that there are living beings on that luminary, but that they greatly differ in form from any living thing on this planet. When full-grown the "Lunarian" is shaped somewhat like a chariot wheel, with four spokes converging at the center or axle. They move by rolling round and round, and travel as swiftly as an eagle. The children appear to be shaped like a pumpkin or orange, finally losing their rotundity and assuming the form of a wheel alluded to. The surface of the moon is all hill and hollow; no fire is visible, nor are there any volcanoes, and no other species of living thing seems to exist upon it. The committee turned the boy's attention to the planet Venus, but he could discover nothing in that direction. The learned savans at once surmised that the cause of his failure was the fact that the focus of the eyes was fixed at 240,000 miles, while the least distance of Venus from the earth is 24,293,000 miles. It was, therefore, impossible for him to discover anything on the surface of the latter with distinctness.

The reporter of the Call, after hearing the facts stated, hunted up the boy and arranged a meeting at the residence of J. P. Morrow, of San Francisco, who has a large telescope finely mounted. The boy took a glance through this at Mars, and burst out into a scream of delight, describing mountains, seas, rivers, cities, its inhabitants, and many other wonderful sights. The story has a decidedly fishy flavor, and is given for what it is worth.

New Hampshire's Queer Government.

It is a curiously antiquated and complicated form of State government they have down in New Hampshire. The lower branch of the Legislature is a mass meeting in dimensions, having 365 members, while the Senate, with its twelve members, is like a revisory committee to correct the action of the House. Every town with 150 voters has a representative, and many towns that do not come anywhere near this minimum get one by special act. For every 300 "ratable polls" an additional member is allowed, and a ratable poll is every man over twenty-one whom the selectmen can find in a town a week after election, whether he be a voter or not. Each town is a little republic, and seeks to obtain as large a representation as possible in the general court. The result of this effort is to increase the size of the House, while the Senate remains fixed by constitutional limitation. An actual majority of all the votes cast is required to elect State officers, and where a third ticket is run there is usually no choice, and the election is made by the Legislature in joint session.

SOUTH KINGSTON, R. I., can't exactly be called a growing town. The population is only 109 more than it was in 1790, and is 477 less than it was in 1860.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

Hemlocks.

I knew a forest tranquil and august,
Down whose green deeps my steps would often stray,
When leisure met my life as dew meets dust.

Proud spacious chestnuts verged each winding way,
And hickories in whose dry boughs winds were shrill,
And tremulous white-boled birches. Here, one day,

Strolling beside the scarce-held steel of will,
I found a beautiful monastic grove,
Of old primeval hemlocks, living still.

Round it the forest smiled, flashed and throve,
But here were only silence and murk gloom,
As though some sorcerer in dead days had wove,

With solemn charms, and muttered words of doom,
A cogent spell, that said to time, "Depart!"
And locked it in the oblivion of a tomb.

Thick was its floor, where scant ferns dared to start,
With tawny needles, and an old spring lay,
Limpid as crystal, in its dusky heart.

Vaguely enough can language ever say
What somber and fantastic dreams, for me,
Held shadowy revel in my thought that day:

How stern similitudes would dimly be
Of painted braves that grouped about their king;
Or how in crimson firelight I would see

Some ghostly war-dance, whose weak cries took wing
Weirdly away beyond the grove's dark brink;
Or how I seemed to watch by that old spring
The timid, phantom deer steal up to drink!

Around the Farm.

BRAKES that have made themselves nuisances in wet lands may be killed by draining off all superfluous moisture. Some varieties of brake will grow only in heavy wet soil, and taking out the water is taking away one of the elements essential to their life and growth.

THE number of eggs annually laid by a fowl is estimated at fifty-two, which would weigh about six pounds, and as a fowl seldom weighs more than three pounds, a hen lays annually double her own weight. Seventeen eggs will weigh on the average two and one-fifth pounds. —London Grocer.

A FARMER who has profited by experience writes this sensible paragraph: "In building a new barn I would study to put in all the windows I could possibly get in, of course not making a greenhouse of it, but as many as most folks put into dwelling houses. It is so much better doing the work in a light barn than in a dark one, cattle are more easily taken care of and are more quiet and better contented in a light place than in a dark one."

A SINGLE grain of barley was planted by an agriculturist in the Isle of Man, in 1872, and the same year produced three hundred grains. These were sown, and the second year's produce was about half a pint. These were again sown, and the third year's produce was fourteen pounds, which being again sown, have realized this year about seven bushels, covering a space of one hundred yards by five. Thus there has been produced in four years seven bushels of barley from a single grain.

THE best material for hot beds is horse manure well turned and mixed with about one-third its bulk of oak leaves. Another excellent mixture is the above with cotton waste, one-half waste and leaves, the other half manure. The middle of March is the proper time to start the bed in northern States, and a mild day should be selected for the work. Dig a pit about 3 feet deep in front, 8 inches deeper at the back, and 6 feet wide. This affords an opportunity for adding linings if it be deemed necessary, when the heat in the bed decreases.

EVERY human being who eats bread or wears clothes, has a direct interest in the results of the tillage of the soil, and in farm economy in general. Hunger and nakedness are wants of the most urgent character. The Creator of all things has placed these wants alike in every being. All are equally dependent on successful agriculture for the means of happiness. Let the soil become permanently exhausted; or far less, let a famine prevail over the land but a single year, and the heart shrinks from contemplating the scenes that would inevitably follow so great a calamity. A wise, prudent population will always prepare for the future.

A MAN WHO KNEW HIS BUSINESS.—John Johnson, of Geneva, N. Y., came to this country with little more means than to plant him on his American farm. He saw the needs of his soil and commenced draining off its surplus water, and the jeers of his neighbors at his folly were soon turned to astonishment at the crops he produced. They saw him reap a wheat crop double the average of the State, raise cattle and feed sheep at a profit, while others reported only loss. He proceeded, with the calm confidence of knowledge, to tile drain his 400 acres, at an expense much greater than he paid for his farm; but for some years, in relief of his old age, he has been able to rent portions of it for $15 per acre. He had faith in his business.—Live Stock Journal.

HOW MUCH WORK A HORSE CAN DO.—At a meeting of the British Association, at Dublin, Mr. Charles Bianconi, of Caspel, read a letter relative to his extensive car establishment, after which a gentleman stated that at Pickford's, the great English carrier's, they could not work a horse more than ten miles a day, and wished to hear Mr. Bianconi's opinion on the subject. Mr. B. stated that he found by experience he could better work a horse eight miles a day for six days in the week than six miles a day for seven days. By not working on Sunday he effected a saving of twelve per cent. Mr. Bianconi's opinion on this point is of the highest importance, for he has over 900 horses, working hirty-seven conveyances, which daily travel 4,244 miles. It is also the result of forty-four years' experience.

A FARMER writes that he and his neighbors, having some grain to carry to market, took the precaution to accurately weigh it before leaving home. The buyer made the loads four or six bushels less than they should be. One of the farmers had no evidence of his home weight, and so could do nothing, as the grain was already mixed with that in store. The other had a witness of the weight of his grain on the home scales, and compelled the buyer to pay for the full amount. There is little doubt that such frauds are often attempted these hard times, when buyers' profits are light. Every neighborhood at least ought to have platform-scales, and many farmers could much better afford to buy them than to sell their produce exclusively at buyers' weight.

About the House.

FURNITURE POLISH.—Equal proportions of turpentine, linseed oil and vinegar, thoroughly applied and then rubbed with flannel, is an excellent furniture polish.

PERFUME FOR GLOVES.—Rose leaves powdered, half an ounce; essence of cloves and mace, each one drachm; frankincense, quarter of an ounce. Mix, put a portion in a drawer with gloves, and they will retain the scent for a considerable time.

MASHED POTATOES.—Where economy is a great object, and for those who cannot digest rich dishes, the following is an admirable mode of mashing potatoes. Boil them till thoroughly done, having added a handful of salt to the water, then dry them well, and, with two forks placed back to back, beat the whole up till no lumps are left. If done rapidly, potatoes thus cooked are extremely light and digestible.

TO MAKE WELSH RABBIT.—Cut or grate some good cheese, put a bit of butter and some made mustard to it, put it in a frying pan over the fire and stir it smooth; a little milk may be added to it; when it is hot and a smooth paste, spread it on slices of nicely toasted bread and serve hot.

STUFFED EGGS.—Boil them hard, cut them in two, remove the yelks and beat them up with a little grated ham, parsley, pepper and salt to taste; replace this mixture within the whites, cut the underpart a little so as to make them stand well on the dish, and serve them with white sauce.

TO REMOVE INK FROM PAPER.—Shake well together one pound of chloride of lime in four quarts of soft water. Then let it stand for twenty-four hours, after which strain through a clean cotton cloth and add one teaspoonful of acetic acid to an ounce of chloride of lime water. Apply this to the blot, and the ink will disappear. Absorb the fluid with a blotter.

HOMINY MUFFINS.—Take two cups of fine hominy boiled and cold; beat it smooth; stir in three cups of melted butter, two teaspoonfuls of salt and two tablespoonfuls of white sugar; then add three eggs well beaten, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in hot water, and one large cup of flour; bake quickly.

The Boston Elm.

A peaceful-minded Detroiter received notice that there was something for him at the express office. He went to the office, paid $5.60 charges and took a heavy package away. He was not long in discovering that a friend of his in Boston had sent him a piece of the famous old elm which fell the other day. The friend wrote on the shipping tag that the relic would doubtless be highly prized and carefully treasured, but he was mistaken.

"Hist that old knot into the alley," roared the angered recipient to his boy, and it was histed. Then the man brought his fist down on the table and exclaimed:

"What is the Boston elm to me?"

Echo answered.

"What do I care if all the elms Boston ever had fall down?" shouted the man.

Echo got off another speech.

"I don't care for old trees, or young trees, or elm trees, or basswood trees," shrieked the man, "and the man who sent that infernal chunk by express was never brought up in a Christian way and stands no show of salvation!"

An Unfortunate Family.

David Turley, who was yesterday executed at Sacramento for the murder of William Shaw, came originally from Missouri. His father was a Brigadier General in the Confederate service during the rebellion, but met with his death by the accidental discharge of his own pistol; his older brother died; his younger brother killed his mother by accident, and was himself afterwards killed by bushwhackers, from which his eldest sister became insane and died. John Turley, another brother, was murdered in a row in western Kansas little more than a year ago. The brother who made the appeal for the condemned man's life was only lately discharged from eighteen months' imprisonment in the Colorado jail for shooting a man at Central City. Turley's age was thirty-four.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A good drawing—fifty thousand dollars in a lottery.

High colors—the clouds and sky.—Hartford Times.

Happy Pigs.

Reynolds' Newspaper, a London publication, declares that the queen's hogs are better cared for than many of her subjects. "Then we came to the piggery," says an article descriptive of her farm. "Several of the hogs were so fat that they could no longer open their eyes, yet they seemed to have no difficulty in moving about. We saw sacks apparently stuffed with hay and sewed up lying about on the straw, and on inquiry learned that they were pillows, one for each pig, for them to rest their heads upon when asleep."

IN the billiard saloon he found that his adversary was too much for him. He said: "Let us try a new thing; let us blindfold each one eye, and I bet I will beat." The other man consented, for he was confident of his skill, but he lost. With the bandage his opponent played as well as without, for he was blind in one eye.

INDIANA ITEMS.

THERE are forty-two lawyers in Crawfordsville.

LAPORTE wants to hear opera, and has decided to have an opera-house.

DRESSLER, a Terre Haute burglar, is preparing a volume of poems in jail.

SEVEN generations have pored over a Laporte hymn-book, which was issued in 1657.

A TERRE HAUTE farmer is the owner of an Alderney cow which has averaged fourteen pounds of butter per week.

THE Terre Haute Council has decided to build a pest house, as a means of discouraging the periodical visits of the small-pox.

GEORGE WAYBRIGHT, who killed Michael Francis at Brookville, on the 8th of February, has been elected to the penitentiary for two years.

FOR stealing twenty-six bottles of wine in Goshen, Edward Market was sentenced to four years, and Ben Mingers to two years, in the penitentiary.

A PECULIAR bride in Laporte was attired in a brown silk dress, a gilded crown upon her head, surmounted by a bridal wreath, a white lace veil sweeping the ground; the bridesmaid in blue silk, and the groom in pure white.

A YOUTHFUL Terre Hautentot, aged twelve years, was saved from the commission of a murder a day or two since by the interference of a bystander, who snatched a pistol from his hand as he was in the act of firing it at a companion.

A FRAGMENT of whitish stone has been picked up near Otter creek by Mr. T. W. Jones, which very much resembles a broken petrified human hand. The form of the knuckles and the parts representing the broken fingers are quite extraordinary.

THE trustees of the Ohio Falls Car and Locomotive Company, of Jeffersonville, have decided to sell out that institution on the 10th of June, to satisfy its creditors. It is rumored that a company is being organized, headed by W. C. DePauw, of New Albany, who are to purchase the works and continue the manufacture of cars.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL JOHN ROBINSON, of New York, arrested at Rockville, Park county, on Friday of last week, Henry A. Flammond, for the alleged murder of Peter Reemy, at Junet, Belgium, in the winter of 1873. The prisoner fled that country after committing the murder, and for the past six months has been located at the point where his arrest was finally made.

JAMES RYAN, a well-known fireman of Indianapolis, and a prominent local officer in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, after assisting to throw a number of lumber cars on the switch, stepped to the front of the engine for some purpose, and fell off over the forward bumpers. In a moment he was under the machine, and was being rolled along on the track by the fire-box. When at last the drivers on one side passed over his head, and on the other over his lower limbs, he was left a bleeding, shapeless mass of quivering flesh.

AT South Bend, on Friday of last week, two young men named Harrington and Quinlan began fighting in front of Krick's saloon, opposite the Lake Shore depot. The quarrel and fight originated in an old grudge. After they fought one round a comrade arrived, John Sullivan, a cousin of Harrington, who made an attack on Quinlan with a pocket-knife, and cut a terrible gash across Quinlan's bowels. Quinlan fought awhile longer, but finally dropped in the snow from loss of blood. He was carried into the saloon, and when his clothes were stripped down it was found that his entrails had protruded from the wounds. Drs. Partridge and Hall were called in, and after great difficulty succeeded in getting them back and sewed up the wound. Quinlan will hardly live through the night. Sullivan, after the stabbing, ran down to the jail and gave himself up.

AT Vincennes, one night last week, two men attempted to enter the house of John Ryan, an emyloye of the Ohio and Mississippi railroad, during his absence. His wife refused them admittance, and discharged a revolver through a window. They retreated to the rear of the house for a second attempt, when she again fired. This aroused a neighbor, who, in approaching, was fired upon by one of the men. Ryan was then called, and found one of them in the back yard, who tried to climb the fence, but fell back, and was struck several times with a club by Ryan, and died during the night. He is supposed to be Sam Dooley, of Martin county. The other party escaped. Robbery was evidently intended, as Ryan had just received his monthly pay. Mrs. Ryan thought to scare them by shooting, and was not aware that one ball had taken effect in Dooley's back, inflicting probably a fatal wound.

A Wife Who Starved Herself.

For many years past there has been living in Indian Creek township, Monroe county, N. Y., a married couple named Dicks. About a week ago Zachariah Dicks, the husband, made a will in which it was provided that, should he die first, all his property should go to the children, and they were to provide for their mother until her death. Mrs. Dicks very sternly objected to such a disposition of the property, and demanded that the will be changed, but her husband heeded her not. Becoming convinced that coaxing would do no good, the old lady began to threaten, and finally left her husband's roof. She never would taste another morsel of food. This threat did not move the old man, but the old lady kept her word. For fourteen long days she ate not a mouthful, and only occasionally would she wet her lips with water. Friends and neighbors called on her often to try to turn her from her dreadful purpose, but she would not even see any of them. She died at the age of 65.—New York Tribune.

Short But Good.

A Methodist journal tells a story about a little Quaker boy, about six years old. The Friends or Quakers think that in "meeting" no one should speak except as the spirit gives him utterance. Not unfrequently, therefore, their religious meetings are silent assemblies.

This boy thought, as there had been for some time a "silent meeting," that all were afraid to speak first. So he got up on the seat, folded his arms over his breast, and murmured, just loud enough to be heard by those near him, "I do wish the Lord would make us all gooder, and gooder, and gooder, till there is no bad left."

It was but a childish prayer, but could the elders have uttered one more to the purpose?

Flooding the Colorado Desert.

The project for transforming the Colorado desert of Southern California into a lake by turning into it the waters of the Rio Colorado is again agitated in California. What is known as the desert is a district about 100 miles wide, lying between the river and the mountains on the west, and extending into Lower California. Portions of it are from 100 to 120 feet below sea-level, and the theory is that, by shifting of the sand, bars were formed, cutting off the channel connecting the gulf then covering the region with the ocean, and that, in time, the water covering the desert was carried off by evaporation. The region is rainless, and the midday heat in summer averages 140 degrees. Yet, as often as the Colorado overflows and the water finds its way into the desert a short distance along the bayou known as the New river, luxuriant vegetation springs up. The project in fact is not for forming a lake (though one would be formed) for the sake of inducing rainfall, but for a gigantic system of irrigation by tapping the Colorado near Fort Yuma. Years ago the necessary concession was obtained from Mexico, into which the lake formed would probably extend, and charter for the project obtained from the California Legislature. Only the necessary grant from Congress was lacking, and that the Alta California states will again be applied for. It is claimed that the scheme, if carried out, will reclaim millions of acres of now desert, uninhabitable territory.

Why It Failed.

Col. Finnigan was a Florida planter wealthy and hospitable. Toward the poor he was always kind, and even the shiftless he would not turn coldly away. A man who had often been the object of bounty was named Jake Hartruff. Jake was a squatter in the woods, where he had a log cabin and a small clearing. Upon this land he sometimes raised corn, and with his gun he captured game. Of the game he ate the flesh, and the skin he traded for whisky. Long before the winter was over he was sure to be out of corn, in which emergency he would bring his bag to the colonel for a supply, which was generally furnished. Once upon a time Jake came with his bag very early in the season—in fact, winter had just set in.

"Why, how's this, Jake?" demanded Finnigan. "Seems to me you are rather early in your call for corn."

"Well, Colonel, fact is my crop failed this yer season."

"Failed! How is that? I thought this had been an uncommonly good season for corn."

"Yaas, I s'pose it has, Colonel. But y'see I forgot to plant."

Ben Butler.

The following is the latest story told about Gen. Butler: Some gentlemen were hotly discussing a matter which roused the General's ire, and in his anger he made a remark grossly offensive to one of the party. Not caring to have a personal quarrel there, Mr. —— nursed his wrath until he next saw the General. Then he demanded an apology. Quoth Mr. Butler: "I owe you no apology, sir! The remark was not addressed to you at all. I meant Col. ——!" "But you looked directly at me, and I could not help knowing that you meant me by your look." "Not at all, sir! Not at all! ha! ha! I'd like to know how you or any other man can tell where I am looking!"

Longevity in England.

In England, last year, there died 676 people aged ninety-five years and more, of whom 486 were women. Of these, eighty-nine had attained 100 years or more, and it is very remarkable that no less than seventy-nine of this number were females. The oldest of the men in the obituary of the year died in the Wolstanton district, Staffordshire, aged 103; but a woman who died in Hurst Almshouse, Exeter, was 108, and another at Newport, in Monmouthshire, had reached the patriarchal age of 112. Of these eighty-nine centenarians, nine were found in London, thirteen in North and South Wales, six in Yorkshire, and six in Norfolk.

Hard Workers.

Men who use their muscles imagine that men who depend upon their brains are strangers to hard work. Never was there a greater mistake. Every successful merchant does more hard work in the first ten years of his business career than a farmer or blacksmith ever dreamed of. Make up your mind to work early and late if necessary to thoroughly master the detail of the business upon which you propose to enter. The habit of persistent, rapid work once formed, you have gained a momentum that will carry you successfully through many a pinch in business where a less persistent worker would find it vastly easier to lie down and fail.

Sued for Damages.

Mrs. Bissell, widow of Charles Bissell, of the Sherman House, Chicago, who was killed in the railroad accident at South Wallingford a few days since, has sued the Central Vermont Railroad Company for damages. The company will contest the claim on the ground that the father came to his death while trying to save his son, and not as a result of the accident, and that the son was riding on a free pass, by accepting which he had discharged the company from liability. But the courts have decided repeatedly that the fact that a passenger is riding with a free pass does not protect a road in such a case.

A YOUNG man in Great Barrington Mass., couldn't get up courage enough to "pop the question" to his girl, and so sent his offer by mail. He got a postal-card in reply, briefly saying: "Fetch on the preacher."

DR. LINDERMAN, Director of the United States Mint, states that the production of gold and silver after the 1st of May will be $7,000,000 per month.

The Comforts of Wool to British Lawyers.

John Paul, writing from London to the New York Tribune, thus discourses of the "Woolsack:" Strange how they keep on doing a thing because someone, years ago, did it once! Before cushions were invented the lord chancellor sat on a bag of wool. So the lord chancellor of to-day must still sit on a woolsack. Where's the sense of it? If he sat on a file of Tribunes now he might learn something! All very well to explain the woolsack by the yarn about wool being once the great staple of the kingdom, and this bag being intended to perpetually remind the lord chancellor that he sits there pledged to protect the interests of the people. Had they wished to remind him of anything they'd not have given him so soft a seat of it—a few pins would have been put in. Cheese was a staple of the country quite as much as wool. Why did they not set his lordship up in state on a fine Stilton? In such a case he wouldn't have had to go out to lunch. No, no! I tell you that our English friends believe in wool; they find that two-fold virtue in a wool sack which by Falstaff's fancy lay in a good sherris sack—or possibly he meant wool all the while! To their thinking wool carries with it wisdom as well as warmth. And they insist on applying it to one end or the other of all their legal luminaries, while the lord chancellor, who is looked to for opinions of weight, involving the vastest interests, must have it at both. For barons of law and barristers only, it is enough to clap a layer on the head as a wig.

An Unloving Mother.

Chinese women are not remarkable for their love of children, and think it quite proper that blind babies should be killed, making no more fuss about it than if the victim were a kitten. Several years since a little girl was sick with small-pox, and when she got well it was found that her eye-sight was gone. This was hard, but even her own mother said she ought to be killed; that as she was blind she could not be taught to cook, sew and keep a house in order, so that when she grew up no man would marry her, and her parents would have to support her always. Day by day the hard-hearted woman talked in this manner to her husband until he consented to get rid of the child. He called the little thing to him one day, and taking her by the hand, led her toward a pine thicket on a hill at some distance from her home. Incredible as it may seem, he intended to leave her in this thicket to be eaten by wolves or die of starvation. As they walked along, however, he began to think how cruel it was to treat his child thus, and at last he turned back home and told the mother that he had rather work harder and keep the little one. She did not like it much but had to submit. The girl is now fifteen, and has learned to do so many things there will be no trouble in getting her a husband, and the parents will not have to work for her much longer.

Poisoned Arrows of the Papuans.

The warlike habits of the Papuans and their implements of warfare are described in a private letter recently addressed to Dr. Hooker. The writer says that no man leaves his dwelling, for his bit of cultivation even, without his powerful bamboo bow and a few deadly poisoned arrows. These poisoned arrows are only a few among a great number not poisoned, the former being distinguished by elaborate carving and painting, probably to prevent accident among themselves. They are each pointed and barbed with human bone brought to almost needle-like sharpness, most carefully and neatly finished; they are poisoned by plunging in a human corpse for several days. Poor Commodore Goodenough and his men suffered from arrows so poisoned. It is a sort of blood poisoning that, like other kinds of inoculation, does not develop itself for several days, the slightest scratch being sufficient to render almost inevitable a horrible death. The symptoms are accompanied by violent spasms like tetanus, with consciousness until the last.—Nature.

What Is the Sun?

Prof. Rudolph, in a lengthy paper on the sun, says: A molten or white hot mass, 856,000 miles in diameter, equaling in bulk 1,260,000 worlds like our own, having a surrounding ocean of gas on fire 50,000 miles deep, tongues of flame darting upward more than 50,000 miles, volcanic forces that hurl into the solar atmosphere luminous to the height of 160,000 miles; drawing to itself all the worlds belonging to our family of planets, and holding them all in their proper places; attracting with such superior force the millions of solid and stray masses that are wandering in the fathomless abyss that they rush helplessly toward him and fall into his fiery embrace.

A Woman's Swimming Exploit.

Mrs. Jessup, of Hildreth's Crossing, got adrift in the Eel river in a small boat, and as there were no oars and she was getting far out in the stream, she took the rope attached to the bow of the boat in her mouth slid or jumped into the river, swam ashore, going partially with the current, and making a trip of forty yards or so, reached some willows or bushes first and then pulled through to land, towed the craft all the time and tied it safely, and then walked back to the house dripping wet.—Mendocino Cal.) Democrat.

THE color of a soldier's uniform is shown to be not so much a matter of taste as of vital importance. Experience proves that men are hit in battle according to the color of their dress. Red is the most fatal; the least fatal, Austrian gray. The proportions are: Red, twelve; rifle green, seven; brown, six; Austrian bluish gray, five.

QUEEN VICTORIA has intimated to Lord Dufferin her desire to contribute to the projected improvement of Quebec by a gift of £10,000 for the construction of one of the proposed city gates, which is to be named "Kent" gate.

E. L. KENYON, of Hartford, who recently killed himself on account of financial troubles, is found to have had $50,000 assets over liabilities, after all.

GLASGOW claims to be the second city in the British Isles. It has a population of 547,598, against the 473,405 of Liverpool.

THE Patent Office at Washington during its business hours last year granted patents at the rate of one every twelve minutes.

MR. SETH GREEN protests against the wholesale slaughter of the sea-lions in San Francisco bay. He says the whole of them do not destroy as many fish as one Chinaman.

"CAPTAIN JIM," leader of the gang of river pirates who robbed the vessels off Communipaw, N. J., was arrested in New York last week. His history is one of crime and violence.

AN English boy, nine years old, the son of an English miner, killed his little brother by an accidental shot. He then hid the body under a stairway, and tried to set fire to the house.

THEY have got a boy in Binghamton five years old, who is physically perfect, healthy, talks distinctly, is very active, and weighs only nine pounds. He is twenty-three inches high.

EXCLUSIVE of the metropolis, there are no fewer than 972,836 owners of land in England and Wales, of whom 269,547 are owners of upward of an acre, the others holding less than an acre.

THE waters of the New York harbor have been nightly visited lately by amateur river pirates. The attacking force numbers twelve men, fully armed and sufficiently bloodthirsty to satisfy all the requirements of a dime novel.

A WOOD-CHOPPER in San Jose, Cal., found in the heart of a redwood tree, ten feet in diameter, twelve perfect acorns. The explanation is that the wind deposited the acorns three centuries ago when the tree was young and tender.

A ROMANTIC young girl of Christian county, Ky., clipped off her brown curls, dressed in boy's clothes, and clandestinely started for the Black Hills on foot. On the first night out that Indiana tornado found her on a mud road and rolled her around for a quarter of a mile. She returned home.

THE longevity of English physicians is illustrated by the fact that the London Medical Times and Gazette has selected at random from the annual necrology "just one dozen whose united ages amounted to 1,075 years, giving an average of eighty-nine years and seven months to each."

A YOUNG man in London having trod on a dog's toe, was bitten so severely that he died five days afterward. The relations summoned the proprietor of the animal before a magistrate, who rendered the remarkable decision that, there being no evidence that the dog was ferocious before being trod upon, he must dismiss the plaint.

TWO BROTHERS, named Andrew and William Boucher, were drowned while intoxicated, at Batavia, N. Y. It is not known how the accident occurred, but it is thought that they chased Andrew's hat, which was found some distance from the bodies, on the frail ice covering the creek, and, breaking through, were too greatly chilled to assist themselves.

"IT frequently happens," wrote a traveler in the wilds of Buenos Ayres, "that the owner of a thousand oxen and horses, and five times as many sheep, has not a bed in his house, and is too lazy to take the wool from the sheep's back to spread on the ground beneath him. The skull of an ox serves him for a seat, and the horn for a cup, and this is all his household furniture."

IT should not be supposed that there are no Jews who would not like to return to the Holy Land. There is a Jewish society in Russia whose members contribute one rouble each to a common fund. At stated periods fortunate members are chosen by lot and sent to Palestine, where, out of this fund, they are supported for the rest of their lives, and permitted to pass their lives in meditation. The society is called "The Inquirers after the Welfare of Zion."

THE Kentucky Legislature is to be asked to abolish lotteries, and petitions have already been presented for signatures in the churches of Louisville. The petitions set forth that the lotteries are "a blur upon the name of the city, a stain upon the fair name and fame of our honored Commonwealth, a snare for the unthinking and unwary, a system of gambling clothed in the garb of charity, and, in too many instances, supported and fostered by a show of respectability, thus leading into its remorseless toils men and women of all classes and grades of society."

THE following verses, it is said, are issued on leaflets for distribution to drivers and others having the care of horses, and on cards for hanging up in stables, by the English Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals:

Going up hill, whip me not;
Coming down hill, hurry me not;
On level ground, spare me not;
Loose in stable, forget me not.

Of hay and corn, rob me not;
Of clean water, stint me not;
With sponge and water, neglect me not;
Of soft, dry bed, deprive me not.

Tired or hot, wash me not;
If sick or old, chill me not;
With bit or reins, oh, jerk me not
And when you are angry, strike me not;

It appearing by the return of the writ herein that said defendant is not found, and it further appearing by affidavit filed that said defendant is a non resident of the State of Indiana. A writ of garnishment in said case has been served on the Baltimore, Pittsburg and Chicago Railway Company, Indiana Division.

Notice is therefore given to said defendant to appear to said action at my office on the 10, of April A. D. 1876, at 10 o'clock A. M., to answer or demur to the complaint or the same will be determined in his absence.

Feb. 17, 1876. JACOB WALBORN, J. P.

Belknap's most grotesque speculation was in the contracts given out for furnishing tombstones for the national cemeteries. There are seventy-two of these places where the Union soldiers are huddled together by contracts. Two hundred and fifty-three thousand headstones were needed to mark the separate graves. The commercial aspect of this aspect of this melancholy business was not lost upon the war secretary. His Iowa friends secured the job of furnishing the headstones, with the advantage of the Washington system of hocus-pocus which enables the highest bidder to circumvent the lowest one. The dead soldires were made to count as much per head in the contingent fund of the war of office as the live ones who dealt with post-traders.

We chanced into one of our groceries the other day, when an old man came in and wanted to know what eggs were worth a dozen.

"One shillon'," responded the clerk.

The old man put twenty-five cents on the counter and said, "give me twenty-five cents worth."

The clerk got a four pound sack and commenced to count them out, he counted out twelve scratched his head, and then put in two more.

The old man being in a hurry, said "he should make haste."

When the clerk scratched his head again and said "I don't know hardly how to come at that."

The old man was astonished, said "if one dozen costs one shilling, how much would two dozen cost?"

"Well, dot's vhat I am trying to come at."

The old man picked up his money and went out.

The water works fraud attempted to be fastened upon Gov. Hendricks by one Gen. McGinnis at Indianapolis, has been finally expunged, wiped out, dissipated and entirely obliterated by his witness J. W. Kern, of Kokomo, who gives the story McGinnis manufactured a flat denial. McGinnis' story was that Gov. Hendricks was bribed to become the president of the company by the gift of several shares and by lending it the influence of his name he was induced to purchase stock and found it anything but profitable. The other officers of the company—republican—stamped this charge as a fabrication and now his only remaining witness has gone back on him. We are not sorry to see the character of Gov. Hendricks put to any test which the ingenuity of malice or political enmity can suggest; it will shine all the brighter in contrast with the characters of the leaders of the republican party. Amid the moral wreck around us, we can still swear by our Tom. Hendricks.—[Goshen Democrat.

If Ames, Why not Grant.

The House of Representatives of Mississippi have presented articles of impeachment against Gov. Ames, "to the affect that in consideration of $2,800 paid to the Superintendent of the penitentiary, and $200 paid to a member of the Legislature, Gov. Ames pardoned one Alexander Smith sentenced to the penitentiary for life."

How is this? If Ames can be impeached for payments made to the Superintendent of the penitentiary and to a member of the Legislature, cannot Grant be impeached for payments made to his own brother, in compensation for appointments conferred by the President?

The truth is, there is evidence enough against Grant to impeach an ordinary man; but there is a very strong indisposition to impeach him except upon absolute and indisputable proof implicating him directly in crime. This feeling is attributable to the appreciation of Grant's military services, and it goes to show that, after all that has been said on the subject, republicans are not ungrateful. If it were not for what Gen. Grant did in the war, he would have compulsory leave from the White House within the next ninety days.—[N. Y. Sun.

Hark! the heavy footsteps and the busy buzz! The loud whispers and the persistent button-holing! The stir, the confusion, the "say, hold on," the patting on the back, the pulling back of coat tails, the worry, flurry and ceaseless hubbub! See the long line of candidates filing into the convention! How few there are who enter in theater who will not take two cents and three-quarters for themselves, when they come out! How many who went in to be sacrificed on the alter of their beloved country, will come out and, with a heavy sight, think kindly of their poor-relatives once more! Nomination deferred maketh the patriotic heart indisposed. Votes and vows sworn to many a time and oft, do nor pan out: for friends are not themselves, even, much less do they run a Republican county convention Some thing rotten in Denmark," friends and supporters are nowhere. There is a power in Wabash which shapes candidates' ends, "rough hew them as they will." Oh! the cruel disappointment of rising statesmanship, the ruthless nipping in the bud, the fruitless charge of old war horses of twenty political campaigns. It was ever so, gentlemen, the people do not appreciate the value of their future saviors. Revenge is yours, never offer yourselves to the again. THE NEW ENGLAND FLOODS.

Great Damage to Property, Loss of Life &c.

The New England States were visited with one of the most destructive floods ever known in that section of the country A Boston special dispatch, of last Monday, says the damage done by the freshet on Saturday over New England must have been $1,000,000, and perhaps a dozen lives were lost. Miniature Mill-River disasters were seen on all sides. At Clinton, Mossy pond, which furnishes a broad plateau of 150 acres, gave way and was soon drained. A tannery was knocked from its foundation, four tenement houses floated away, and 100 rods of fence and road were washed away. It is thought that $200,000 will hardly cover the damage. At Fullerville the wooden mill buildings were swept away and not a vestige left. The damage in the Shetucket, Quinebang and Yontie Valleys alone was hunderds of thousands. In Norwich the churches were deserted, and thousands were excitedly helping to save property. At the foot of Shetucket-street hill the water was two feet deep, and on the wharves themselves, ordinarily eight feet or more above the water, men were navigating in boats and on rafts. The Baltic dam gave way at about noon, and soon the stream began to rise rapidly, and on its foaming bosom came down dales of cotton, whisky barrels, a buzz-saw, and tables and all sorts of furniture. The water was thirteen inches higher than in the great flood of 1857, and five inches higher than in 1807, when there was a destuctive freshet at Baltimore. A boat was capsized and four lives lost at Versailles. The damage on the line of the Connecticut river was very much heavier then at first reported. The water was sixten feet above low-water mark. The meadows alongside the river are thoroughly flooded. The dam of the East Haddam Dock company was carried away, and the water took with it on its course the house of Mr. Moody, with all its contents, Mr. Moody barely escaping with his life. The large covered bridge at Leesville, East Haddam, costing $70,000 was also carried away. The dams of Savage & North and Stiles & Parker, Straddlehill, near Middeton, were also carried away, the damage being $5,000 at these two dams. The dam of the Billings & Whitney company at Rorck Hill, was also carried away, and with it the major part of the large machine shop, the loss being in the neighborhood of $8,000 or $10,000. Losses in the neighborhood of Clinton, Mass aggregate $350,000, and about Norwich Conn., Monday, five men were drowned by the washing away of a dam embankment which they were strengthening. The aggregate loss in New England is enormous.

At Lawrence, Mass., some 5,000 or 6,000 mill operatives were idle on Monday, owing to the stoppage of many mills in consequence of the unprecedented high water. All the mills along Speckel river are stopped. Serious damage has been done at several points, but fortunately the rivers are free from ice.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A BOLD attempt to rob the First National Bank of Chambersburg, Pa., was frustrated the other night. Two men entered the bank on a pretense of making a deposit, and when the cashier opened the safe they knocked him down, seized a $20,000 package, and attempted to escape. One of them stumbled, and fell down as he was making his exit, and was pounced upon and secured by a [illegible] darkey who happened to be passing. His confederate was pursued and captured twenty miles from Chambersburg, and all the money recovered. ....Ex-Gov. James G. Smith, of Rhode Island, is dead.

SEVERE storms and floods in the New England States have caused serious damage to mill property. At Burrillville, Conn., a mill and manufacturing property valued at over $200,000 were swept away. Some damage is also reported from New Jersey. At Canton, Worcester county, Mass., the Mossy Pond dam gave way, destroying much valuable mill property, and almost obliterating the manufacturing village of Fullerville. Fortunately, the loss of life was not large. It is estimated that the damage to property in New England by the freshet will reach $1,000,000.

FORTY miners left Scranton, Pa., the other day, for the Black Hills. They were accompanied to the depot by a brass band and a crowd of about 2,000 men, women and children. The gold-hunters were provided with arms, ammunition and mining implements, and were regularly officered.

CLAFLIN & Co.'s boot and shoe factory at Hopkinton, Mass., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $200,000.

WE have details of another great dam disaster in New England. At 6 o'clock on the morning of the 30th ult., the great dam at Worcester broke, letting loose the imprisoned waters, amounting in volume to 760,000,000 gallons. With a rush and roar that was heard for a great distance, the aqueous mountain rolled and spread itself out upon the valley below, carrying everything before it, and inflicting a loss of millions of dollars' worth of property. Fortunately no lives were lost, as the inhabitants of the valley had been fully warned, and had fled from the wrath to come.

THE WEST.

NEWS comes from the Black Hills, via Fort Laramie, of a fight between miners and Indians, on Deadwood creek, sixty miles north of Custer. The miners attacked the Indians and killed thirteen. One white man was killed. The Indians had been running off stock. More trouble is expected.

THE section of the expedition against the hostile Sioux which started out under Gen. Reynolds has returned to Fort Reno. It was successful in punishing one of the turbulent bands.

MORE snow fell in the Upper Missouri country during the month of March than was ever before known in the whole season....Advices from Fort Fetterman state that Gen. Crook's victory over Crazy Horse was a complete one, and that many of the Indians who escaped must starve, as all their provisions, ammunition, etc., were destroyed.

THE Cincinnati Price Current's twenty-annual exhibit of pork-packing in the West, shows the number of hogs packed the past winter to have been 4,880,135, a falling off of 636,090 compared with last year. Average net weight per hog, 217.71 pounds, an increase of 7.24 pounds, or 3.78 per cent. The total pounds of hogs show a falling off of 105,063,436 net weight, or a decrease of 9 per cent. The average yield of all kinds of lard per hog is 35.45 pounds, an increase of 1¼ pounds. Total pounds of lard 173,016,580 pounds, a decrease of 17,364,027 pounds, equivalent to 74,260 tierces, equal to 9¼ per cent. of the product.

A ST. LOUIS merchant named Roheffs attempted to commit suicide, the other day, by severing an artery in his wrist; but not dying speedily enough in that way, he hanged himself with a towel to the bed-post....Edwin Booth, the greatest of living tragedians, begins an engagement in Chicago on Monday, the 10th of April, and for four week's will occupy the stage of McVicker's theater, the leading place of amusement in that city, appearing in Richard I., King Lear, Much Ado About Nothing, Hamlet, Lady of Lyons, Richelieu, The Apostate, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, Henry VIII., Katherine and Petruchio, The Stranger, Othello, and Merchant of Venice.

SOUTH.

TWO BOLD highwaymen recently attacked a stage-coach between Austin and San Marcos, Texas, and compelled the driver to quit the road and drive into the woods, where the passengers, eight in number, were made to give up their money and watches. They then rifled the mail-pouches, took two of the stage-horses, cut the telegraph wire and left.

THE impeachment of Gov. Ames, of Mississippi, came to a sudden termination at Jackson the other day. A bargain was struck under which the Legislature rescinded the articles of impeachment, and thereupon the Governor resigned his office. The President of the Senate was at once installed as acting Governor. The Democrats, for the first time since the war, now have possession of the State.

WASHINGTON.

THE bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors for the next fiscal year, as prepared by a sub-committee of the House, calls for about $6,000,000....An indictment has been found by the Washington grand jury against Kilbourne, the real-estate pool man, for refusing to answer the questions of the House Committee....Mrs. Marsh, in her testimony before the Clymer committee, said she understood that the Fort Sill tradership was a matter between Mr. Marsh and Mrs. Belknap, and that the Secretary knew nothing about it, so far as she knew. She contradicted Pendleton in regard to his denying having gone to Europe with Mrs. Bowers and herself and her husband. They all went together, in June, 1871. She knew nothing about Pendleton's railroad claim, and had no knowledge that Mrs. Bowers received any part of it.

THE Committee on Military Affairs have agreed upon Representative Banning's bill, with some amendments, for the reorganization of the army. It does not reduce the present effective force of the army, but it reduces the number of infantry regiments from twenty-five to twenty, and the cavalry from ten to eight.

A RECENT Washington dispatch says: "Persons who have talked with the President lately say that he is very decided in his opinion that the resumption act should not be repealed; and he does not hesitate to say that if Congress should repeal the act he would interpose his veto. There is no probability of the Senate agreeing to repeal the act, even if the House should do so."

THE House Committee on Military Affairs has agreed to offer an amendment to the bill making reductions in the force of the United States army, looking to a discontinuance of the regiments of colored troops in the service. The existing law provides for the creation of colored regiments, the matter being left optional with the Secretary of War. The amendment which will be offered proposes to repeal this law.... Gen. Schenck has explained to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs his connection with the Emma mine. His friends express themselves satisfied with his explanation.

EX-CONGRESSMAN LUKE P. POLAND heads the Vermont Republican delegation at large to the Cincinnati Convention....The following ticket was nominated by the Ohio Republicans at their recent State convention: For Secretary of State, Milton M. Barnes, of Guernsey; Supreme Judge, W. W. Boynton, of Lorain; Member of the Board of Public Works, James C. Evans, of Delaware. A. Bohm and A. P. Perry were chosen for Presidential electors at large.

BLAINE's friends claim that fully two-thirds of the Pennsylvania delegation to Cincinnati are for him after Hartranft is withdrawn.

GENERAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says the House Committee on Military Affairs is pushing vigorously the headstone investigation. M. J. Walsh, of New York, one of the unsuccessful bidders, has testified that he submitted a bid to furnish the stones for soldiers' graves in the National cemetery for $723,000. The contract was awarded to one Bridges for $900,000, or $177,000 more than Walsh's figures in the schedule of bids made up in the Quartermaster's Department. Bridges' bid was not included, but after this schedule was sent to the Secretary of War it was inserted, and Bridges got the contract. Another witness testified that the night before the bids were to be opened Bridges showed him letters from Secretary Belknap, saying that if he (Bridges) got the contract he would be allowed to save considerable expense by abbreviating some words of the inscriptions on the headstones, and also that he would not be required to round the corners. It is a very ugly piece of business, and places Belknap in a worse light than the Marsh affair.

WHAT to do about Winslow is a question which threatens to cause a spirited controversy between Great Britain and the United States. England stands ready to surrender the Boston forger, but imposes as a condition that he shall be tried only for the crime for which he was extradicted—such being the provisions of a law enacted by Parliament in 1872. The United States, on the other hand, insist upon the strict observance of the treaty of 1842, and deny the power of Parliament to modify or alter its terms in the manner indicated without the concurrence of the United States. The British Government even goes so far as to require that Congress shall pass a corresponding law before Winslow is rendered up for extradition—a demand which will probably not be complied with... The Emperor and Empress of Brazil are now en route from Rio Janeiro to New York, where they are due the 20th of April. They will attend the opening ceremonies of the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition, after which they will make a tour of the United States.

THE Supreme court of the United States has reached a decision in the Grant parish, La., cases, which were carried from the Louisiana Circuit court for final determination. The lower court had decided that these cases did not properly come within the scope of the enforcement acts; that they related to offenses of which the State courts should take cognizance. In other words, it was intimated that offenses of a similar class have always been punishable under State laws in other sections of the Union. This ruling the Supreme court affirms in a lengthy decision, in which the whole subject of intimidation and election frauds is exhaustively treated.

THE Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church of the United States have appointed Friday, April 28, as a general day of fasting and prayer for the members of that denomination....Blair, who was kidnapped in Nebraska and run off to England, some months ago, on what appears to have been a trumped-up charge of felonious fraud, has been released by the British government, and is on his way back, breathing vengeance against the Chicago detectives who were concerned in the job.

POLITICAL.

THE Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune telegraphs that there is a prospect of union of sufficient number of Republicans and Democrats of the House upon the proposed non-partisan currency bill to secure its passage.

THE Rhode Island delegation to the Republican National Convention is pledged to support Senator Conkling for the Presidency.

REPUBLICAN State conventions were held in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Vermont on the 29th ult. In the first-named State the delegates to the National convention were instructed for Gov. Hartranft, Ohio declared for Gov. Hayes, while the Vermont delegation goes to Cincinnati unhampered, though they are understood to have a strong leaning toward Blaine and Bristow. The Pennsylvania platform is silent on the financial question, and calls for a higher tariff. The Ohio resolutions favor "a tariff for revenue, with incidental protection to American industry, recognize gold as the true standard of values, and the only steady and safe basis for a circulating medium, and declare that the policy of finance should be steadily pursued which, without unnecessary injury to business or trade, will ultimately equalize the value of the coin and paper dollar." The Vermont platform calls for a speedy return to specie payments.

IT is said Secretary Bristow has a great gun in reserve which he proposes shortly to fire, in the shape of terribly damaging exposure of corruption in the New York Custom House.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, March 24.—Senate.—The Chair laid before the Senate the House bill in relation to political contributions. On motion of Howe, it was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections....The bill to regulate the counting of the Presidential vote was passed—yeas, 31; nays, 26.

House.—The morning hour was devoted to a wrangle between the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Territories, as to a question of jurisdiction over the bill reported by the Indian Committee providing for the organization of the new Territory of Oklahoma, while the remainder of the day was devoted to the consideration of the General Appropriation bill.

MONDAY, March 27.—Senate.—The Chair laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War inclosing a communication from the Commissioner-general of Subsistence, asking for a deficiency appropriation of $200,000 for the subsistence of the army. Referred....The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was under consideration, and an amendment was adopted restoring to $17,500 each the salaries of the ministers to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia....Hamlin, from the Committee on Postoffices and Postroads, reported a bill fixing the rate of postage on third-class mail matter. It provides that the rate for third-class mail matter shall be one cent per ounce for any distance not exceeding 1,000 miles, and two cents per ounce for distances over 1,000 miles; and that transient newspapers and magazines shall pay postage for any distance at the rate of one cent for every three ounces, and one cent for each two ounces or fractional part of two ounces additional. ....Morton desired to call up his resolutions directing an investigation into the recent election in Mississippi, but the Senate refused—yeas, 26; nays, 31—to take them up for consideration....A resolution was adopted giving all Government employes a holiday on the 14th of April, the occasion of the inauguration of the Lincoln monument.

House.—A bill was introduced by Willis to restore the national credit by funding the non-interest bearing debt into 4 per cent. bonds, and to repeal so much of the Resumption act as requires the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem all outstanding legal tenders by January 1, 1879....A motion to suspend the rules and pass what is known as the Payne financial bill was defeated—yeas, 81, all Democrats; nays, 153, of whom 90 were Republicans and 63 Democrats.

TUESDAY, March 28.—Senate.—The proceedings in the Senate were destitute of interest. Three hours were spent in executive session on the nomination of Dana, but no action was taken.

House.—Holman offered a resolution fixing the compensation of witnesses summoned before the House Committee at $3 per day, and a mileage of five cents per mile. Referred....Hoar introduced a bill to permit the importation, free of duty, of books printed in any foreign language. Referred. ....Gordon offered a resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of preventing the use of the United States mails in carrying lottery advertisements. Adopted. ....Glover offered a resolution instructing the Sergeant-at-arms of the House not to deliver Hallett Kilbourne, the recusant real estate pool witness, to the custody of any person or any tribunal until the further order of the House. Adopted.

WEDNESDAY, March 29.—Senate.—The Diplomatic Appropriation bill, with every item of reduction made by the House restored to the old standard, was passed....The bill for the transfer of all the Indian trust funds from the personal custody of the Secretary of the Interior to the care of the United States Treasury was also passed.

House.—A resolution was adopted authorizing the Speaker to appoint one additional member to each of the committees on Territories, Indian Affairs and Public Lands from among the delegates from the Territories....Bills were passed providing for the expenses of the admission of foreign goods to the Centennial exhibition; providing that unused stamps shall be redeemed when properly presented; and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convert into coupon bonds five per cent. of the registered bonds necessary to pay the judgments of the Alabama Claims Commission....A resolution was adopted fixing the compensation of witnesses summoned to appear before the committees of the House at $3 per day, and allowing five cents per mile for mileage....The House considered, without action, the bill to regulate the pay of army officers, the bill for the issue of silver coin instead of fractional currency, and the General Appropriation bill.

THURSDAY, March 30.—Senate.—The Senate discussed, during the morning hour, the bill making silver coin a legal tender to the amount of $5, without reaching a vote, after which Morton's Mississippi resolutions engrossed the attention of the grave and reverend Senators. There was a heated debate between Bayard and Boutwell, but no action was taken on the resolutions.

House.—A bill was passed directing naval estimates to be made in detail, under various heads of expenditure....Faulkner, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, concerning citizenship, and to define certain rights of United States citizens in foreign countries....Campbell (Ill.) introduced a bill for a commission to investigate the subject of wages and hours of labor, and of the division of the joint profits of labor and capital between the laborer and capitalist, and the social, educational, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes of the United States....The impeachment articles against ex-Secretary Belknap were presented in the House by the Judiciary Committee. They are five in number, as follows: The first charges Belknap with receiving money corruptly while in office. The second charges bribery as defined by statute. The third charges the payment of money to Belknap for continuing corrupt persons in office. The fourth charges him with receiving gifts while in office to influence him corruptly. The fifth charges Belknap with taking money corruptly for the use of himself and others. The committee also reported the following resolution: Resolved, That seven managers be appointed by ballot to conduct the impeachment exhibited against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War of the United States. The report was made the special order for Saturday, April 1.

A Fish's Vitality Illustrated.

The Miner, of Georgetown, Idaho Territory, relates the following: "Some three months ago the man in charge of Mr. Cushman's fish-breeding house removed all the fish from a box except one, which was inadvertently left. The water in the box froze, and the fish was encased in the ice, and remained in this condition nearly three months, when the ice was thawed and the fish came out alive. The other fish have grown considerable during this period, and have silvery scales, but this little fellow is of just the same size and color as he was when the frost chilled his blood."

THE right to print and sell the official catalogue of the Centennial Exposition has been bought for $100,000; $40,000 is paid for the right to establish restaurants in the main building; soda water privileges bring the finance board $52,000; cigar stands $18,000, and it is estimated that with a royalty on beer of $3 a barrel, $50,000 will be realized.

THE PIERREPONT LETTER.

The Attorney-general's Explanation of How It Came to be Written and Published.

Attorney General Pierrepont was examined by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives the other day in regard to the alleged Executive interference with the late crooked-whisky trials in the West. Pierrepont's account of his circular letter to District-attorneys is that the President was very much disturbed at the constant receipt of newspaper slips, and letters, and personal statements, giving information of attempts on the part of Government officials in the West to compromise fraud on the revenue, and that the President spoke to him on five or six different occasions expressing his fear that such things, if allowed, would bring scandal on the administration. Pierrepont himself was rather inclined to treat these statements as exaggerations, and did not believe that District-attorneys or special counsel of the Government would be guilty of anything improper in the matter. He had, therefore, rather warded off the President's advances until finally the President suggested that the Attorney-general had better write to the District-attorneys on the subject. Pierrepont had, therefore, prepared and forwarded a letter couched, as he said, in terms that were rather tame. Nobody had made a draught of this letter, and he had not submitted it to the President; in fact, the President knew nothing of it for three or four days afterward, when he asked Pierrepont whether he had taken any action in the matter, and then he told him he had written this letter, and he sent him a copy of it. A couple of days afterward, on discovering that the letter had been published in Chicago papers on the 1st of February, himself and Mr. Bristow expressed great indignation in the presence of the President at the gross impropriety of giving publicity to it, and then the President, who did not manifest any feeling whatever on the subject, remarking that he had never read the letter.

Pierrepont further stated that Gen. Babcock admitted to him on the 3d of March that he was instrumental in giving publicity to the letter, and defended himself on the ground that they were trying to destroy him, and that he had the right to defend himself. He (Pierrepont) called the President's attention, the next day, to Babcock's admission.

The committee wanted to know why Babcock did not call for a court of inquiry to ascertain whether he had been guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman; whether he was still Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, etc., but Pierrepont was unable to give information on those points.

Ladies' Summer Styles.

Mrs. Mary Gordon Gray writes from New York about the coming styles of clothing for the summer:

Last summer everybody decked herself out in a suit of plaid wool goods, which, though soft and light, were certainly warm in July and August. For two or three years previous, heavy gros grain silks and the useful but inexpressibly warm grenadines, solid black and heavily trimmed, were the regulation costumes for fashionably attired ladies, no matter what the thermometer might indicate, or how imminent the danger of hydrophobia. True, black grenadine will probably be the standard dress for summer again, particularly for large cities, but it will be used largely for visiting and church, while cool, pretty cambrics, percales and ginghams or the delightfully simple old-fashioned lawns and organdies, will be seen for less dressy occasions.

To meet the increased demand for wash goods, American manufacturers have quite surpassed themselves, and given us the most refined and choice variety of calicoes, cambrics and percales ever put into market. Not only in quality and finish do these goods excel those of former years, but in combinations of color and pattern, some of them being really artistic. When it is added that good calico can be bought for six cents, and that the choicest of prints command only eight and ten cents per yard; that very pretty percales are retailing at twelve cents, and that all cotton goods are reduced to surprisingly low prices, it needs no elaboration of speech to prove that economy promises to be a possibility in the dressing for 1876.

Furnishing houses are already busy preparing suits for spring, and it is pleasant to find that simplicity will be a prominent feature of these wash dresses. The prediction that overskirts would be entirely abandoned this season for simple suits appears without foundation, though the tendency is strongly toward polonaises and long "Princesse" habits for rich materials.

Mr. Skidmore's Bugle.

Mr. Peter Skidmore, of Germantown, plays a little on the bugle. One night last summer he went into the parlor in the dark and felt over the top of the piano for the horn. It happened that his aunt from Penn's Grove had been there that day and had left her brass ear-trumpet lying on the piano, and Peter got hold of this without perceiving the mistake, as the two were of similar shape. He took it in his hand and went out on the porch, where Miss Mills was sitting talking to his sister. He asked Miss Mills if she was fond of music on the horn, and when she said she adored it, he asked her how she would like him to play "Ever of Thee," and she said that was the only tune she cared anything for.

So Peter put the small end of the trumpet to his lips and blew. He blew and blew. Then he blew some more, and then he drew a fresh breath and blew again. The only sound that came was a kind of hollow moan, which sounded so queerly in the darkness that Miss Mills asked him if he was not well. And when he said he was, she said that he went exactly like a second cousin of hers that had the asthma.

Then Peter remarked that somehow the horn was out of order for "Ever of Thee," but if Miss Mills would like to hear "Sweetly I Dreamed, Love," he would try to play it; and Miss Mills said that the fondest recollections clustered about that melody.

So Peter put his trumpet to his lips again and strained his lungs severely in an effort to make some music. It wouldn't come, but he made a very singular noise, which induced Miss Mills to ask if the horse in the stable back of the house had heaves. Then Peter said he thought somebody must have plugged the bugle up with something, and he asked his sister to light the gas in the entry while he cleaned it out. When she did so the ear trumpet became painfully conspicuous, and both the girls laughed. When Miss Mills laughed, Peter looked up at her with pain in his face, put on his hat and went out into the street, where he could say over some sensational language to himself.

He is courting another girl now, and learning to play on the piano.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Centennial Fiend.

It was only half an hour before the paper went to press, but he walked unerringly into the editor's private room and, dropping his hat over the warning placard of "Busy Day—Short Calls," seated himself with easy bar-room politeness on the table with the exchanges. He was dressed in an Ulster and soiled ruffled shirt, wore an amethyst about the size of a hock glass on his third finger and cluster pin in his bosom. He took a "seven-for-a-quarter" cigar from his mouth and, placing it on the editor's inkstand, remarked confidentially:

"I am going to spend some time this year—"

The editor clutched his pen like a dagger, and pawing after the few hairs on the top of his head, said—

—"in Philadelphia"—

The young man spat gracefully over his left shoulder on the new carpet, and responded—

"Yes, I've done a little writin' in my day, and bein' disengaged this summer should like to send a first-class journal like yours"—

The editor fell back in his chair, and gasped—

—"some letters about the Centennial."

The interviewer nodded and kicked his No. 11s pensively against the veneered panels of the desk.

"Would you like to be packed in ice until your friends call for you?" said the editor, gloomily, "or shall we forward your remains in an air-tight casket?"

Then gazing sorrowfully at the young man he put his mouth to a speaking tube and asked—

"Are any of the pressmen at hand?"

Promptly wafted through the tin tube came the reply—

"Red Mike and Big Dan, sir."

The would-be correspondent started up aghast, put his hat on, wrong side in front, and buttoned the third button of his coat into the second button-hole; but the newspaper man, taking no more notice of him than he would of a dead head advertisement, breathed through the tube—

"Give 'em a quarter apiece and let them come up here. Tell them there is another of those Philadelphia Centennial fellows here, and then pull in a district telegraph boy and send for a hearse."

Before the last words were in the speaking-tube the tails of the Ulster coat sailed out of the private office, and a nervous young man, after trying the door of the coat room and diving into the coal closet, reached the counting room door, looked over his shoulder at two brawny Milesians who had just descended from some upper region, missed his footing for a dozen stairs, accented his descent with a heavy bump on the first landing, and reached the street as the editor wrote the last word of an article on "the business outlook" and calmly sent it whirring up in the box to the composition-room.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Amusing the Prince---Curious Scenes.

Dr. Russell, in one of his letters from India to the London Times, writes: Some curious things have been seen in Nepaul. To-day the Prince crossed the Sardan and visited Junge Bahadoor's camp. He was shown an enormous boa constrictor, which was dug out of its hole in a lethargic state and roused to some sort of life by buckets of water poured down its throat, which it scornfully ejected. It was as thick as a nine-pounder, and some eighteen feet long, and it seemed an amiable reptile; but close at hand, coiled round a branch of a tree, was another python, which was of more evil disposition, for when Jung Bahadoor sent up a man to cut the branch, so that the serpent fell with a heavy thud to the ground, it raised its head menacingly and moved over once or twice as if to attack, but eventually coiled itself round the branch, and, like a true philosopher, went to sleep. The collection of living birds given by Jung Bahadoor to the Prince of Wales is most interesting and complete. It comprises many Impeyan pheasants, which the Nebaulese call "duffs," and argus, which they call "monal," the name by which the former are known by us, Kaleege, Cogplass and Shickore jungle fowl, in addition to other animals of all kinds, and a delightful little elephant, which the Prince rides as a pony, and which takes up his whip, salaams and performs many tricks. There was also a novel exhibition in fishing to vary the amusements. Elephants were sent into a pool, at each end of which were upright nets. Outside these nets were rafts of reeds, on which men sat. The fish, driven up the nets by the elephants, leaped clear over, but fell on the rafts, where they were knocked on the head by the men.

A Wrecked Train.

The notorious George Francis Train has gone into bankruptcy. In his schedule of assets are the following curious items: Claim against the British Government, $1,000,000; claim against the Home Railroad Company, of Birkenhead, England, $1,000,000; claim for aiding in the construction of the Union Pacific railroad, $300,000; claim against James McHenry, for negotiating the bonds of the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad Company, $500,000; claim for exposing the Beecher-Tilton scandal, $100,000; claim against the city of New York for false imprisonment, $1,000,000; 5,000 lots in Omaha and Chicago, $10,000,000; various other claims against governments and lots throughout the United States amounting to $3,000,000.

A RETURNED Californian met a widow in Council Bluffs, courted her up in an hour, married her before noon, and took her east in the evening.

HOME FROM THE HILLS.

A Returned Prospectors' Account of the New Gold Fields—Work Stopped by Fathomless Snows.

A correspondent writing from Lincoln, Neb., says several parties residing near there have just returned from the Black Hills, with one of whom he had a conversation and obtained the following information:

"The men belonged to a party of fifty who went out to the mining region at the Black Hills about four months ago. They bring back samples of gold which I saw, and which old miners say is the finest gold ever dug. On account of the deep snow, they were eighteen days on the road. The gentleman with whom I conversed, Mr. William Wright, says there is gold there, and it is going to take work to get it out. He did not prospect much, as the snow was too deep for successful work. The Hills are mainly occupied by old miners, who are working very hard. They have to thaw out the ground by burning logs, and then they gather up the dirt and carry it to the water, where they wash it out. The gold is of the finest quality—all coarse gold. There are now about 15,000 men in the Hills. The roads from the south are crowded with miners and their families going in. Men, women and children are on the route. Custer City now contains about thirty dwelling cabins and two stores.

Flour is worth $28 per cwt., and scarce. Sugar sells at $1 per pound; bear meat from 15 to 18 cents per pound, and venison five cents per pound. There is no bacon to be had, but plenty of bear meat and venison. There is plenty of grass, but it is covered by such a wilderness of snow that the animals cannot get at it. The snow is of almost incredible depth. A ten days' snow storm ended on the 26th of February, and Mr. Wright thought it was not worth his while to remain there any longer at that time, and so came out to await the coming of better weather. In the gulches there are from six to eight feet of ice, which must melt out before work can begin.

The four men in returning from the Hills, met a squad of Indians at the base of the foot hills, had a fight with them, killed four and got their horses, Henry rifles and equipments. They also met a squad at the White river, but as the party were mounted this time, they got out of the way. At Turtle creek they run upon another squad, and one gun was fired, but Mr. Wright's party took the back track and made their escape. After that they saw none but friendly Indians. The hostile Indians are Brules and Spotted Tail's warriors.

Mr. Wright says they had much trouble from snow in coming home. They were obliged to come out on foot, as the snow about the foot hills was very deep. The snow decreased in depth as they journeyed onward toward civilization. He advises all contemplating a visit to the Hills, to wait until the 1st of June. The rivers which are now full will be run down by that time and traveling will be easy. He recommends men going now to take several extra sacks of flour and additional provisions. He is bound to return, and says he expects to make it pay well.

Secretary Bristow.

In striking contrast to the usual Washington display one finds Secretary Bristow quietly living in a house on K street which is by no means spacious or splendid. Now and then he gives a quiet dinner to a few friends, and Mrs. Bristow has held her regular Wednesday receptions; but there has never been any attempt at show, any apparent desire to rival or outshine others. Yet Mrs. Bristow is an heiress in her own right to hundreds of thousands; she is universally admired and dearly loved by all who know her; so it is not quite necessary to be dishonest. There is only this fact. Where social position and dignity are a matter of heritage; where the signet of refinement and honor is legibly written, and the consciousness of their possession innate, there is very little thought given to outward assertion of pre-eminence. In carrying out our beloved republicanism we are too apt to forget this; we like to sneer at the old phrase, "noblesse oblige;" we like to assert that one man is as good as another, if not a little better, till some day, when we have exalted our pet ideas into practical demonstration, we find the demonstration tumbling before us.—Washington Letter.

THE London papers call him Israel Winslow. That is not 'Israel name.—Graphic.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

A Spring Song.

Blithely breaks the morning
  With a warmer beam;
Now, O Earth, awaken
  From thy winter dream!
From some land of beauty,
  Where the swallow's wing
Rests on balmiest zephyrs,
  Comes the radiant spring.

Odorous southern breezes
  With her garlands play,
And the sullen snow-clouds
  Slowly drift away.
In the woods and valleys
  Water softly flows,
And its silvery murmurs
  Greet her as she goes.

By the budding hedgerows,
  Through the meadows sweet,
Bright-eyed, starry daisies
  Springing round her feet,
With the fragrant violets
  To her warm lips prest,
And the timid snowdrops
  Nestling in her breast.

Many a shrinking flow'ret
  From its nook she wiles
With her tears, more precious
  Than her sunniest smiles.
Quickly will the forest
  Weave a leafy maze,
Ere the sun can seek them
  With too ardent gaze.

Haste then, Earth, arouse thee!
  Bid thy wild birds sing;
Let them give a welcome
  To the gentle spring!

Around the Farm.

Turn the wash from the public roads into the fields where it can be made to spread over and fertilize as much surface as possible.

Scatter your coal ashes under the plum and cherry trees from two to three inches thick and as far out as the limbs extend, and you will find it a great preventive to the ravages of the curculio. Also, mulch the currant and gooseberries heavy with it.

Death to cattle is often caused by dry leaves, husks and stalks of the cornfield, eaten in immoderate quantities. As long as corn is found on the stalks in the fields in considerable quantities or is fed daily, there is no danger, since this produces proper secretion and keeps the alimentary canal moving. Plenty of water is also a safeguard.

Poultry.—It is now time to set hens for early chickens. Warm corners in the stables or barns may be appropriated for this purpose where the other poultry are not permitted to go. The nest box may be carried there quietly at night and the hen left undisturbed. The advantage of having loose nest boxes is, that the box and the occupant may be removed to wherever it is to remain.

Don't Pick Over Apples.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says: "We are never too old to learn. For years I practiced picking all my apples two or three times during the winter, and flattered myself that I was very discreet in so doing. Last year I had a good many, and grew slack in my duty, being very busy about many things, and never touched them only as we used them. They kept until July, and were in splendid order."

Water in Winter.—Cows giving milk need an abundance of water. The dry hay usually given affords little material for milk, and even with abundance of roots, unless water is placed within easy reach, cows will tend to fatten rather than to milk production. A great difficulty in cold weather is in having water so far from the yard that cows will suffer long before going from comfortable quarters to reach it. Whenever possible a cistern should be constructed under the barn or under ground to hold water for stock.

Compare Notes.—The object of farming is profit. Whatever does not conduce to this is of no account; and the art of agriculture resolves itself into the one question, what will pay best? The experience of a single individual upon a single farm is not sufficient to settle the principles of practice. There are no two farms precisely alike, and what would be a good system to practice upon one, might be exceedingly bad upon the other; therefore, we cannot take the experience of a single individual upon a single farm, but the safe guide is the united experience of all who have been intelligent observers. — Centre-Union Agriculturist.

Good Garden Walks.—Dig out the soil the width of the walk, and to a depth of about two and a half feet. At this begin by laying a foundation layer of large stones, fitted closely together. A second layer, smaller in size, should follow the first, and so on, laying each succeeding layer of stones smaller in size than the preceding one, until the space is filled nearly level with the surrounding surface. A top coating of coarse cinders, and these covered with a few inches in depth of gravel and fine sand, will complete the job, and will give a substantial walk, that will always be dry under foot. It will improve the walk and the appearance at the same time, if the clinkers and the sand on the top are rolled down firmly; and in the course of a week or two, when the material settles, it may be found necessary to add some more gravel and sand, to even the surface.—Scribner.

We never knew a farmer to take an ax or a beetle and go round and break a wheel here and knock in a brace there, and crack this section and clip that one, among his farm machines, wagons, and implements—that is, unless he was drunk! But some of them—pretty good farmers, too, in most things—get about the same results in a roundabout way. They stow the mowing machine in a leaky shed, where it is used as a turkey roost, the lighter instruments are stowed away where the cattle knock them down and break them; the carriage and harness are kept where the stable fumes spoil the varnish; and a general slipshod style knocks off fifty per cent. from the value of the farming equipment. The farmer who "keeps things ship-shape" is generally the thriving man. "Down-at-the-heelativeness" will spread the blank-frost of a mortgage over a farm nearly as quick as rum drinking.—The Golden Rule.

About the House.

An excellent remedy for sore mouth is sage tea, sweetened with honey. It is good for chapped lips.

Sponge Pudding.—Three eggs, the weight of the eggs in butter, sugar and flour. One teaspoonful of cream of tartar, and half a teaspoonful of soda. Is best with wine sauce.

Caledonian Cream.—The whites of two eggs, two spoonfuls of loaf sugar, two of raspberry jam, two of currant jelly; all to be beaten together until so thick the spoon will stand alone in it.

A Good Hair Oil.—Take lard and castor oil, in equal parts, flavored with bitter almonds. It is very good. A pint of sage tea, with a gill of bay rum, tablespoonful of salt, and a dozen drops of ammonia, is as good a remedy for falling hair as exists. Change the parting often; never tie the hair or screw it up with pins. Never wear false braids. In a word, treat your hair sensibly, and it will not be likely to desert you.

In case a knife or fork handle gets loose, set the handle upon end, fill the cavity with pulverized rosin, then warm the small part of the knife or fork and insert it slowly, crowd it down firmly and hold it in right position until the rosin cools enough to set. As rosin is not soluble in water, hot or cold, the knives are not loosened. Where ivory handles have become yellow they may be restored by soaking a few hours in a watery solution of sulphurous acid. The acid in a gaseous state should not be used, as it will be likely to make the handles crack.

Caramels.—One-quarter pound of scraped chocolate, one pound of brown or white sugar, four tablespoonfuls of molasses, one cup of milk, and a piece of butter size of an egg rolled in flour. Put all the ingredients in a kettle except the chocolate, and when boiling add that. Boil until it becomes crisp when dropped into water. Then pour in buttered dishes, and when cold cut in squares. The caramels should be stirred after the chocolate is put in.

To Remove Rust from Steel.—Dinner knives sometimes get rusty and may be brightened by covering with sweet oil; let it stand for forty-eight hours and rub with unslaked lime, or powdered brick. A fine grain red brick, finely powdered, is good for polishing knives. Whiting is an excellent article for cleaning and polishing silver, brittania, tin, etc., when properly used, making it look almost like new. They should first be rubbed with it wet, then polished with it dry.

A Domestic Sorrow.

Here is a characteristic conversation which occurred some time since between a certain Mrs. Smith and a Mrs. Jones. The husbands of both belong to the Blank Club, and upon a certain occasion the two wives met and talked over their grievances. Said Mrs. Jones: "My dear, do you know that I am unhappy?"

"No, dear, I had not the remotest idea of anything of that kind. You are living in such luxury and ease that I supposed you to be the happiest of mortals."

"Oh, no, I never think of that, for I am too, too unhappy."

"What makes you so unhappy?"

"Oh, never mind, dear; it does not concern any one in the world but myself; but I am dreadfully unhappy. I suppose that I am the most unhappy person who lives."

"Do tell me what it is."

"Well, my dear, if you will know, it is this: My husband goes out and stays all night long at the club and plays cards. Ain't that dreadful?"

Mrs. Smith gazed at Mrs. Jones very calmly and placidly and pityingly, and then remarked: "My dear Mrs. Jones, I was absolutely frightened; I was alarmed. I shuddered for fear you were about to relate some terrible mystery. You are not half as unhappy as I am. I am the most unhappy, miserable woman that ever lived."

"What!" said Mrs. Jones, "you unhappy, and so much admired and caressed by society."

"Yes; the most heart-broken woman you ever knew."

"What can be the cause of this?"

"Well, I'll tell you, my dear. You see my husband goes out and stays all night, and—well, he stays all night and tries to play cards, but can't. Those other fellows beat him every night."—Boston Courier.

National Centennial Items.

Twelve men have been killed at the Centennial buildings in three months.

Four pictures from the Munich Art Gallery will be sent to the Exhibition.

The Sunday question is still being agitated in connection with the Centennial.

The foreign exhibitors, as a general rule, bring their own show-cases with them.

An area of 558,440 feet, or nearly thirteen acres, is covered by Machinery Hall.

A colossal statue of Prince Bismarck will be exhibited in the German Art Department.

The Women's Pavilion is about finished, except some slight ornamentation and painting.

The exhibition of the Argentine Republic at Philadelphia will consist of 20,000 articles.

Prominent among the German collection of paintings will be scenes from the Franco-Prussian war.

A fancy pavilion occupies Spain's space in the main building, and is fully prepared for the arrangement of articles for exhibition.

The kingdoms of the Netherlands will exhibit 1,850 books published during the recent years on educational topics alone.

Thirty Indian families, with their dogs, trappings and paraphernalia, will encamp on the Centennial grounds, under the direction of Prof. Baird.

Specimens of the engine and other machinery used in propelling a man-of-war will shortly be sent to the Exposition grounds from the Washington navy yard.

An English newspaper writer describes New Orleans as a city of many tongues, and pays its people a fine compliment by declaring that a lady may walk alone by day or night from one end of the city to the other and not be insulted.

INDIANA ITEMS.

Maples is the name of a brand-new but aspiring city of Allen county. It already has 200 inhabitants, a blacksmith shop, and a Methodist church.

Harry Noble, one of the oldest printers of Richmond, formerly editor of the Volks Zeitung, more recently connected with the Daily Independent, died at his residence a few nights since.

James McAlilly, of Williamsport, has brought suit against Marsh Nixon, a grain dealer residing in Veedersburg, Fountain county, for false imprisonment, placing his damages at $5,000.

The Commissioners of Lagrange county, at their last session, granted licenses to certain parties to sell intoxicating liquors as a beverage. These are the first licenses in twenty years.

Clinton Blake, of Indianapolis, a young man, was run over by a train the other night while drunk and crushed into a shapeless mass. He was a member of one of the oldest families in the city.

The wife of Ezekial Farmer, who lives near Booneville, went out to milk the cows Wednesday evening of last week, and fell dead. When the body was discovered it had been nearly devoured by hogs.

W. A. Palmer, a justice of the peace, at South Bend, who was charged with the shooting of Chas. J. Murray, editor of the Hera d, last November, with intent to commit murder, has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

Bart Aikman, a young man of Clinton, has gone crazy, and his insanity manifests itself in a desire to bury himself. The yard surrounding his father's house is full of holes which he has dug for the purpose of planting himself in them.

Adam D. Raab and Richard Morton, of Lafayette, have brought suit against the Baltimore and Ohio railroad for $100,000 damages, alleged to have resulted from neglect to promptly deliver several hundred thousand bushels of corn.

The number of hogs slaughtered at Indianapolis the present season up to the first of March was 323,184, being an increase of 44,845 over last year, the average price being $7.20, against $6.60 last year, and $4.25 the year before. The wheat receipts for 1875 were 890,335 bushels; corn, 10,710,570; oats, 2,543,323; flour manufactured, 140,000 barrels; receipts, 921,160 barrels.

Eichel & Co.'s tobacco warehouse at Evansville was burned on the 29th ult. There were 450,000 pounds of stripped tobacco in the house—all destroyed. The building was three stories, and is a total loss; $40,000 on stock and $8,000 on building. This firm purchased almost the entire crop of the surrounding counties, and were the largest dealers in that section. The house employed about forty people.

Puardue University at Lafayette, which has just elected a new president in the person of the Hon. E E. White, of Ohio, is a young institution, having been founded but two years ago. It received the land grant of the State of Indiana and a gift of $150,000 from the Hon. John Puardue, and other large gifts of money and land have been added by the State and county. The endowment fund amounts to $370,000, besides which it owns a farm of 186 acres of land, buildings erected at a cost of $150,000, and a fund of $75,000 that can be used for building and other improvements. It is said that the new president will enlarge the course of study by adding several special schools of science.

Tom Barker, who was sentenced to the penitentiary from Hamilton county for two years for grand larceny, but was afterward granted a new trial by the Supreme court, and on a change of venue went to Madison county, which resulted in a commutation of his sentence to thirty days in the county jail, has made a confession on his death-bed of the murder of Mrs. Foulke over a year ago, at which time her husband, Amasa Foulke, was arrested for wife murder, tried and sentenced to prison for life, but acquitted upon the second trial. It seems that Barker was one of the number who attempted to rob Amasa Foulke on that eventful night, and Barker shot Mrs. Foulke to prevent her giving the alarm, he fearing that she had recognized him.

The Supreme court has just made a ruling in reference to suits on mortgages, which is of great interest to all property-owners. It is this: In a foreclosure suit it is necessary, in order to secure a a perfect title, not only to make all persons holding subsequent judgments and mortgages of record parties, but also all persons holding any of the notes secured by such mortgages, although there is no assignment of record showing by whom such notes are held. And, unless this is done, the holder of any such note may, at any time within fifteen years at least after the sale, redeem the property by paying to the owner the amount of the mortgage and interest under which the property was sold at sheriff's sale, after deducting therefrom the value of the use or rent of the property for the time between such sale and redemption.

Gov. Hendricks has written the following letter of commendation for a citizen of Indiana who designs to go to the Centennial exhibition afoot: "Mr. G. W. Deitz, of New Albany, in this State, informs me that he is desirous to visit Philadelphia on the occasion of the Centennial exhibition, soon to be opened in that city, and that he may be recognized as a respectable and worthy citizen of the State, asks a letter of recommendation from the Governor. Mr. Deitz will be seventy-eight years of age on the 26th of next month, and proposes to make his journey on foot, leaving his home at New Albany on the first day of May thereafter. He informs me that he came to Indiana Territory in 1807, and during the sixty-nine years since that time has resided in Clark and Floyd counties. Identified with the entire history of our now prosperous State, he should receive proper recognition as one of her representatives at the approaching reunion, and the novelty of his undertaking should commend him to the interests and kind offices of those whom he may meet in his long journey. I take pleasure in recommending him to all who may read this letter."

The Correctional Tribunal of Rouen has just been called upon to decide a case which has settled a long-disputed question, viz., whether selling skimmed milk was a breach of the law. The court decided in the affirmative, declaring that milk without its cream must be considered as adulterated.

Gentlemen's Fashions.

SCARFS.

Flat scarfs are becoming very popular. At present most of them are dark in color and intended to be worn with a light pin in the center; but as spring advances, lighter shades will be worn.

GLOVES.

Gentlemen's gloves will be worn with one or two buttons. The glove stores present a great variety of shades and colors sufficient to match any suit or harmonize with complexion. A new shade of lavender, very light, and a peculiar shade of brown known as "chevrette," are selling rapidly. Most gloves are stitched or braided on the back. Some heavy braids in fancy colors are favored by purchasers.

HATS.

The spring style of silk hat is an improvement over previous fashions, being less bell-crowned and heavy in appearance than the hat worn during the fall and winter. Seen from the side it lessens in size slightly toward the top, while a front view discloses a slight outward curve. The brim is narrow with a rolling or very narrow D'Orsay curve. For elderly gentlemen or for gentlemen with full faces the brim is a little wider. Stiff felt hats are much worn. Their brims are usually narrow, the crowns generally rounded and not so deep as for winter hats. Besides black and other dark colors, there are mixed grays and browns to match the spring styles of walking suits. There are many styles of soft felt hats, ranging from those with a wide brim and tall crown to the more common low-crowned hats worn by boys. The light shades of silk hats will not be found in the hat store until the middle of May.

EXIT BOOTS.

Fashionable shoemakers say that boots have gone entirely out of fashion, and are now worn only by a set of old gentlemen who disregard both comfort and style in their preference for them. Buttoned gaiters have been worn almost exclusively by fashionable men during the winter, but as the weather grows warmer, the Oxford tie will be the favorite shoe. The style is plain, with rounded toe of medium breadth, a little narrower than for the winter, broad, low heel and a single sole of medium thickness, which gives the shoe a solid but very neat appearance, and makes it very comfortable for the foot.

A Japanese View of the Belknap Scandal.

Mr. Lanmas, the Japanese Charge d'Affaires, told the story of Belknap's fall while seated at dinner to several of the Japanese students and attaches sent over to this country to learn our language and our modes of government. A death-like silence ensued for some moments, only looks of horror and amazement being exchanged between these so-called half-civilized beings. When they recovered from the first effects of the shock, they burst out into a perfect volley of reproach and disgust upon any man so lost to honor as to accept any bribe while discharging the duties of his high and responsible office. "We care not," said one almond-eyed child of the Orient, "to copy your government if this be the outgrowth of republican principles. We very much think we shall be called home when this news reaches Japan, for do you not say in your proverbs, 'Evil communications corrupt good manners?' No, you may think our country much behind yours in the arts and science, in the modes of government, etc., but such conduct in positions of trust is a thing unknown in Japan. We will go home satisfied to be as we have always been." And the poor fellows could actually eat no didner, so disturbed were they over the news.—Washington Correspondence of the Cincinnati Gazette.

Don Carlos in England.

A London letter of March 6 says: "Don Carlos with his suite, leaving Boulogne on Saturday morning, landed at Falkestone that afternoon; was insulted by an unmannerly mob who had gathered on the quay; came up to London in a saloon-car provided for him; was received at Charing Cross by a tolerably large and very enthusiastic crowd of Spaniards and Englishmen, and is now at Brown's hotel, Dover street, where he will remain for some time. Everyone who sees him is charmed with him, he is such a magnificent fellow physically, being over six feet tall. His would-be majesty has a little business to transact here. His long campaign has not been carried on for nothing. Money was needed and money was had, and now Don Carlos has come to pay up. That royal cousin of his who died not long ago left him the comfortable sum of $40,000,000; his debts amount to only about $5,000,000; he can pay everything and have plenty left. He may put his money in the consols and have an income of more than $1,000,000 a year. This sum, with thrift, will enable him to live very comfortably. It would be very easy, now, to paint a picture of the misery he has inflicted on Spain, and of the cold-blooded selfishness he has shown in protracting a hopeless contest."

Phenomenal Weather.

The West and South have just now been visited by snow storms more severe than have been known there for years. At Memphis, where the Mississippi never freezes, and where the carnival has just been celebrated amid the brightest, clearest, and balmiest of weather, there was a snow storm which covered the ground to a depth of ten inches, and to the southward for an unknown distance the telegraph lines are prostrate. From Ohio and Arkansas the heaviest fall of snow for years is reported, so that business is suspended and trains seriously delayed. Meteorologically this winter has been remarkable in all parts of the world. In Europe there have been storms of snow in most unusual places; the severest cold has alternated with unseemly warmth; torrents of water have fallen, and great rivers have overflowed their banks. In this country the weather has been remarkably mild, but with sudden and violent changes like those now noticed.—New York Graphic.

MEXICO'S REVOLUTION.

The Causes That Led to the Present Outbreak—The Overthrow of Lerdo Foreshadowed.

The New Orleans correspondent of the Chicago Times telegraphs to that journal the following interesting particulars regarding the formidable insurrection now in progress in our neighboring republic of Mexico:

"From passengers just arrived here by steamship from Mexico, much of interest is learned concerning the revolution in that republic. They say the revolution has astonished everyone by the absence of violence and bloodshed, and by the extraordinary rapidity with which it has succeeded. No one familiar with the condition of affairs in that country has much doubt of the overthrow of the present government, headed by President Lerdo de Tejado. The existing administration has represented the moderate party in Mexico, a policy which exposed it to the hostility of the church, already stripped of $100,000,090 of property, and which in the last year has witnessed the exclusion of some of its orders. Besides the descendants of the States strongly under religious influence, the present government incurred the hostility of the red or most radical republicans, who, far from being satisfied with the changes or reforms already made, demanded many others still more sweeping. They, besides, accused the present government of fanaticism and corruption, and, what to them is a still more serious charge, that of keeping a great many leaders out of office who want to be in. The opposition in the city of Mexico has for more than a year been extremely rancorous and active, as expressed in the journals and speeches of leading men. The headquarters of the pronuncades and their great stronghold is Jalapa and the surrounding country. The State of Puebla, which has very important industries, is revolutionized, and Vera Cruz is well affected toward the cause. The territory held by the insurgents includes a depth of 250 miles, two-thirds of the distance to the capital from the sea-coast, with an equal length of territory going west. One of the aqueducts, even that which supplied Mexico with water, was cut by a band of insurgents. On the American frontier Regina Colima, through which the telegraph wires to the city of Mexico passed, have been captured, with most of the border country. It will thus be seen that the telegraphic treaty for connecting the wires of the two countries will not have much immediate value. The strangest intelligence yet brought from Mexico is that President Lerdo should have allowed Cortinas to escape from his hands and return to the frontier, where he will, in a short time, be at the head of a considerable band. So far as can be ascertained, while the foreign population are opposed to all revolutions, they, as yet, regard the present one as an almost accomplished fact. Porfirio Diaz is not viewed with disfavor for the reason that he has been hitherto know for his mild and courteous manners and his liberal ideas of progress and improvement. It is thought he will take the field when Monterey falls or declares in his favor. The army of Mexico is supposed not to exceed 25,000 men."

A Healthy Spring Trade.

The prediction in commercial circles of New York is in favor of a healthy spring trade. It is reported to be backward in its opening, and that as a general thing heavier sales are not expected than were made in the spring of last year. The probabilities are, however, that we shall more than hold our own, and that business will be done on a surer basis and with fair profits. The comparative shortness of foreign crops establishes markets for the produce and cereals of the country. These will be in good demand with steady and improving prices for the surplus grain crop with which the country has been blessed. American manufactured goods are already on hand in large stocks, but the decline in prices has given them a preference in the market over foreign supplies, and the improvement in styles and quality, stimulated by this fact, promises to command for domestic goods a sale over the product of foreign looms. Business at present seems to be done chiefly for cash, with short credit only to well known and reliable customers. This is the pith of the business news in the metropolis, and taken altogether is satisfactory.—St. Louis Republican.

Gold and Silver.

Apropos of the continuous fall in silver which is engrossing the attention of the mercantile world, the London Daily News publishes the following synopsis of the produce of gold and silver from all sources for the last twenty-five years: The quinquiennial average production of gold from 1852 to 1856 was £29,900,000; from 1857 to 1861, £24,000,000; from 1862 to 1866, £22,700,000; from 1867 to 1871, £23,600,000; and from 1871 to 1875, £20,400,000, thus showing a steady decrease, while the opposite is the case with silver, viz.: 1852-'56, £8,100,000; 1857-'61, £8,200,000; 1862-'66, £9,900,000; 1867-'71, £10,600,000; and 1871-'75, £13,000,000. The News attributes the great fall in silver which amounts to threepence in the rupee, or about twelve per cent. in India, to its increasing disuse, while the reverse holds good of gold.

A Runaway Horse Impaled.

On the line of the Perkiomen railroad, in Montgomery county, Pa., recently, a team of fine horses standing near the railroad station took fright and ran away. Near a saw mill about 300 yards distant there was a large wagon standing, with the tongue pointing toward the flying steeds. The horses ran with unchecked speed upon it, and the tongue and chains entered the breast of one of the poor brutes, and passed through its body, coming out at the hips, a distance of over four feet; two feet of the tongue, beside, protruding through the body.

Parton was not the first man who married his wife's daughter. Some fifty years since, "Elder Anderson," a well-known Baptist preacher in Connecticut, married a widow named Douglass, with two children—a boy and girl. When she died, he married the daughter, by whom he had a son, whose father was his grandfather and whose mother was his sister.

David Clark, of Hartford, is worth "enough," he says; so he insists on giving away his whole surplus income, amounting to $30,000 or $40,000 a year. He gives to everybody, almost, except people who ask him.

A new type-setting machine costs $500 and sets 10,000 ems per day. The prospectus of the thing, however, neglects to state whether it can drink whisky, put on a "sub" gracefully, and call out over the room: "What sore-eyed, low-lived son of a saw-horse has got 14 xx!"

A Chinaman in San Francisco was rudely pushed into the mud from a street-crossing by an American. He picked himself up very calmly, shook off some of the mud, bowed very politely, and said, with a mild, reproving tone to the offender: "You Christian, me heathen; good-by!"

The Kearney (Neb.) Press argues in favor of domesticating the buffalo, and says: "The animals can be easily tamed, and made to do good service in the harness; that while his tail is not so very handy to twist, in every other respect—size, strength, get up, and style—he is vastly superior to the domestic ox."

Mrs. E. D. The custom of drinking wine instead of liquor is a great economic benefit to France. The harvest of 1874 produced 1,386,000,000 gallons of wine, of which four-fifths were consumed in the country. This enormous yield was valued at $650,000,000, or more than the united wheat and cotton crops of the United States.

There are 1,234 men, 36 steamers, 37 vessels and 18 factories engaged in the oil and guano business of Maine. During 1875 no less than 712,000 barrels of fish were taken, an increase of 90,000 over 1874, and 1,800,000 gallons of oil made, an increase of 21,000 gallons. The amount of guano prepared was 22,000 tons.

AT BEST.

The faithful helm commands the keel,
  From port to port fair breezes blow;
But the ship must sail the convex sea,
  Nor may she straighter go.

So, man to man; in fair accord,
  On thought and will, the winds may wait;
But the world will bend the passing word,
  Though its shortest course be straight.

From soul to soul the shortest line
  At best will bended be:
The ship that holds the straightest course
  Still sails the convex sea.

Secretary Bristow's Modest Residence.

So much has been said about expensive establishments, and Mrs. Bristow's known wealth is so great, that every one was surprised at the very modest residence selected by the Secretary of the Treasury, and there is floating about a very amusing anecdote which illustrates Mr. Bristow's quiet fashion of settling a question. When seeking for a residence last fall he found a very desirable house already furnished, and after looking it over, inquired the rent. "Seven thousand dollars!" answered the agent. Mr. Bristow said nothing, but seemed considering some important matter in utter abstraction. At last a gentleman with him, growing impatient, demanded to know his decision. "Oh, yes!" said the Secretary; "$7,000 I think the agent said!" "Yes," said his friend. "Well," responded the Secretary, "I was wondering what I could possibly do with that other $1,000!" Of course you know a Cabinet minister's salary is only $8,000 per year. That $7,000 house was not rented, but you will find Mrs. Bristow receiving in very pleasant parlors on K street, and when you have talked with her five minutes you won't know or care what the rooms are like or how much anything costs. There is nothing in the least ostentatious about the menage, and though Mrs. Bristow dresses richly there is never anything conspicuous in her toilets. Her rare loveliness of character wins her the best affection of every one. —Washington Cor. of the Boston Journal.

A Newspaper in Jail.

The Cherokee Advocate, published at Talequah, in the Indian Territory, has its editorial rooms in the second story of the jail at the Cherokee capital, in accordance with the act which provided for its establishment. It is very convenient in the case of libel suits, there being no necessity of the editors hurrying themselves about bail. The paper is supplied free to every Indian-speaking Cherokee, but English readers have to pay a subscription of $1 a year.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, APRIL 6, 1876.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, April 3, 1876.

DEAR COURIER.—There is great tribulation here as to an administration candidate for President. They are starting around promiscuously to find some one who is free from the taint that seems to extend throughout the entire ramification of the government, and it is a most difficult matter to find such an one, possessing the other necessary points.—Blaine is not leaving a stone unturned to advance his interest, but the idea of fighting the campaign on the old war issues is not justifiable, and is regarded as a weak dodge. Conkling is endorsed by Grant, and that kills him in the estimation of all honest people. Morton, personally, is repulsive, and his Pinchback scheme let him down very easily. Bristow who with Pendleton, took a contingent fee is the strongest man, but there will be no chance to abuse the Democratic party through Pendleton if he is nominated. All other prominent aspirants have only local strength and are not available. The muddle seems to increase each day and things are getting desperate.

On the other hand Gov. Hendricks is gradually and surely gaining in every locality, and will be nominated without a doubt. It is pretty generally conceded here that he is the coming man.

HOLMAN FOR GOVERNOR.

I have heretofore maintained a strict silence in regard to the above gentleman, prompted somewhat from my connection here, and knowing that fulsome notices are never appreciated. I believe I said something about Mr. Landers' candidacy but I am inclined to believe now that he cannot be nominated. If that is the sentiment of the people of the State, then there is but one thing to do. Mr. Holman has declined all along to be a candidate for the position and I know personally that he does not want the nomination But did not Gov. Hendricks refuse to the last hour four years ago to make the race. For my part I think it a good precedent to select out from among the able and worthy those who do not want to be made public servants. If Mr. Holman is asked whether he is a candidate he will say no. The convention must nominate him and thus put him on the defensive where he cannot sacrifice the State of Indiana for personal considerations. His record as a public servant will bear a more minute inspection than that of any other man in the House, and I feel confident he can carry the State by an increased majority. We must have Indiana if we want a President, and it behooves us to put the best man to the front.

The testimony of Gen. Kiddoo and others, fixes beyond a doubt the fact that Clymer connived at the escape of Marsh and his wife, in order to shield Pendleton and other leading democrats.

The above might have passed current if Marsh had not retured, as the writer of the above did not intend. But Marsh was brought before the committee after his return, and here is his testimony:

Question.—When you left here Thursday for New York after giving your testimony against Belknap did you at that time design leaving for Canada?

Ans.—I did not.

Ques.—I certainly did not attempt to alarm you.

Ans.—Alarm me! On the contrary you pacified me entirely. You said that I was not in a particle of danger of being arrested.

Ques.—When you got to New York what made you conclude to go to Canada?

Ans.—Well, sir, something I saw in the papers.

Ques.—What did you see in the papers?

Ans.—That was Friday morning, taking up the "New York Times" there was all my evidence which I did'nt read, but I read some remarks made on the floor of the House by some member, I think it was Mr. Bass, who said that the Secretary was liable to imprisonment.

Ques. What then?

Ans.—That frightened me and I consulted a lawyer and left for Canada.

So you see instead of Mr. Clymer conniving at the escape, it was the remarks of one Bass a Republican member of the Committee who first gave the notes of warning to Marsh. Mr. Clymer has been terribly abused by the Republican press for exposing the corruptions of their party and the above item from the Press is one of the small ways in which they ease themselves of their chagrin and mortification.

The recent exhibition of the beauties of Republican ascendency, made by a Congressional Investigating Committee, is still the Universal topic of discussion in private, public and official circles here, and furnishes food for thought to many an anxious mind in this bautiful city, that awaits in fear and trembling the next descending bolt, that may perhaps shatter their fair fame also. "Uneasy the head that wears a crown," is a proverb the truth of which is amply illustrated now. The very air in Washington seems poisoned with the odors arising from the vast cesspool of fraud. corruption and demoralization which has just been uncovered and is being probed to its lowest depths. The most damning proofs have been shown of iniquity in all the high places of the Government; and investigations now being made will hold up to the public gaze in all their hideous enormity, corrupt deeds of the Cabinet officers and high officials, be side whom Belknap will seem a mere tyro in official villainy and degradation. The vast extent of these frauds when all are unearthed, as they soon will be, will cause the whole nation to hang their heads in shame, and then with a righteous indignation to hurl from place and power this terribly corrupt administration, and dethrone forever the party which place it in power, whose representative men so skillfuly covered up its misdeeds for so many years. In the mean time let the Committee be attacked, and charged with causing great expense and every thing else that can possibly impede their investigation as has been the policy of the Republicans instead of a hearty co-operation to get at the truth.

TOM.

I see that my excellent, but not over-scrupulous, friend Baxter, of the Press says:

"In Tom's Washington letters he moralizes finely over the Belknaps, but he has yet to hear of Pendleton, Tilden, Hendricks and Randle."

Now, don't, Charlie. You know that I love you with a love that knows not breaking, and to see these little ginet stabs behind my back, is not altogether pleasant. Wait, Charlie, until I get home, and then you may say all the naughty things you want to. Have a little patience, deah Chawles, with me, as well as for the above gentlemen, and when the time comes we'll make Rome howl.

The fact is brought to light that Democratic members of the War Department investigation committee essayed the Star Chamber business and undertook to conceal a portion of their investigations from the Republican members of that committee. The question properly arises, was it their object to protect leading Democrats from exposure. —[Steuben Republican.

No. If at all, it was to prevent leading Republicans from suppressing what they had suppressed before. But we don't believe that there was any attempt to conceal anything, either by Democrats or Republicans. I was present most of the time, and the object in holding secret sessions was to prevent the ubiquitous press gang here from interfering with the investigation by premature announcements a faculty which they possess to an eminent degree.

The press comments on the fall of Mr Pendleton are generally an admixture of sorrow with indignation. His fall is greater than Belknap's, inasmuch as his position was higher; and, when he fells like Lucifer—never to rise again.—[Steuben Republican.

Anything to bridge over and cover up this terrible corruption of the administration, and therefore the endeavor to make Belknap's crime little in the eyes of the people. Pendleton and Bristow took a contingent fee. Pendleton, for five months labor, got $75,000. Bristow for one little argument got $10,800. Pendleton and Bristow were not government officials at the time these fees were received. And now Belknap is less sinful than these, because he held a high official position, extorted money from post-traders who were forced in return to extort it from the poor soldiers. And this national disgrace, this putrid sore upon the body politics is rated less by our Republican neighbor, than the general practice of lawyers in taking a contengent fee. What do the people think of such sophistry.

The family have the sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement.

Farmers should be on their guard against signing contracts with patent-right men, as in several counties unsuspecting tillers of the soil have recently been swindled out of considerable money by making contracts for patent mowing machine, knife grinders, etc. After signing the contract, one end of the paper is torn off, which leaves the balance a promissory note for a large amount.

The Garrett City "News" thinks our article was neither witty funny or smart. Fourteen years ago we saw this same answer in print. We intended the article for the old editor not knowing the "News" had changed hands. We think the local and editorial is much improved, but them "death" rules under each business card is against the rules of the printing business. Now don't get mad, but "wood-up" a little more.

He served his country in 1812, moved to Ohio in 1830, and united with the Christian Church at Canfield, O., and in 1846 he moved to Indiana, where he remained until his death, which occurred on the 30th of March, 1876, at the age of 95 years, 6 months, and 3 days.

Our clever and obliging friend, Harry Rush, Esq., took the beautiful and accomplished Miss Ida Brown, of Angola, for his partner through life, last week. We didn't think Harry would get himself into a "harness" so soon, but now as its been done, we advise you not to rush things to rapidly, in a business point of view. Our advise would be to make a little Rush on the start, and then if you should fail hereafter, you would have something to console yourself with.

There is a young lunatic in Clinton whose insanity manifests itself by his yearning desire to bury himself. Now, if the numerous Radical thieves, who have been plundering the country for years would only go crazy after this fashion how willingly would the people allow them to follow the bent of their desires. It is, however, too much to hope for.

The Auburn Dramatic Company played "Caste or the Life of an Actress," at Ensley's Hall, last Friday and Saturday evenings. The play was rendered in good style, and would do credit to many traveling troupes. Lowrie is a brick and Kahn is ditto, and John Knoder and Tom Leasure are rattlers in their parts. All were up to the "scratch" and everything passed off quietly and pleasantly. The house was well filled both nights which goes to show that our citizens appreciate their efforts. Tuesday evening they visited Waterloo, and were also encouraged by a large and attentive audience There has been some talk of them going to Kendallville in a short time, but we have not learned positive that they will.

Serenading Not Profitable.

The other night three or four young men were out serenading their Dulcineas and among the favored ones was the daughter of Samuel Smithers, living on Ensley Avenue. By mistake the boys got under the wrong window. They sang four or five songs, but nobody light a lamp or invited them in. At last one of the boys began to sing that soul striving song, "Susan Jane." But to suit the occasion he changed it to "Milindy Jane." He sang it through once, when Mrs Smithers awakened out of a bad dream. She imagined that the calf was choaking and got the old man up to give it more rope. The young man hearing a noise in the house thought Milindy was getting up, so he began his song again. The old woman hearing the words "Milindy Jane, O, give your heart to me," thought, that rascal Snellers was back again after her daughter. She got up and got the wash pitcher which was full of water, silently raised the window and dashed pitcher and all down on the fellow with the screeching violin mashing the violin into a thousand pieces and knocking the fellow into a tub of water. A low and solemn wail went up from Smiters' back yard, then all was still as death. Mrs Smithers has four fiddle strings, a dilapidated plug hat and an old pipe, which she will give to any one paying for the picher she broke.

COMMUNICATION.

The editor of the Waterloo Press in his criticism on my attempt to elucidate the financial question to the people who assembled in Matson's Hall, comes quite as near demonstrating the Darwinian theory of the origin of man, wherein each persons conduct is a true and unerring index, pointing with exact precision to that particular animal which has left the impress of his nature, above all others, stamped most indelibly upon all its prosperity, and is the ruling element of that specie as to being a elucidation of what I did say on finance. This editor like the late Southern slaves who, while on the auction block to be sold to the highest bidder, to benefit their masters, boasted of the value there was in their bodies over and above the value there was in the bodies of their poor white associates, called "Sand-hillers," boasts of the value there is in the coin of his master's, the capitolists, who to sell it as such as do believe, as Charly does, that it possesses a value called "intresic," to obtain which this nation better give $5 for one in coin, though this one would only pay the same amont to plaintiff on execution as a paper dollar which had been made by the nation at a cost of one cent, so that by purchasing coin possessing intrinsic value of a dead loss of $4 on each one bought, this learned editor holds is better for those who bear this loss than that they should obtain a profit of 84c on each paper dollar, and what is most strange about it is, we hear of no effort on the part of his friends to place him under treatment for this unfortunate mental hallucination.

W. HOPKINS.

A German stepped into Mr. Zacher's grocery Tuesday and asked to be shown some fancy pipes. Joe. Rainier was soon to wait on him and after laying out several of the best ones his attention was called to something else by Mr. Z. and he left the old German blowing through the pipes to see which would draw the easiest. One of them drawed so easy that he held open his pocket and the pipe drawed from the show-case down to the opening, and he started out. Someone seeing the move, informed Joe and he commenced drawing—the German back into store. The following conversation then took place:

"Where's that pipe?"

"Here vas dot bipe," pulling it out of his pocket and laying it on the show case.

"What did you steal that for?"

The German was mum.

"Are you deaf, sir, what did you steal that pipe for?"

"Yes, I vas not deaf. Didn't you say you vould vate on me by dot bipe."

"There was nothing said about waiting, sir. Where is the Marshal?"

"Vel, I don't vont to make you some droubles und I take dot bipe. Here vas your gelt."

He paid for the pipe, and when going out of the door he said:

"Off dish is the vay, I hereafter do my drading by dot Butler town."

COMSUMPTION CURED.

AN old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarah, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. A FADED GLOVE.

BY CELIA THAXTER.

My little granddaughter, who fain would know
Why, folded close in scented satin fine,
I keep a relic faded long ago—
This pearl-gray, dainty, withered glove of mine.

Listen: I'll tell you. It is fifty years
Since the fair day I laid my treasure here.
But yesterday to me the time appears;
Ages ago to you, I know, my dear.

Upon this palm, now withered as my cheek,
Love laid his first kiss, doubting and afraid!
Oh, swift and strong across me while I speak
Comes memory of love's might, my little maid.

I yet was so unconscious! 'Twas a night—
Some festal night; my sisters were above,
Not ready quite; but I, cloaked all in white,
Waited below, and, fastening my glove,

Looked up with smiling speech to him who stood
Observing me, so still and so intent,
I stood and wondered at his quiet mood,
Till it flashed on me what the silence meant.

What sudden fire of dawn my sky o'erspread!
What low melodious thunder broke my calm!
Could I be dreaming that this glorious head
Was bending low above my girlish palm?

His majesty of mien proclaimed him king;
His lowly gesture said: "I am your slave;"
Beneath my feet the firm earth seemed to swing,
Unstable as storm-driven wind and wave.

Ah, beautiful, and terrible and sweet
The matchless moment! Was it life or death,
Or day or night? For my heart ceased to beat,
And heaven and earth changed in a single breath.

And, like a harp some hand of power doth smite
To sudden harmony, my soul awoke,
And, answering, rose to match his spirit's height,
While not a word the mystic silence broke.

'Twas but an instant. Down the echoing stair
Swept voices, laughter, wafts of melody—
My sisters three, in draperies light as air;
But like a dream the whole world seemed to me.

As, steadying my whirling thoughts, I strove
To grasp a truth so wondrous, so divine,
I shut this hand, this little tinted glove,
To keep its secret mine, and only mine.

And like an empty show, the brilliant hours
Passed by, with beauty, music, pleasure thronged,
Phantasmagoria of light and flowers;
But only one delight to me belonged,—

One thought, one wish, one hope, one joy, one fear
One dizzy rapture, one star in the sky—
The solemn sky that bent to bring God near;
I would have been content that night to die.

Only a touch upon this little glove,
And, lo! the lofty marvel which it wrought!
You wonder; for as yet you know not love,
Oh, sweet my child, my lily yet unsought!

The glove is faded, but immortal joy
Lives in the kiss; its memory cannot fade;
And when death's clasp this pale hand shall destroy,
The sacred glove shall in my grave be laid.

FOUND IN THE SNOW.

"Halloo! This won't do. Move on." The speaker was a gigantic policeman. The object of his wrath was a boy who sat on a low stoop, with his face buried in his hands as if crying.

It was night and snowing fast. A bitter, bitter night, in which one would not wish even one's enemy to be homeless and shelterless. The boy did not stir.

"Halloo, I say!" cried the policeman, angrily, advancing nearer. "No shamming, young 'un. Get up, and move on."

But as the lad, even yet, did not rise, the policeman stooped down and shook him. As he did this the boy fell over, senseless, in the snow.

"Great God!" cried the policeman. "He's dead. Frozen to death, too; perhaps starved. Poor little fellow! An orphan, no doubt. Well, I must take him to the station, I suppose."

But as he lifted the body, which he did tenderly—for he had children of his own at home, the seemingly inanimate form stirred.

"Fainted," said the officer, "but not dead yet. If the station house only wasn't so far off. Ah! maybe they'll take him in here."

As he spoke, a close carriage had dashed up to the next house, a footman sprang from the box, the coach door was flung open, and an old man, wrapped in a fur cloak, stepped out and took the servant's arm, to be helped up the high stoop. Seeing the policeman, however, with the boy in his arms, he stopped abruptly.

"What! what!" he cried. "A young tramp—a beggar? Not dead——"

"No, not dead yet, Mr. Ascot," said the policeman, respectfully, as he recognized the speaker, well known as the wealthiest and most influential householder on his beat, "but I'm afraid will be before I reach the station. And he doesn't seem to be a common sort of beggar boy——."

"Not the common sort, eh? Neither is he," said Mr. Ascot, as he looked at the boy's clothes. "Have him in here—have him in here. John, ring the bell; why the deuce do you stand there gaping—don't you see the boy's dying from cold and hunger? I can walk up the steps well enough alone?"

A moment more and Mr. Ascot himself led the way into a warm, spacious drawing-room.

"There's a roaring fire ready," he said. "I always have one waiting for me when I come home from dining out. Where's the housekeeper? Didn't I tell John to bring her at once? Ah! here Mrs. Somers comes. Something to revive him, quick! Good heavens! if he should die after all."

"Poor little dear!" said Mrs. Somers, as she poured a restorative down his throat. "There, Jane, give me the blankets while I wrap him up. Ah! he's coming to."

The boy opened his eyes, looked in a far-off way at Mrs. Somers, and then glanced, dreamily, about the room. Evidently his senses had not yet quite come back.

"Mother, mother," he murmured. "I can't find grandfather—and it's so cold. I'm so——"

His head dropped on her shoulder and his eyes closed again. One of his hands, which up to this time had been tightly shut, opened weakly, and a note fell to the floor.

Mrs. Somers did not see the note. Something in the boy's look had startled her. She gave a quick glance up at her master; then she began to tremble all over. Mr. Ascot, who had been standing by her full of interested anxiety, did not observe this look, for his attention had been attracted by the note, which he now stooped to pick up. Then he proceeded to take out his glasses in order to read the superscription.

"Perhaps this may throw some light on the matter," he said. "The poor lad has been sent out on an errand and has fainted from cold, and perhaps hunger. What! what! Good God!" His hands were shaking like leaves in an autumn wind. In the deep stillness the paper rattled with startled noise. "It can't be—it can't be! Mrs. Somers, your eyes are younger than mine—read, read; is that address—in it—mine—Thornton Ascot?"

As he spoke in choked, convulsive gasps, Mrs. Somers leaned forward to read. The motion roused the boy again, and he opened his eyes—this time with more of consciousness in them—and he fixed a long, questioning, puzzled look on Mr. Ascot.

"Merciful heaven!" the latter said, staggering like one struck with palsy, "it is her eyes—her eyes——"

With these words he fell back senseless, the half-open letter fluttering from his fingers to the floor. Fortunately the policeman was in time to catch him, and lay him on the sofa. For a moment the boy was forgotten, every one pressing around the master of the house.

"Is it a stroke?" asked the policeman, anxiously. "What does it mean?"

At any other time Mrs. Somers would have been reticent about family affairs; but she was too flurried to think clearly. Surprised out of herself she took her audience, unconsciously, into her confidence.

"No, it's not a stroke," she answered, with the experience of long years of nursing. "His face isn't awry, you see; and he's only limp, not paralyzed. There, I've opened his cravat; and now, Jane, bring some water. It's but a fainting fit; he often has 'em when he's worried; often, I mean since his daughter went away. She ran off, you know, ten years ago. He's never forgiven her, or rather she's never—leastways of late years—asked to be forgiven. The last time was when she came herself, just after she was married, on a night as bad as this." All this while Mrs. Somers was busy in trying to revive her master, chafing his hands, holding smelling salts to him, even ordering the window opened. "He turned her from his doors in a perfect rage—I never seed him so angry afore or since. But he's been sorry for it many and many a time, I know. I have heard him sigh so! He was a-thinking of her. He'd have forgotten all, years ago, if she would have come again; but she was as proud as him; I don't know which was the prouder. She went to forrin parts with her husband—he'd been her music teacher, you see—that's what made Mr. Ascot so angry—and she has not been heard of for these years and years. There—he's coming to; what a sigh! Stand aside, Mr. Policeman, please, and give him some air. Poor man! but he's nobody to blame but himself after all. I don't uphold disobedience in children, of course; but a dearer, sweeter girl than Margaret Ascot never was. Many and many's the time I've carried her in my arms when she was a baby and her mother was alive. How are you feeling now, sir?"

This last sentence was addressed to her master, who, with a deep drawn sigh, opened his eyes.

"What—what is the matter?" he said, looking vacantly from one to the other. "Yes, I remember," putting his hand to his brow, "Margaret——"

His eyes wandering about fell on the boy who, during this episode, had entirely recovered consciousness and was now looking with a strange sort of wonder at Mr. Ascot.

"Please, sir," said the lad, seeing he had attracted the old man's eye, "can you tell me where Mr. Ascot lives? I was to go to him—only I lost my way—mother's very sick—and she's had nothing to eat to-day——"

With these words he broke down with a great sob, the tears streaming along his thin, wan cheeks.

"Where's the note? Order the carriage," said Mr. Ascot, incoherently, rising to his feet. "Is it from Margaret? Did somebody say she was starving?" His poor, weak, shaking hands vainly tried again to unfold the paper which the policeman had handed him. "I—I am not strong as I used to be; I think I am getting old;" and he looked piteously at Mrs. Somers and sank again on the sofa.

"Drink this," said the housekeeper, handing him a restorative.

He drank it and rallied.

"Ah! it is her—her writing," speaking to himself. "She is a widow, and her only child is named—after—after—me."

He stopped reading and turned to look at the boy.

"Are you grandfather?" said the latter, timidly. "I think you must be, for mother has a picture she looks at and cries over, and it's like you."

The letter fell again to the floor. But this time it was because he opened his arms and the boy, catching the meaning, came to him.

"You won't let her die, will you?" said the boy, looking piteously into his face.

"Die, die!" cried the old man, rising up; and his voice and air were that of youth. "She shall not die. Where is the carriage? I will go at once and she shall come home to-night. The carriage, I say," he cried, almost angrily, and he turned toward the door, where the footman now appeared.

"The carriage waits, sir," said the servant, obsequiously.

"Get your cloak and bonnet, Mrs. Somers, a few blankets—a bit of food—there's not a minute to lose. Good God! Margaret dying, and we wasting our time here! No, my brave little fellow; your mother shall not die."

In a few minutes, during which the thoughtful Mrs. Somers had provided a biscuit and some hot tea for the boy, the little party set forth. While the carriage is rolling over the snow, its destination being one of the most obscure streets of the great metropolis, let us say a few words about the daughter.

Margaret Ascot had been one of those sweet-tempered, sympathetic natures that everybody loved. Beautiful, accomplished, wealthy and well born, she had crowds of suitors, but at nineteen she turned from them all, and gave her heart to a penniless lover. This was not because she was foolishly romantic, like so many others, but because her suitor was worthy of her in every way except riches. He was only a poor music teacher, an Italian exile—for this was in days now fortunately long ago, before Italy was free, and to be an Italian patriot meant banishment or life-long imprisonment, or even death.

Andrea Filippo had, when hardly more than a boy, joined in the insurrection of '48, and had been compelled after its failure to fly the country. He had come to America, and, being penniless had been compelled to take up the first pursuit that offered itself. In his own land nearly everybody has some knowledge of music; but Andrea was an amateur of more than ordinary merit, and he naturally became a teacher of singing. Margaret Ascot was his favorite pupil. He saw in her everything that youthful manhood in its highest type admires; she saw in him a hero and a martyr. Compared with the prosaic young men of business or the cold, calculating lawyers, or the idle men of fashion, who constituted the bulk of her admirers, he was a prince in disguise, a young god!

Parents do not sufficiently make allowances for the imaginative elements of their daughters. They fancy that at nineteen girls can feed as their mothers do at forty; that the dry husks of a matter-of-fact life are sufficient for them. It is not so, and Mr. Ascot, though a sensible man in other respects, could not understand why his daughter was cold to her wealthy lovers and had given her heart to the exile.

When Margaret, hopeless of altering her father's opinion, finally eloped with her lover, his wrath knew no bounds. He refused to answer her letter announcing the marriage; and when, a few weeks later, she came in person, he had her literally thrust from the door.

After vainly trying to get some other employment—for Mr. Ascot's influence deprived Andrea of all his pupils—the young couple went abroad. For a while they lived in London; but afterward Andrea returned to Italy and there struggled on until he died. He left his widow penniless; she had only money enough to pay her passage to America, whither she had resolved to come, in hopes by a last appeal to soften her father's heart. It was a winter voyage and Margaret caught a violent cold, which threatened an inflammation of the lungs. She could only crawl feebly to the nearest lodging on the night she landed—a miserable attic.

The next day Margaret wrote a note to her father, trusting to her boy to deliver it, as she was too ill to go out herself. Knowing that Mr. Ascot would be out during the day, she had deferred sending the lad until toward nightfall; but hardly had he left before she began to think of the perils he ran alone in that great city. Perhaps, she said to herself, he has fallen down some open area; perhaps he sank cold and insensible in some bank of snow. When eight o'clock struck from a neighboring steeple, and still her boy did not return, she became almost wild with fright. Ten o'clock came, but still no son. She listened intensely for the sound of his feet, but she heard nothing but the roar of the storm. At last her anxiety and fear rose to frenzy; she was sure her boy was dead. Eleven o'clock struck. Her candle had burned down into the socket and was almost on the point of expiring. Suddenly the sound of carriage wheels, muffled by the snow, was heard; the carriage stopped. Surely that was the opening of the street door; there were steps ascending the stairs. Yes, she could not be mistaken, they were the steps of her boy! The door of her room flew open and her son rushed in.

"Mother, mother!" he cried, flinging his arm eagerly around her, "I came as soon as I could. And oh! mother, I have brought grandfather with me. See!"

She looked past her son, scarcely believing her own eyes. There, just behind her boy, stood her father. She rose up in bed; she held out her arms.

"Father!" she sobbed.

"Margaret, my child!" And then they were locked in each other's arms, and both were in tears.

"I can die in peace now," she murmured, after a while, as she clung to her father's breast, "since you have forgiven me. You will promise to take care of Thornton?"

"Die!" cried the father, rising bolt upright and fairly lifting her from the bed, all the strength of his youth coming back in that supreme moment. "You shall not die. You are going home with us; we have brought blankets, food, everything. The risk is not so great as remaining another night here; physicians—the best—shall be called in. No, you shall not die! You have not come home to die."

Nor did she die. Our simple tale has already been too long in the telling, or we might narrate how the sense of rest and peace that grew up in her now, the skillful care of the best physicians, and the knowledge that her boy's future was assured, all combined to work a cure that, otherwise, might have been regarded as almost miraculous.

To-day there is no more beautiful woman of her years in that great city than Margaret. She lives only for her father and her boy; they come, at least, before everything else. But she does not exclude herself entirely from society. To the select and cultivated circle of which she is the center and chief ornament, she gives freely of her varied accomplishments and of her exquisite charm of manner. But the memory of her dead husband is still green in her heart and ever will be; and though men of high station and even world-wide celebrity would woo her, if she would, to be the light of their home, they know, one and all, that her first and last love lies buried in that lonely grave on the blue shores of the Riviera, to which, every year or two, she makes a pilgrimage.

A Fool and His Gun.

James Rowland, of Abbeyville county, S. C., a young man about twenty years of age, indulged in an experiment recently which is likely to cost him his life. The facts are as follows: Young Rowland tried to draw a load out of his shot-gun, but failed, and, heating an iron rod nine inches in length and about three-quarters of an inch in diameter to a white heat, threw it into the barrel of his gun and ran. The gun discharged itself, and the rod entered the young man's hip, passing almost entirely through on the other side. The rod was so hot that it could not be taken from the suffering victim for about five minutes, and only then by the help of a pair of blacksmith's tongs. Rowland suffered untold agony, and was at the point of death at last accounts.

The dry goods clerks of Philadelphia have organized a secret society. The members gain admission to the meetings and recognise each other elsewhere by a system of "counter" signs.

COAL-OIL JOHNNY.

His Sudden Wealth and Return to Poverty.

Scarcely a month passes without the appearance of some newspaper paragraph informing the world of the whereabouts and wealth of Johnny Steele, or, as he is better known, "Coal-Oil Johnny." A correspondent of the New York Sun, writing from Oil City, Pa., after correcting some false reports in circulation about the oil prince, tells the true story of some of his freaks during his palmy days, as follows:

Johnny Steele was born near Rouseville, one of the mushroom towns of the oil region. His parentage is obscure, but he was adopted by a widow lady, a Mrs. McClintock, and treated by her as if he was her son. The widow McClintock, as she was called by her neighbors, was the owner of a barren farm on Oil Creek, upon which, before the oil excitement broke out, it was difficult for the family to make a living. Johnny was made to work as soon as he became of sufficient size, and was employed in driving a team and doing odd jobs. When the oil excitement occurred the widow McClintock's farm suddenly became worth a small fortune. The old lady was close, however, and although Johnny was her only heir, she did not keep him in idleness nor allow him much spending money. He became a teamster, hauling oil on the creek, and working for five dollars a day. Just as the McClintock farm was at its highest valuation the widow died, and Johnny came into possession of the property. It was not a million, nor two millions, as has been erroneously reported. The whole amount did not exceed $300,000; but to a person who had been living by day labor that sum seemed to be inexhaustible.

Johnny at once began a career of dissipation, which lasted nine months. In that time he spent his whole fortune with the exception of a small sum which he settled on his wife, after which he became a laborer once more. We need not wonder at this, since he had never been taught the value of money, and having lived on a couple of hundred dollars a year, he thought his wealth had no end. He did not spend all his money himself, however. His friends helped him largely, and it is estimated that he loaned to his companions one hundred thousand dollars without taking any paper to show for it, and none of this money was ever recovered.

Many of his freaks during this period are amusing. One day while in Philadelphia, he ordered a carriage for a ride. A basket of wine and several boon companions were taken along. The whole afternoon was spent in carousing, and at early twilight the carriage was driven through Chestnut street, the legs of the occupants sticking through the windows, where they had been placed to the detriment of the glass. At another time while on a similar spree, Johnny and his companions cut the carriage cushions to pieces, broke the door panels, smashed the lamps and windows, and made a wreck of the entire affair. When the party arrived at the hotel the livery man was angry. Johnny, with a tone of importance, asked what he valued his whole rig at. The livery man said, "Two thousand dollars." Steele paid it, and turning to the driver, gave the horses to him.

Another freak, for which he paid $8,000, was running the Girard House, Philadelphia, for one day. He fancied the hotel clerk did not treat him, when he entered, with that respect which was due him, and he demanded to see the proprietor or manager. When that personage appeared Johnny announced his name, and wanted to know the landlord's price for the use of his hotel one day. The answer was $8,000, which Johnny paid, and that day he threw the hotel open to everybody.

Many of his sprees Johnny does not remember, for, as he says, it was a nine months' drunk. During this time his wife sued for and obtained a divorce. At the end Johnny's money gave out, and he found himself a poor man again. He returned to Oil Creek, and worked at day labor for some time. Then he was assistant baggage master for the railroad at Rouseville, and afterward becoming reunited to his wife, he settled down on a farm in Venango county. From there he recently removed to the West, where he has obtained a small farm, and, as he says, is enjoying life more than in his days of wealth.

Tremendous Storms in Europe.

The London correspondent of the New York Herald telegraphs the following particulars of the recent terrible storms that swept over Europe:

The present week has been the stormiest which has been experienced in England during the past hundred years. There have been terrible gales, storms and floods in England, France, Germany and Belgium.

In London many barges were sunk in the Thames. On Sunday last a number of houses were unroofed and many persons injured by the falling material.

A large portion of the country districts is under water.

A remarkable accident occurred on Sunday. A telegraph wire was broken by the force of the wind, and in its retraction almost severed the head of an omnibus driver from his body.

Your Berlin correspondent telegraphs that the gale extended over the whole of the west of Europe. It blew in circular form, from the north in France, and from the south in Belgium.

In Germany the storm caused terrible inundations, house were unroofed, the steeples of churches blown down, telegraphs prostrated, and railroad tracks washed away.

In several places earthquake shocks were felt during the prevalence of the storm. The inundations consequent on the storm have injured the young crops, and a new sowing will be necessary in many places. Many persons in Berlin have been rendered homeless.

Your Vienna correspondent telegraphs that in Bohemia and Hungary enormous tracts of country and above a hundred townships have been flooded during the past twenty days. In the neighborhood of Vienna the losses in house property, railways and agriculture amount to $1,250,000.

In Hungary the total loss, as foreseen, will amount to $10,000,000, of which one-half falls on the agricultural interests. Sixteen hundred thousand acres of arable land in Hungary are still inundated.

The loss of house property is incalculable. Whole villages have almost disappeared; others are in ruins. At Buda-Pesth one hundred houses have already collapsed, and it is feared that whole blocks will fall.

Within twenty-four days the Danube, which rose twenty-four feet above the low-water level, has only fallen eighteen inches.

The action of the authorities is praiseworthy. The actual loss of life in Hungary and Austria is below forty, but many persons have died from exposure and illness.

Fever is spreading and great distress prevails among the people along the river from Comorn to Sclavonia.

That Shower of Flesh.

Until Kentucky (remarks the Chicago Times) shall have experienced a shower of porter-house steak and mushrooms, pork and apple sauce, sirloin and onions, saddles of venison, or something neat, inexpensive and palatable she needn't boast. That little rain of flesh she had the other day near Mount Sterling was, for phenomena, nothing extraordinary. Not to mention pitchforks, which every one has seen it rain, there have been many times and in divers places extraordinary showers of one thing and another falling like gentle dew from Heaven and landing upon the just and unjust without regard to race, color or previous condition. We pass over the Biblical record of showers of manna for the nourishment of the chosen people, stones for the annihilation of the hosts opposed to Joshua, and fire and brimstone for the destruction of Washington and Brook— we mean Sodom and Gomorrah, and come to more modern instances of meteorological eccentricities. The Cincinnati Commercial has hunted up a column and more of them:

Prof. Smith, of Louisville, to whom specimens of the Kentucky product were exhibited, was of opinion that the matter was the dried spawn of the frog, which had been taken up from ponds or swamps by strong currents of wind and, after having probably been carried a long distance, permitted to fall to the earth again. He cites a similar fall of fleshy substance in Ireland in 1675. The matter then deposited by the shower was glutinous, and, when exposed to fire, emitted an unpleasant odor. Flammarion gives a list of twenty-one showers of blood which have been observed in Western Europe since the beginning of the present century. There have been records of such showers from the earliest times, and, during the middle ages, they were believed to be direct manifestations of the divine displeasure:

"In the spring and fall of that year there were unusual atmospheric disturbances throughout Europe, disastrous hurricanes, whirlwinds, tempests, extending from the western coast of France to Constantinople, and on the Atlantic there were cyclones of extraordinary magnitude and power. The whirlwinds and hurricanes were sufficiently powerful to take up stratums of soil in sandy districts, together with such soft and viscid substances as might be found in swamps, lagoons, stagnant pools, etc., and carry them high in air, to be deposited somewhere, of course. And this deposit took place in the south of France, extending from Mount Cenis southward to the Mediterranean. The showers were, as has always been the case, popularly called "showers of blood." At Lyons the substance was deposited in the shape of a reddish slime. A battalion of soldiers on the Swiss frontier had their uniforms bespattered and impregnated with it. At Valence the layer was so thick that the water-chutes and gutters had to be flushed to clean them. One scientist calculated that in the department of Drome alone seven hundred and twenty tons of slimy reddish substance were deposited. Another analyzed it and found in it seventy-three organic substances, many of them peculiar to South America. It had, as was afterward found out, taken the substance four days to travel from South America to the south of France, at the rate of ninety yards per second. Another remarkable shower, in 1862, fell in France, and Ehrenberg found in the substance deposited not less than forty-four organic forms."

These showers of blood descended, when the temperature was sufficiently low, in the shape of red snow, and many were the pious and superstitious deductions drawn from the phenomenon, which, if the spirit of scientific inquiry had been awake, could have easily been traced to natural causes. In Persia in 1824 and 1828 there were showers of nutritious lichens, which fell to the depth of five or six feet and were eaten by cattle. Sulphur and lava have often descended, and there have been showers of toads, locusts and various insects, not to mention cats and dogs, and, after the former, bootjacks and such handy furnishings of a bed-chamber.

Parlor Pleasures.

To Put a String into the Fire without Burning It.—Twist your string around an egg-shell, and it will not burn as long as the shell remains entire.

To Cut an Apple into Quarters without Damaging the Peel.—Pass a string by means of a needle across the apple, which is divided by pulling the two ends of the string, crossing under the peel. Operate in the same manner on the opposite side of the apple, so as to divide it into a second half, and it will be perfectly divided into quarters, although enveloped by the peel.

To Pierce a Plank with the End of a Candle.—Load a gun with powder, and put in the end of a candle instead of a ball; fire against a plank of ordinary thickness, and you will find it pierced as with a leaden ball.

To Have a Shadow Dance.—Hang a sheet across the doorway between two parlors; put out all the lights excepting a candle in the rear room, which place on the floor near the sheet; place a springy plank on two strong chairs across the space, and if a person of light weight dances on it, the effect will be similar to a tight-rope dance.

Parties in France.

A Paris paper reports that 3,673,000 votes were given for the republic. 1,418,000 for the empire, and 1,394,000 votes represent the combined strength of the Bourbon and Orleanist monarchies. About three and a half million abstained from voting. Of the vote given, the republicans cast 433,000 more than a half, or a majority of 866,000 over both monarchies and the empire.

GRANDMA AND JO.

Our grandmother dear has snow-white hair,
And she loves to sit in her easy chair;

And Jo loves to climb on grandma's lap,
To play with the strings of her snow-white cap.

And grandmother's voice is broken and slow,
And sweet are the words she says to Jo.

If grandmother ever had any care
She has laid it down out of sight somewhere;

And now all she does is to say her prayer
And sit where the sunshine gilds her hair,

And play and whisper to little Jo
As the shadows of evening come and go.

Being so near to the heavenly shore
Grandmother never weeps any more.

At twilight she fancies lost loved ones call
Sweet-voiced from chamber, parlor, or hall.

Perhaps the last strain of some heavenly choir
Falls on grandmother's ear as she sits by the fire.

But she only kisses dear little Jo,
And whispers, "Soon, little sweet, we shall know;

"But Charlie, Willie, Grandpa, and Jack,
I am almost sure, child, are coming back."

Pith and Point.

THE first chiropodist in English history—William the Corn-curer.

CUSTOMER—"What did you think of the bishop's sermon on Sunday, Mr. Wigsby?" Hairdresser—"Well, really, sir, there was a gent a settin' in front o' me as 'ad 'is 'air parted that crooked that I couldn't 'ear a word!"—Punch.

THE following conversation took place the other evening at a tea-table in Bangor, Me.: Five-year-old, to his mother—"Mother, can I have a cooky?" "No, my son." "Mother, can I have a quarter of a cooky?" "No, my son." "Can I have a crumb of a cooky?" "No!" "Well, then, can I smell of a cooky?"

A JUDGE in Monmouth county, N. Y., once cautioned an old negro who had been acquitted not to be found in bad company again. "Much o'blige to yo', marsa," he replied, "I allus 'spect you adwise; but de fact am, marsa, dat good company and bad company look so much alike dat dis niggah can't tell de difference until he get right in 'em!"

AN old officer had lost an eye in the wars and supplied it with a glass one, which he always took out when he went to bed. Being at an inn, he took out his eye and gave it to the simple wench in attendance, desiring her to lay it on the table. The maid afterward still waiting and staring, "What dost wait for?" said the officer. "Only for the other eye, sir."

LADY customer—"Have you a nice book all covered with red leather, with gold letters on the back?" Shopkeeper—"Yes, madam; we have De Quincey's works, three volumes, in Russia; or Gen. Sherman's Memoirs, two volumes, in calf. Lady customer—"I don't want anything about Russia. Give me the books about the dear little calves; beside, it was made by a general."

WHEN a Missourian was recently on trial for murder, he didn't say he was insane, but simply said: "If yer honor please, I am guilty. I killed the man because he took my gal from me. She was about the only thing I had, an' I didn't want to live after she went, an' I didn't want him to live neither. An' I should be obleeged to yer honor if you would hang me as soon as possible."

WOMEN AS MOTHERS.

Women know
The way to rear up children (to be just);
They know a simple, merry, tender knack
Of tying sashes, fitting baby-shoes,
And stringing pretty words that make no sense,
And kissing full sense into empty words;
Which things are corals to cut life upon!
Although such trifles, children learn by such;
Love's holiest earnest in a pretty play!
And get not over-early solemnized—
But seeing, as in a rose-bush, love's divine,
Which burns and hurts not—not a single bloom—
Become aware and unafraid of love.
Such good do mothers. Fathers love as well—
Mine did, I know—but still with heavier brains,
And wills more consciously responsible,
And not as wisely, since less foolishly;
So mothers have God's license to be missed.

A WIDOW lady living on Lacrosse street was highly delighted when a wood-yard wagon drove up and half a cord of stove wood was thrown into her yard. She had given no order, had no money to buy wood with, and running into a neighbor's she exclaimed: "See how my dream came to pass! Last night I dreamed that some one had brought me a load of wood; and behold! it is here!" Congratulations were tendered and several people were feeling good when the wagon came back for the wood, it having been thrown off at the wrong place, and as the boy pitched it out of the yard his demeanor wasn't at all dreamy.—Free Press.

SOME years ago a certain Detroiter settled a debt by giving his note of hand. The holder tried for two years to collect it, and then filed it away. The other day he had an opportunity to work it off on an innocent party, and shortly after so doing he encountered the maker of the note and said: "Now you'll have to come to time! I've sold that note of yours!" "You don't say so?" "Yes, I have; got it off on a man for seven dollars." "See here, Tom," said the debtor in a pleading voice, "if you got seven dollars for that forty-dollar note against me, and you won't give me at least two dollars, I'll never do another favor for you in my life!"—Free Press.

A Sentimental Goose.

The Chattanooga (Tenn.) Times tells a rather odd story about an affectionate goose in that vicinity:

On a farm near this city is a goose that lately lost its mate. It mourned sincerely for several days; refusing very properly any attention from other gooses. But goostic faithfulness could not survive human charms. Goosey became enamored of a man who has charge of fowl and brute. Thrown in his company constantly at feeding time, she always welcomed him with affectionate greetings, and followed him until the gate shut him from her sight. Encouraged by his friendly office, her esteem deepened into love, and now no other companionship satisfies her for a moment. Long before daylight she commences calling for him, and she will take no food except from his hand. She follows him day by day, round and round the field, while he is plowing, and the highest farm fence cannot stop her. When he goes to town she can only be left behind by being shut up in her house, and then she keeps up a continual calling until he returns. True to the romantic character in love stories, she is drooping—slowly fading from earth. Her constant exertions to be near her charmer are slowly but surely killing her.

A STRANGE STATEMENT.

The Process of the Formation of Anthracite Coal Discovered in the Indian Ridge Shaft.

The Shenandoah (Pa.) Herald, of a recent date, says: We have before us now on our table a specimen which is one half anthracite coal, and the other half a solidified sediment, that four years ago was all soft sediment. For over four years there had been in use in the Indian Ridge Shaft of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, this district, a wooden pipe, about six inches in diameter, made of inch boards nailed together, which served to carry water from one of the rings in the shaft to a lower level. The rings are boxes around the sides of the shaft, which catch the water coming out of the rock, slate, or coal, and are put in to prevent the water falling down and making a regular shower-bath of the shaft. At the ring in question a large spring in the slate, about thirty feet below the Primrose vein, had been struck, the water from which is apparently as pure as crystal. Some four months since it was found that this wooden pipe had become so clogged with the reddish-brown sediment that is deposited by all mine water, that the open space in it was not more than two inches in diameter, and not large enough to carry off the water from the ring. Consequently a new pipe was put in, and the old one, nearly closed with the sediment adhering to its sides, was left standing. The water was then turned into the new pipe and cut off from the old one, which is some fifty feet or over in length. On Friday last, after remaining in the shaft without any water passing through it for over four months, the greater part of this old pipe was taken out, and when broken open the wonderful phenomenon presented itself that the sediment was gradually changing into what appears to be anthracite coal. About a half inch of the inside of the sediment lining the pipe had changed into coal, and the remainder was also gradually changing, the only portions of the sediment remaining quite soft being that part deposited first and next the sides of the pipe. A cross section of the pipe now shows, commencing at the center, first a circle of about a half an inch in diameter surrounding the two inch opening remaining in the pipe, then a circle of sediment partly turned into coal, and then the sediment in its natural state and the sides of the pipe. The surface of sediment which was exposed to the action of the atmosphere has changed first, and the same influences or chemical combinations which had changed its nature were gradually operating on the rest of the sediment. The process of formation is plainly seen in the sediment next that already turned into coal.

Samples of coal taken from the pipe have been tried on the blacksmith fire at the colliery, and it makes an exceedingly hot fire, but being of a softer nature than the natural anthracite it clinkers badly. Fortunately there are any quantity of samples of this wonderful formation, and those who are unwilling to believe without themselves seeing and touching can be accommodated. There is no Keely motor business about this discovery. A section of the pipe, about sixteen feet long, has been left standing in the shaft to see what results will follow in the next six months or year. Samples have also been sent to Gen. Pleasants at Pottsville for examination, and we suppose the public will soon have the opinion of gentlemen qualified to judge on this surprising formation—but if anthracite coal will form from sediment deposited by mine water when exposed to the action of the atmosphere under certain conditions for a period as short as four months, what becomes of all the pet theories of the geologist and mining engineers on the subject? How about the great heat, the millions of years of time and tremendous pressure which, according to the various theories of the heretofore accepted authorities, were necessary to account for our deposits of the finest and best fuel yet found?

The United States Senate.

There are in the present Senate forty Republicans, twenty-nine Democrats, four Independent Republicans, and one vacancy, a full Senate consisting of seventy-four members, two from each of the thirty-seven States of the Union. In the previous Senate there were only nineteen Democrats, less than one-fourth, but in the elections of 1874 the Democrats gained ten Senators, which increased their number to twenty-nine, more than one-third of the whole body. Twenty-six newly-elected Senators will take seats in the Senate on the 5th of March, 1877, in place of the following, whose terms expire on the 5th of March, 1877:

Alabama, George Goldthwaite, Dem.
Arkansas, Powell Clayton, Rep.
Delaware, Eli Saulsbury, Dem.
Georgia, Thomas M. Norwood, Dem.
Illinois, John A. Logan, Rep.
Iowa, George G. Wright, Rep.
Kansas, James M. Harvey, Rep.
Kentucky, John W. Stevenson, Dem.
Louisiana, J. Rodman West, Rep.
Maine, Lot M. Morrill, Rep.
Massachusetts, George S. Boutwall, Rep.
Michigan, Thomas W. Ferry, Rep.
Minnesota, William Windom, Rep.
Mississippi, James L. Alcorn, Rep.
Nebraska, Phineas W. Hitchcock, Rep.
New Hampshire, Aaron H. Cragin, Rep.
New Jersey, Fred T. Frelinghuysen, Rep.
North Carolina, Matthew W. Ransom, Dem.
Oregon, James K. Kelly, Dem.
Rhode Island, Henry B. Anthony, Rep.
South Carolina, Thomas J. Robertson, Rep.
Tennessee, Henry Cooper, Dem.
Texas, Morgan C. Hamilton, Ind. Rep.
Virginia, John W. Johnston, Dem.
West Virginia, Henry G. Davis, Dem.
Wisconsin, Timothy O. Howe, Rep.

From the above list it will be seen that of those whose terms expire in 1877, seventeen are Republicans and nine are Democrats. Of those who hold over, twenty-seven are Republicans of various shades, and twenty Democrats.

A Pennsylvania Pigeon Roost.

An immense number of pigeons have made their "roost" in the neighborhood of Carpenter's, Pa., and their habits are thus described in the Elmira (N. Y.) Advertiser:

"On Wednesday the air was literally blue with them. On Thursday a large party of gentlemen went down from this city and had a lively time. The scene as described by an eye-witness was very exciting. Pigeons were in the air all the time, at times coming so thickly as to darken the sky. As the shot was poured into them they wheeled and turned and at times seemed to charge on their assailants, coming down so close to the man that they could almost feel the wind from their wings. On Friday other men went down with rather poor success, the pigeons seemed to fly high and scarce, but on Saturday again they put in an appearance in untold millions. They are evidently nesting near there, and the sport will soon begin in earnest. The memory of the oldest inhabitant reaches not to the time when they put in such an appearance. The woods are alive with them, single pigeons coming continually in sight on the trees."

Why Hard Times?

The Unitarian Review has an article on the "Business Situation," in which the present stress of the times is ascribed to over-production—the gorging of the market with more of those commodities which are in general use than the market can bear. The position of the writer, John C. Kimball, is thus stated:

"It is due simply to the introduction, during the last twenty-five years, of such an enormous amount of machinery. There is nothing in our modern civilization which is more wonderful, more significant, more wide-reaching in its relations, than this use of machinery. A single pegging machine will turn out more boots and shoes now than a whole village of cobblers at work in their little cubical shops fifty years ago. The cloth woven in any of our large mill-towns is probably equal to half of what all the Indies used to produce by the hand methods of the middle ages. Steam engines alone are doing a work which, without them, would give employment to every one of the multitudes of men and women who are now living idle in our country. California a few years ago was groaning over the introduction of so much 'Chinese cheap labor,' and yet at that very time most inconsistently was giving a welcome to mowers and reapers and mining apparatus, which, for cheapness and facility of use, made even a Chinaman dear. And then, when it is seen how these muscles and nerves of iron weighing twenty tons down to the finishing of a cambric needle, and from the sewing of a button-hole to the sowing and reaping of whole States, who can wonder that the market is overstocked.

"Of course the increase of facilities for doing work increased for a while the amount of work to be done. But such a process could not go on forever. There was a limit even to the number of stitches which could be put into a lady's dress, and to the amount of wheat which even an American family could do away with. And this point has at last been reached. The occurrence of our civil war, with its enormous destruction of property and its withdrawal of energies into the battlefield, put off the day; but the end of the war, and their return again into the pursuits of peace, soon filled up the gap and brought us to the point where it was hardly possible to consume a half of what was being produced—the point, therefore, where business was obliged to stop."

Four months and a week ago the five-years-old daughter of Edward Cahill, of 102 Mary street, while playing with a brass thimble, swallowed it. From that time until yesterday the child has undergone terrible suffering. Several physicians were consulted in the early stages of the child's sufferings, but they all concurred in the opinion that the thimble would pass away, and that it would do no great harm. The thimble did not pass away, however, and it did do great harm. The poor little sufferer could not draw a full breath, and consequently could not sleep at night. Her face broke out in great sores, and there was a constant discharge of putrid matter from the nostrils. Gradually she was wasting away, and notwithstanding the assurances of the physicians they had called in, the friends became terribly alarmed. Finally they called on Dr. Bergen, who was at first of the same opinion as other physicians. The child continued to grow worse, however, and yesterday morning he had the little girl taken to the City Hospital, and there, using a needle as a probe, he discovered that the thimble had lodged crosswise back of the uvula, which is the conical-shaped flesh body suspended from the middle of the lower border of the soft palate. It was a difficult place to reach. If it had lodged where it could have been cut from the outside, the doctor could have administered ether and performed the operation while the little girl was insensible. But situated as it was, he feared that the discharge of matter and the flow of blood would choke the child to death, if she was not in the active possession of her senses. The operation had to be performed without the use of anæsthetics. It was a painful operation. He had to cut through the uvula, insert his pincers, and draw out the thimble. He had three strong men as assistants. The odor from the discharge was so powerfully nauseating, and the poor child's struggles under the torture she was suffering were so great that the three men had to be succeeded by a fresh relay before the operation was concluded. It was safely completed, and last night, for the first time in four months and one week, the little girl slept soundly and uninterruptedly. This morning she is much better, and ate a hearty breakfast. There is now no doubt of her speedy recovery.—Utica Observer.

To Young Ladies.

Be cheerful, but not gigglers. Be serious, but not dull. Be communicative, but not forward. Be kind, but beware of silly, thoughtless speeches; although you may forget them, others will not. Beware of levity and familiarity with young men; a modest reserve without affectation is the only safe path. Court and encourage serious conversations with those who are truly serious and conversible; and do not go into valuable company without endeavoring to improve by the intercourse permitted you. Nothing is more unbecoming when one part of a company is engaged in profitable and interesting conversation, than that another part should be trifling and talking nonsense to each other.

FIFTY thousand dollars have been offered for the privilege of sweeping and keeping in good order the floors of the different Centennial buildings.

A Letter from the Saviour.

Among the countless curiosities of literature which the search for centennial relics has brought to light, a particularly curious one has just been published in the Mason (Mich.) News. It purports to be nothing less than a literal translation of a letter written by Christ himself, and found eighteen miles from Iconium sixty-three years after the crucifixion, the original Hebrew copy of which is said to be still in possession of a certain family in Mesopotamia. The copy furnished the News was brought from England by Mrs. Herbert, of Plainwell, sixty-three years ago, and was extremely old when it first came into her possession. In fact, it crumbled to pieces with age, and its owner, who sincerely believes it to be the word of God, set about joining the pieces together, a task which took her weeks of persevering labor to accomplish. As for the letter itself, it is a simple exhortation to keep the Sabbath; to keep the commandments; to "fast for five Fridays in every year, beginning with Good Friday," to "cause them that are baptised to go to church and receive the sacraments, and be made members of the church;" together with other good advice, such as a modern pastor might properly write a member of his flock without any pretense that it was of divine origin. Doubtless, however, that which led to its having been so long and sacredly preserved—almost worshiped as a fetich—is the concluding paragraph, which runs thus:

"Remember, he that hath a copy of this letter, written with my own hand and spoken with my own mouth, and keepeth it without publishing it to others, shall not prosper; but he that publisheth it to others shall be blessed of me, and though his sins be in number as the stars of the sky, and he truly believes in me, they shall be pardoned; but if he believe not in me and my commandments, I will send my plagues upon him and upon his children and upon his cattle; and whosoever shall have a copy of this letter in his house, nothing shall hurt them—neither lightning, pestilence nor thunder; and if a woman be in labor and a copy of this letter be about her, and she firmly put her trust in me, she shall safely be delivered. You shall have no tidings of me but by the Holy Scriptures until the Day of Judgment. All goodness, happiness and prosperity shall be in the house where a copy of this letter is to be found."

Cruelty to Children.

Too often, from ignorance of signs of approaching disease, a child is punished for what is called idleness, listlessness, sulkiness; and punished, too, in the unwisest way, by an increase of tasks and confinement to the house, thus overtasking still more a brain already overtasked, and depressing still more, by robbing it of oxygen and exercise, a system already depressed.

Are you aware, I ask again, of all this? I speak earnestly upon this point, because I speak with experience. As a single instance: A medical man, a friend of mine, passing by the schoolroom, heard one of his own little girls screaming and crying, and went in. The governess, an excellent woman, but wholly ignorant of the laws of physiology, complained that the child had of late become obstinate, and would not learn; and that, therefore, she must punish her by keeping her in-doors over the unlearned lessons. The father, who knew that the child was usually a very good one, looked at her carefully for a little while, sent her out of the schoolroom, and then said, "That child must not open a book for a month." "If I had not acted so," he said to me, "I should have had that child dead of brain disease within the year."

Now, in the face of such facts as these, is it too much to ask of mothers, sisters, aunts, nurses, governesses, all who may be occupied in the care of children, especially girls, that they should study thrift of human health and human life, by studying somewhat the laws of life and health?—Charles Kingsley.

AT our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

Bleeding from Lungs, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Consumption. A Wonderful Cure.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 13th, 1875.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—I had suffered from Catarrh in an aggravated form for about twelve years and for several years from Bronchial trouble. Tried many doctors and things with no lasting benefit. In May, '72, becoming nearly worn out with excessive Editorial labors on a paper in New York City, I was attacked with Bronchitis in a severe form, suffering almost a total loss of voice. I returned home here, but had been home only two weeks when I was completely prostrated with Hemorrhage from the Lungs, having four severe bleeding spells within two weeks, and first three inside of nine days. In the September following, I improved sufficiently to be able to be about, though in a very feeble state. My Bronchial trouble remained and the Catarrh was tenfold worse than before. Every effort for relief seemed fruitless. I seemed to be losing ground daily. I continued in this feeble state, raising blood almost daily until about the first of March, '73, when I became so bad as to be entirely confined to the house. A friend suggested your remedies. But I was extremely skeptical that they would do me good, as I had lost all heart in remedies, and began to look upon medicine and doctors with disgust. However, I obtained one of your circulars, and read it carefully, from which I came to the conclusion that you understood your business, at least. I finally obtained a quantity of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, your Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets, and commenced their vigorous use according to directions. To my surprise, I soon began to improve. The Discovery and Pellets, in a short time, brought out a severe eruption, which continued for several weeks. I felt much better, my appetite improved, and I gained in strength and flesh. In three months every vestige of the Catarrh was gone, the Bronchitis had nearly disappeared, had no cough whatever, and I had entirely ceased to raise blood; and, contrary to the expectation of some of my friends, the cure has remained permanent. I have had no more Hemorrhages from the Lungs, and am entirely free from Catarrh, from which I had suffered so much and so long. The debt of gratitude I owe for the blessing I have received at your hands, knows no bounds. I am thoroughly satisfied, from my experience, that your medicines will master the worst forms of that odious disease Catarrh, as well as Throat and Lung Diseases. I have recommended them to very many, and shall ever speak in their praise.

Gratefully yours, WM. H. SPENCER.

CHICAGO LEDGER—Best story paper going. See advertisement.

Southern Hotel, St. Louis, Mo.

The most complete hotel in all its appointments in the West. The table supplied at all times with the best the market affords.

PIMPLES on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum, and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

VEGETINE thoroughly eradicates every kind of humor, and restores the entire system to a healthy condition.

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.—The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs: nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country.

All Diseases of the Blood

If VEGETINE will relieve pain, cleanse, purify and cure such diseases, restoring the patient to perfect health after trying different physicians, many remedies, suffering for years, is it not conclusive proof, if you are a sufferer, you can be cured? Why is this medicine performing such great cures? It works in the blood, in the circulating fluid. It can truly be called the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER. The great source of disease originates in the blood; and no medicine that does not act directly upon it, to purify and renovate, has any just claim upon public attention.

Seventy-one Years of Age.

EAST MARSHFIELD, Aug. 22, 1870.

MR. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I am seventy-one years of age; have suffered many years with Kidney Complaint, Weakness in my Back and Stomach. I was induced by friends to try your VEGETINE, and I think it the best medicine for Weakness of the Kidneys I ever used. I have tried many remedies for this complaint, and never found so much relief as from the VEGETINE. It strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Many of my acquaintances have taken it, and I believe it to be good for all the complaints for which it is recommended.

Yours truly, JOSIAH H. SHERMAN.

Best Evidence

The following letter from REV. E. S. BEST, Pastor M. E. Church, Natick, Mass., will be read with interest by many physicians; also those suffering from the same disease as afflicted the son of the Rev. E. S. Best. No person can doubt this testimony, and there is no doubt about the curative powers of VEGETINE:

NATICK, Mass., Jan. 1, 1874.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—We have good reason for regarding your VEGETINE a medicine of the greatest value. We feel assured that it has been the means of saving our son's life. He is now seventeen years of age; for the last two years he has suffered from Necrosis of his Leg, caused by Scrofulous affection, and was so far reduced that nearly all who saw him thought his recovery impossible. A council of able physicians could give us but the faintest hope of his ever rallying, two of the number declaring that he was beyond the reach of human remedies, that even amputation could not save him, as he had not vigor enough to endure the operation. Just then we commenced giving him VEGETINE, and from that time to the present he has been continuously improving. He has lately resumed his studies, thrown away crutches and cane, and walks about cheerfully and strong.

Though there is still some discharge from the opening where the limb was lanced, we have the fullest confidence that in a little time he will be perfectly cured.

He has taken about three dozen bottles of VEGETINE, but lately uses but little, as he declares that he is too well to be taking medicine.

Respectfully yours,
E. S. BEST,
MRS. L. C. F. BEST.

NOTICE.

STATE OF INDIANA, } Before Jacob Wal
DeKalb County. } born, J P Union-tp.

Thomas J. Shreve, vs James E. Shreve.

It appearing by the return of the writ herein that said defendant is not found, and it further appearing by affidavit filed that said defendant is a non resident of the State of Indiana. A writ of garnishment in said case has been served on the Baltimore, Pittsburg and Chicago Railway Company, Indiana Division.

Notice is therefore given to said defendant to appear to said action at my office on the 10, of April A. D. 1876, at 10 o'clock A. M. to answer or demur to the complaint or the same will be determined in his absence.

Feb 11, 1876. JACOB WALBORN, J. P.

The best method of freeing the country from official corruption is to turn the party out under which the rascals have been protected.

An Auburn father was awakened by what he thought was a burglar, the other night. He emptied all the chambers of his six shooter at the intruder, and when the noise of the firing ceased, he heard a well-known voice excitedly ask, "Wazzer mazzer, fazzer; wazzer doin'?"

CATARRH.—If you would avoid being rendered deaf or unfit to mingle in society, on account of foul and nauseating discharges from gangrenous ulcers in the head, use Dr. Deitchon's celebrated Catarrh Remedy. It is the greatest cure and control for the hideous destroyer, the world ever saw. It will save every life threatened by it. It immediately arrests its progress, and if perseveringly used, will never disappoint in a cure. Go to Devenport's Drug Store, and get a sample bottle free. Sept 30 y

A Heavy rain and snow storm prevailed throughout Connecticut Monday, which effected the vote to some extent. It is thought no election by the people would be the result, as it requires a majority over all to elect. There are four tickets in the field for State offices. There is no date upon which to base an opinion as to how the Legislature will stand.

An ingenious bummer has invented a new way of getting his liquor. He puts two pint bottles in his coat pocket, one full of water, the other empty. Then he goes into a saloon and asks for a pint of gin, handing out the empty bottle. When he gets the gin he puts the bottle in his pocket, and tells the barkeeper to "Hang it up." Barkeeper naturally objects, and demands the cash or the gin. Bummer reluctantly hands him the bottle of water, and goes out muttering about some folks being so confounded perticktular.

The Republican party is in a quandary regarding the selection of a Presidential candidate. The problem presented is one which their most potent sages are unable to solve. The party in Indiana are firmly convinced that the hopes of the organization, and consequently of the country, rest upon Senator Morton. They assert that no man but Morton can carry the State. Ohio declares that success among the Buckeyes depends upon the nomination of Hayes. New York howls with derision and boldly asserts that that without Conkling the party in the Empire State has ingloriously departed to the condemned canines. The voice of Pennsylvania is heard above the wails, her starving miners oracularly announcing that Hartranft alone can, Moses-like, lead them safely through the Red Sea of probable defeat, relieve them from the bewiderments of a corruption produced Wilderness and finally conduct them safe to the Promised Land of continued power and robbery without detection. Illinois proudly steps to the front and calls the attention of the country to the fact that she possesses the only specific for the ills which at present afflict the country, in the person of a Washburne. At his latter announcement a sickly smile spreads over the terrorstricken countenance of the party and it mentally concludes, with the lamented Widow Bedot, that "we are all poor critters."

The Weather Fifty Years Ago.

What curious weather!" seems to be the observation universally made, and yet 1816 was "the year without a summer." The old-time New England farmers used to refer to it as "Eighteen hundred and starve to death." January was mild, and so was February, with one or two days exception, but March was cold and boisterous. May opened seasonably warm, but grew colder as it advanced, ending with ice and snow and winter coldness. Buds and blossoms were frozen, ice formed half an inch thick, and corn was killed. Frost, snow and ice were common in June and almost everything green was destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of three inches in New York and Massachusets, and ten inches in Maine. July was accompanied by frost, and on the fifth ice formed the thickness of window glass in New York New England, and part of Pennsylvania and corn and nearly all crops were destroyed in some sections. In August ice formed hals an inch thick and corn was frozen so that a great deal was cut down and dried for fodder. Very little ripened in New England and the Middle States. Frrmers were obliged to pay $4 and $5 a bushel for corn of 1814, for seed for next spring's planting. The first two weeks of September were mild, and the balance of the month was cold, while frost and ice formed half an inch thick. October was more then usually cold, with frost and ice. November was cold and blustering with snow enough for good sleighing December was quite mild and comfortable.

The Enforcement Act.

The last chance of carrying a single Southern state for the nominee of the Republican National Convention is gone. The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the enforcement act is the death-knell of such a hope. There never has been a day since the passage of the reconstruction measures that any Southern state, with possibly the exception of Mississippi and South Carolina would have voted to sustain the Republican party, had its people been left free to cast their ballots as they pleased. This they were not allowed to do, for deputy United States marshals rode over the country, and, under therats of arrest and imprisonment, deterred the men of substance and of property from going to the polls. If they attempted to exercise the rights of freemen, they risked their liberty and took their chances of imprisonment. In order to harass them and make their arrests more painful, their homes and incarcerated in prisons located among strangers. This was done to make the giving of bail difficult, if not impossible for the object of these petty officers was not to insure the appearance of their victims for trial but to punish them before they were tried. This system of attempting to carry elections by the appointment of deputy marshals and vesting in them the power of arrest without warrant was not confined to the Southern states. It was one practiced in the great commercial city of the country, and although not successful in that case, was none the less reprehensible. Hunderds of deputy marshals were sworn into office in the city of New York a few years ago, and a large army, under command of the most desperate and unscrupulous officer which the war produced, was sent to that city to force her people to vote the Republican ticket. Notwithstanding this pressure her voters stood firm and cast their ballots for the men of their choice Had the people rebelled against this interference with the rights of citizenship and arrested these deputy marshals as disturbers of the peace, an unscrupulous military chieftan was ready to enforce obedience to an unconstitutional law with his bayonets. Happily for the country the freemen of New York bore this attack upon their liberties and this insult to their manhood with a patience worthy of their ancestry and answered the jibes and taunts of the Redical leaders with batlots instead of blows, so the hero of Fort Fisher had to take his army away without an opportunity of adding to his military laurels. Now, had this occurred in a Southern city, it would have resulted in over-awing the people and making the election a farce, but happening as it did among a people who had not been accustomed to feel the hand of military power, it failed to its object. By such means as these were the Southern states kept under the control of alien to their soil and strangers to their people. All of them save one are now freed from the rule of the vampries who have been sucking their life blood for years, and this one will soon take her stand with her sister states on the platform of self government. This assured by the recent decision of the Supreme Court on the enforcement act. It was this law which made these things possible. It was under this law that men were arrested at their homes, take hundreds of miles away ane tried for alleged offenses before court created to convict. It was under this law that free American citizens were banished from their homes and sentenced to imprisonment in distant states, and made to put on the felon's garb. The men who were instrumental in breaking up families and imprisoning their heads that states might be coerced in keeping the Republican party in power must pay the penalty.—Indianapolis Sentinal.

JANE REED.

A Pennsylvania Ballad.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

"If I could forget," she said, "forget, and begin again!
We see so dull at the time, and, looking back, so plain.
There's a quiet that's worse, I think, than many a spoken strife,
And it's wrong that one mistake should change the whole of a life.

"There's John, forever the same, so steady, sober, and mild;
He never storms—a man who never cried as a child.
Perhaps my ways are harsh, but if he would seem to care,
There'd be fewer swallowed words and a lighter load to bear.

"Here, Cherry!—she's found me out, the calf I raised in the spring,
And a likely heifer she's grown, the foolish, soft-eyed thing!
Just the fresh color I like, without a dapple or a speck,—
Oh, Cherry, bend down your head, and let me cry on your neck!

"The poor dumb beast she is, she never can know nor tell,
And it seems to do me good, the very shame of the spell:
So old a woman and hard, and Joel so old a man—
But the thoughts of the old go on as the thoughts of young began!

"It's guessing that wastes the heart, far worse than the surest fate;
If I knew he had thought of me, I could quietly work and wait;
And then when either, at last, on a bed of death should lie,
Why, one might speak the truth, and the other hear and die!"

She leaned on the heifer's neck; the dry leaves fell from the boughs,
And over the sweet late grass of the meadow strayed the cows:
The golden dodder meshed the cardinal flower by the rill;
There was autumn haze in the air, and sunlight lay on the hill.

"I've somehow missed my time," she said to herself, and sighed;
"What girls are free to hope, a steady woman must hide.
But the need outstays the chance; it makes me cry and laugh
To think that the only thing I can talk to now is a calf."

A step came down from the hill: she did not turn or rise;
There was something in her heart that saw without the eyes.
She heard the foot delay, as doubting to stay or go:
"Is the heifer for sale?" he said. She sternly answered, "No!"

She lifted her head as she spoke; their eyes a moment met,
And her heart repeated the words, "If I could only forget!"
He turned a little away, but her lowered eyes could see
His hand, as he picked the bark from the trunk of a hickory tree.

"Why can't we be friendly, Jane?" his words came, strange and slow;
"You seem to bear me a grudge, so long, and so long ago!
You were gay and free with the rest, but always so shy of me,
That, before my freedom came, I saw that it couldn't be."

"Joel!" was all she cried, as their glances met again,
And a sudden rose effaced her pallor of age and pain.
He picked at the hickory bark: "It's a curious thing to say;
But I'm lonely since Phebe died and the girls are married away.

"That's why these thoughts come back: I'm a little too old for pride,
And I never could understand how love should be all one side.
'Twould answer itself, I thought, and time would show me how;
But it didn't come so then, and it doesn't seem so now!"

"Joel, it came so then!"—and her voice was thick with tears;
"A hope for a single day, and a bitter shame for years!"

He snapped the ribbon of bark; he turned from the hickory tree:
"Jane, look me once in the face, and say that you thought of me!"

She looked, and feebly laughed: "It's a comfort to know the truth, Though the chance was thrown away in the blind mistake of youth."
"And a greater comfort, Jane," he said with a tender smile,
"To find the chance you have lost, and keep it a little while."

She rose as he spake the words; the petted heifer thrust
Her muzzle between the twain, with an animal's strange mistrust;
But over the creature's neck he drew her to his breast:
"A horse is never so old but it pulls with another beast!"

"It's enough to know," she said, "to remember, not forget!"
"Nay, nay: for the rest of life we'll pay each other's debt!"
She had no will to resist, so kindly was she drawn,
And she sadly said, at last, "But what will become of John?"

MY CHOICE.

"You went away very abruptly the other day, Mrs. Marbury," said Mrs. Chappell to me, when I called as I was passing about a fortnight afterward (I had in the meantime been nursing a sick child).

"Well," I answered, "you were busy, and I had stopped short in my narrative just at that point of my life where fiction ordinarily ends; and such a flood of recollection came over me as I stood leaning alone against your counter, that I did not feel inclined to disenchant even myself.

"You see, Mrs. Chappell," I went on, "when an elderly woman's memory goes into the dreamland of her courtship and honeymoon she does not like the jolting journey back to common life. So when you left me thinking of Oliver Marbury as he appeared in his short-waisted, tight-fitting, claret-colored coat, his white satin stock and waistcoat, pale, stone-colored trousers, and patent leather boots, and myself in my pretty white satin drawn bonnet and blonde fall, my white book-muslin dress and satin sash, my small white Paisley-bordered Norwich shawl and sandalled slippers, I was so full of that happy marriage morn in our old church at S——, and the dinner afterward, when my father astonished Amos and Leah by giving me the thousand pounds, that I did not care to shut out the picture, and took myself off instead."

"Then did your marriage turn out so badly?" questioned Mrs. Chappel, with one eye on the shop-door the while.

"Badly! It was an unfortunate day when David Beech allowed himself to be talked over, and let his pet daughter become Mary Marbury. Better ten thousand times have remained Mary Beech to the end of my days!"

"Yet as I went with Oliver inside the hired chaise to the new home I had not yet seen, and his arm held me close to him all the way, and he stooped now and then to whisper, 'My wife,' and tell me how much he loved me, and how happy we should be, I thought that one word 'wife' comprehended all that was ecstatic and sublime, and the vista of the future held not a cloud.

"Two things struck me about our house (which had been father's)—the unused, dusty look of the library, a small room like an offshoot at the back, but crammed with books, and, secondly the hunting-whips, gig whips, spurs, racing calendars framed and glazed, the guns, shot-belts, and powder-flasks, the boxing-gloves and foils hung up or littering about the whole house. Then, too, there were cigars and pipes, cards and dice in drawers and boxes, and the first faint, impalpable shadow of doubt crept over me.

"'Oliver will forego these things now that he is married,' said I to myself, 'and I will make that delightful old library quite a snuggery. It is the most cosy room in the house.'

At first he drove me about here and there, and one or two of his father's very old friends called upon me; but his own acquaintances were mostly men in Newmarket coats like his own, who talked slang, smoked incessantly, stared hard at me, or made freer than I liked, and who walked in and out of the house, ordered the servants, drank beer and brandy, went and stayed with a freedom very foreign to my notions, and altogether upset my theories of the privacy of domestic life.

"There was one, a Capt. Thornton, I especially disliked, and I told Oliver so. 'He will ruin you if you continue to associate with him,' I said.

"Oliver laughed, patted my cheek, and replied, knowingly, 'My dear, he might if I were not too deep for him. I mean to make a fortune out of the Captain before long.'

"I had heard from my father that Oliver's property was not large, and, little as I knew of such matters, I could tell my £1,000 would not go far to support such a mode of life. But he only laughed when I said captains and country squires were not associates for him. 'Never you mind, Mary; I know what I'm about.' And then he grew angry when I spoke on the subject, so I desisted.

"Frequently he was away for a week or two together, and then the whole tribe went with him—not that at other times we always had the house full; but it was seldom quite empty. We rarely had a quiet evening to ourselves. He was away when my baby was born, and I was partly glad of it for the house was quiet.

"Oliver had insisted upon a christening feast, and gave his orders as if Potosi had been at his command.

"'Hang the cost! What do I care!' was his reply to my wish to keep expenditure within bounds.

"Of course there were friends of his own invited, and of course there was heavy drinking; and whilst father, Leah, Mrs. Mathews, and I sat together in the drawing-room, listening to the March winds blustering without, a noise of voices in loud contention came from the dining-room across the hall.

"'Liar!' 'Cheat!' 'Sharper!' 'Vagabond!' were among the epithets which smote our ears. Then there was a scuffle. We met the servants in the hall also, hurrying to ascertain what was the matter, and as we opened the dining-room door we saw Capt. Thornton with his hands on Oliver's throat. I shrieked. Sam, our man-servant, darted in, and helped to separate them—drawing his master away toward the door.

"The faces of both men worked with passion; Oliver shook himself free, snatched a decanter from the dining-table, and hurled it across at his antagonist with full force. Instinctively the captain put up his arm to guard his face. The decanter smashed upon his hand, gashed it frightfully.

"I believe there was a cry for a doctor, but not for me, though I had fainted and been carried back to the drawing-room sofa insensible.

"Capt. Thornton's life was in peril from the hemorrhage. His wrist was bound tightly before a surgeon came to extract the glass and sew up the wound; but for all that he was for a long time in danger of lockjaw. When he did recover the muscles of his right hand were so contracted that he could no longer shuffle cards, ride at hunt or steeple-chase, handle a billiard cue, or fire a gun; and he vowed vengeance against the man who had made life a burden to him.

"Oliver laughed, as was his wont; but evil seemed to haunt us from that hour—not as a consequence of that one act, but of much foregone, of which I knew nothing.

"My father beckoned me into the library before he and Leah returned home, and he shut the door.

"'Mary,' said he gravely, 'had I known thy Oliver was such a wastrel I'd have chopped my hand off afore I'd ha' given thee to him. I'm afraid thou'lt rue afore long. Such riot and extravagance as I saw last night cannot last. And when his own brass is melted he'll want thy £1,000.'

"Never shall I forget his look of consternation as I told him I had given the money over to Oliver before we left home on our wedding-day.

"'Then, ten to one, it's thy money he's squandering!' he cried, in as much of a temper as I ever saw him; but he softened at my tears, and added, 'It's my fault, Mary; I ought to have tied it down on thee. Never mind, lass, if the worst comes to the worst, there's a home for thee and thy little Launcelot whilst I've a roof to cover me.'

"The end did not come quite so soon as father predicted, but it came quite soon enough. Bills came pouring in as soon as the rupture between Oliver and Capt. Thornton got wind, and I had to soften my husband's 'Hang it, let them wait,' as best I could, to importunate duns—I who had never known what debtor and creditor meant beyond a 'bill of parcels' at school. Then credit was stopped, and Oliver swore over every sovereign he gave to me. Sometimes, after a brief absence, he came back with rolls of notes, but he would disappear again, and they would disappear too. And as his embarrassments increased he drank still more heavily and his temper grew so irritable that no one knew how to deal with him.

"In our little Launcelot, whose winning ways beguiled many a dreary hour, and in the books in our cosy library, I tried to smother the sense of impending misfortune.

"One servant had already gone. The old housekeeper I myself dismissed, knowing my inability to pay her. And now I felt the value of Leah's sharp training, for I had to do the work of the house, cook, and nurse my baby into the bargain; and woe betide me if broil or roast or ragout were not to my husband's liking.

"He rode off one morning with a valise strapped before him, kissing Launcelot and me before he went, and I did not see him again for years. Before the day was out sheriff's officers were in the house, and but for kind Mrs. Matthews, who interceded for me, neither baby nor myself would have had so much as a change of raiment left.

"She took me home with her, a poor, dazed, stunned creature, who had not reached her twenty-second birthday. Consoling Launcelot (who wept because his mother wept, as children will) with lump-sugar and jam, she hushed him to rest, and then dispatched a hurried missive to my father.

"A couple of days elapsed, during which my heart sank to its lowest ebb. Then he came. He had been himself away at an auction and could not leave.

"He did not upbraid me. He said he had 'foreseen what was coming,' and I know not whether he or I thanked Mrs. Matthews most heartily for her kindness.

"Back to my childhood's home I went with a very heavy heart, and not all my dear father's heartiness could prevent me from feeling myself and child intruders.

"Soon after he sent me down to Mosford to my brother-in-law to learn confectionery, then stocked a shop and furnished a house for me in one of the old Rows of Chester, to the great indignation of the others.

"'It's best you try to get a living for Launce and yourself, my girl,' said my good father; 'and though I'd rather have you near me, it's wisest to remove you beyond the reach of envious eyes, and where that wastrel husband of yours will not think of looking for you.'

"At first I was very awkward in my new position. City and people were alike strange; but that perhaps helped to set me at ease behind my counter.

"Bright, hazel-eyed, five-year-old Launcelot was the star of my night. He was more like his grandfather Beech than his own father, of whom he had no remembrance; a black paper profile found at my father's being my only likeness of absent Oliver.

"Often and often as I stood behind my counter I wondered if ever chance would bring him in there among the stream of customers; and yet I think I generally looked upon him as dead; no word or sign having reached me of his existence.

"It was May—sunny, scented May—and Chester race-week. Matty and I were busy as bees from morning until night. Launce went to school. The second race day, a party of ladies and gentlemen came into the shop, talking and laughing as they came. One of them was Oliver Marbury!

"I screamed and fainted. When I came to myself he was gone. After nightfall he came again and abused me for 'making a scene and compromising him with his friends.' But finding me in comfortable circumstances he took up his abode with me, professed to have exhausted his means in trying to discover us, and was lavish of caresses both to Launcelot and myself.

"I had never ceased to love him, and I hailed the prodigal's return. Yet, as of old, he came and went, and ere long began to drain my resources. He took from my pocket and from my till the money with which I should have preserved my credit, and gambled it away. The climax came when my little Mary was about four months old.

"My stock got low; I had no money to give him. Half drunk, he brought a broker on to the premises, sold to him stock, fixtures, and furniture, regardless of my tears and entreaties; and, while the goods were being hurried away, put the proceeds in his pocket, and, carpet-bag in hand, turned on his heel, coarsely telling me old David Beech would make a home for me and the squallers. The children were both crying. At this Launcelot raised his little fist and struck at his unnatural father.

"Like a savage he turned upon the child, to strike at him. On the impulse of the moment I interposed, and the blow meant for Launcelot came down on myself and the baby in my arms. I dropped, and little Mary never cried again.

"They tell me I was frantic for months. At all events, I was spared the pain of giving evidence against my own husband. Matty and the broker's men sufficed.

"We had fallen against a piece of furniture in the way, and there was a suggestion that the babe had been killed in the fall. The charge of murder had been abandoned, but Oliver was found guilty of manslaughter, and condemned to seven years' transportation.

"Mrs. Matthews, good soul! took charge of Launce during my illness, and with Matty's help Leah nursed me at my father's, grumbling all the while at the trouble, the cost, and the disgrace.

"I tried to shut my eyes on the future—to hope we might remain undisturbed, and to train my boy to better things. Meanwhile my father died. He had secured a shop for me, and left me a small annuity, to be paid quarterly.

"Eight years passed away. Launcelot, my pride and joy, was fifteen—a frank, good-natured, and high-spirited youth, whose mother was all in all to him.

"Suddenly the avalanche came down upon us. A fierce, dark, scowling reprobate came in at our door, and claimed as my husband a right to share my means. My heart sank. This was not the man I had sworn to love and obey.

"I was powerless to resist, and he stayed. Goaded by the thought that while he had been in captivity we had prospered, he tortured me in every way he could devise, and Launcelot became my companion. Then he made the boy his butt to wound me surest.

"At last Launcelot, seeing only shame and disgrace before him, conceiving that he was only a cause of outrage on me, as many a good son has done before, ran off to sea, and I was left to cope with Oliver Marbury alone.

"One night—shall I ever forget it?—a man clambered over the outhousing in at my chamber window. It was he, haggard, footsore, bloody. He had wounded a man and sought concealment. He threatened to kill me if I spoke a word. What money I had he took, ate greedily some bread and cheese, changed his clothes, and then fled as he came.

"Men were on the watch and he was taken. His blood-stained clothes were found in my room, where I sat white with terror.

"I was told that, in an affray with poachers on his preserves, Capt. Thornton and a keep had been killed, and I was questioned until my very brain began to reel.

"I thought I should be called upon to give evidence against him. I had loved him once. He was the father of my children. To avoid such a contingency I fled, whither I neither knew nor cared.

"I had no money—never thought of it. I went along lanes, through fields, avoiding the high roads, excitement keeping me up, though I had no food. The first night I took shelter in a barn, stealing off like a culprit at daybreak. I must have looked hungry, for a lad swinging on a gate, with a great hunch of bread in his hand, broke it in two and offered half to me.

"That night I dropped on a stone by the wayside and fell asleep. I was roused by some one calling to me. A gentleman in a gig offered me a seat if I was going his way. The moon was full on his face and in my surprise I ejaculated:

"'Mr. Smithson!'

"I know not whose surprise was the greatest. My father had dealt with him for years, and he had called on Amos Bradley only the day before. My troubles were not unknown to him. I told him all. He took me home to Redditch, to his wife; and there I remained.

"My husband's sentence now was for life. There was no fear of his breaking in upon me, they said; but, ah! thought and memory did that.

"Mr. Smithson would have had me change my name, but I dared not destroy the only clue by which Launce might seek his mother. From time to time I heard of him through Mrs. Matthews. Once I went to meet him in Liverpool—only once. I expected him home from California last Christmas.

"When I went home from this shop, Mrs. Chappell, last November, I bought a newspaper to read over my tea. I read that the Rosicrucian had foundered off Cape Verde, and all hands gone down with her. It was my son's ship!

"Mrs. Chappell, my last hope went down in the Rosicrucian. It matters nothing now who knows my story, or who does not. It is all as one to German Railway Travel.

Charles Dudley Warner, in one of his entertaining letters from Germany to the Hartford Courant, says of the Prussian railways: "However, I don't mean to complain of German railways, they are safe and comfortable; if you want speed and damages you Americans know where to go. A compartment of the second class holding eight persons, in a German carriage, is a snug place for a winter ride. It is so well upholstered that you can ride on the seats without fatigue and sleep at your ease. The compartment of the first class is in the same carriage, and differs only in a little more luxurious upholstering. For winter travel, when there is nothing to see, these compartments are very nice; for summer I prefer an American palace-car. But when the wind raves over a desolate country there is a feeling of snugness in these little apartments. The windows are all closed, everybody lights his cigar, the lady, if one happens to be present, doesn't ever think of saying that she likes smoke—that is taken for granted—and soon the air is so thick that you might imagine yourself in a beer hall enjoying yourself to the utmost.

Not that you are obliged to ride in smoke; on probably all the trains there are compartments distinctly set apart for the not-smoking, and generally there is a separate compartment for ladies. It has become the fashion since I was in Germany some years ago, to heat the carriages by steam pipes, and the passengers themselves can regulate the inflow of the steam. The cars heated in this manner are so warm that you can take off overcoat and hat and sit, often with the window down, as if at home. But the heating by steam is not universal, and occasionally the traveler is put into a cold car and consoled only with a foot-warmer, a tube filled with hot water, which speedily cools, and in the process seems to abstract all the natural heat from the feet and legs of the passenger.

Strange Funeral Procession.

An extraordinary funeral procession recently arrived at Santa Fe. There were twenty freight wagons in the procession, and each wagon was a hearse, loaded with the remains of soldiers, in different stages of decay. These had been buried, one by one, ranging through a period of several years at Fort Craig, and recently the remains were ordered removed to the Government cemetery at Santa Fe. The bodies were exhumed, packed in gunny sacks, and each one labled, just like sacks of ore. Only one body, that of Lieut. Drew, was transported in a coffin. This officer perished of thirst on the Jornade del Muerta, six years ago. His remains, when exposed to inspection at Santa Fe, presented a rather natural appearance. The tongue, or what remained of it, still protruded from the mouth, evidencing the suffering attending his horrible death. In this singular and ghastly procession were one hundred and forty bodies. The wagons discharged their skeletonic freight in the Government cemetery, and each gunny sack and contents was dropped into a separate grave. There were no religious or military services or ceremonies, and the men hired to accompany the procession tossed the sacks of bones with as little care and feeling as they would boxes of merchandise.

The American Horses in England.

The Centennial year, as well as being the most notable in the home-history of the American turf, will derive additional interest from the invasion of England by Mr. M. H. Sanford's stable, under the management of Charley Littlefield, who seventeen years ago accompanied Mr. Ten Broeck to the old country, when the latter gentleman made his invasion with Starke, Prior, Prioress, Satellite (formerly Sherritt) and Umpire. Of the horses Mr. Sanford has taken across, and that have now been in England nearly five months, at least two have made a high local reputation on the American turf, and three others are pre-eminent for their breeding.

The Worcester Disaster.

The reservoir, which was the main source of the water supply of the city of Worcester, Mass., burst on the afternoon of the 30th of March, and an immense volume of water swept down the side of Leicester hill, through New Worcester, South Worcester, and Quinsigamond, and all outlying villages. Fortunately the course of the flood passed to one side of the thickly-settled portion of the city, and as ample warning had been given of the danger, much of the loss of life and property which would have attended a sudden irruption was avoided. The reservoir was about five miles from the City Hall, and was nearly 500 feet above the level of Main street. There had been for several years a small leak in the south side of the dam, the water working under an eight-feet stone archway which contains waste and supply pipes, breaking into the arch about twenty feet from the water. Attention had several times been called to the defective condition of the dam, and a good deal of excitement was shown just after the Williamsburg dam break, and the calamity of the Mill river valley; but the reservoir was neglected.

The scene at the breaking of the dam was grand and terrible. The water gushed through the banks in a dozen places at once, and a general alarm started the busy workmen away from their position to the heights above, and out of danger. An immense torrent of dark water rushed down the hill, sweeping everything in its course. The dam was a substantial structure, rebuilt and strengthened in 1873, and pronounced safe by the best engineers. The pond held 775,000,000 gallons of water. The results of the break were disastrous all down the stream. One mile from the dam lies Cherry valley, in Leicester and Worcester, a narrow gorge dotted all along with dams, reservoirs, and substantial mills, all of which were swept away or badly injured. When the dam gave way the torrent poured down the valley, sweeping over the first dam below, twenty feet in height, taking off James A. Smith's mill bodily. A. E. Smith's mill, next on the stream, and several operatives' dwellings went down the stream at Ashworth, and Jones' mill and the boiler-house, dye-house, stock-house and gas-house went off. A large boiler was floated off and danced on the top of the waves for quite a distance. At the next mill, Hunt's, the dye-house was taken off and the mill undermined. The flood lasted at these points but a few minutes, the fall being quite rapid and the extreme points only a mile apart. Ample notice was given, and all movables, wool, stock, etc., were saved from the mills. Below this point the stream makes a detour to the south through Janesville, which the water passed safely. Returning toward the city, it swept away 500 feet of the track of the Boston and Albany road.

Making Friends with the Press.

While in St. Joseph we were introduced to a reporter of one of the city papers, said to be the oldest in the city. He took us cordially by the hand with the remark:

"How do you do, Mr. L.; how do you do?"

After some little conversation we invited him to step in and imbibe.

"Certainly, Captain, certainly! Would as soon drink with you as anybody."

So we drank. Presently we asked him to drink again.

"Certainly, Major. I never refuse to drink with gentlemen. Here's to you!"

A short pause, and we repeated the invitation a third time. The tears came in the old man's eyes as he grasped our hand and said: "Colonel, you do me proud. Am glad I met you. Here's my hand."

We saw we were growing in his estimation, so we presently remarked that he looked dry, and asked him what he would take.

"Whisky and sugar, General; whisky and sugar. It has been my steady diet for twenty-five years; I never take any other."

We concluded there was no chance for further promotion, so we bade our old friend good-by; and as we left him we noticed that he wore one boot, one canvasback shoe, no stockings, a pair of linen pants, sustained by one suspender, and a shirt as unfamiliar to the water as he was himself. But he was happy and appreciated us, as was evident from the following personal, which appeared in the paper the next morning:

"Maj. Gen. L——, of Denver, Col., is getting outside provisions at the Pacific, until Uncle Johnnie begins to fear a famine. The General is a whole-souled, genial gentleman, a Christian and a scholar, and we hope he will visit us often."—Denver News.

Gored to Death.

A farmer named Elser, living near Leavenworth, Kansas, went out one morning, recently, to catch a calf, but encountered a bull. The bull gored him to death, terribly mangling and mutilating his body. The infuriated animal had to be shot before Elser's body could be recovered.

THE French Minister of Marine reports a gradual falling off in the sardine fisheries owing to the inadequate supply of bait, the roe of codfish from the American fisheries having heretofore been relied on for that purpose. It has been found, however, that grasshoppers pounded into a paste imitated the roe so exactly that the most knowing of the sardines cannot distinguish the difference; and accordingly the French Government has imported large quantities of the insects from Algeria in order to try the new bait on a large scale. Should the experiment prove an entire success the grasshopper problem which has so puzzled the Western agriculturist may be considered solved.

Scalped.

A horrible accident happened at a woollen factory at Arnprior, Can., a few days since. Mary Stuart, one of the factory girls, while sweeping the floor, was caught by a revolving shaft by the hair of the head, and the whole of her scalp was torn off from the nape of the neck to the eyebrows. One eye is damaged and both ears are gone. It was the most sickening sight, to see a bare skull with bright eyes in it. She does not experience any great pain, and only complains of a fullness in her head. If inflammation does not set in she will in all probability recover.

JUST FOR FUN.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

Up in the morning and out of bed,
He takes a leap on his trowsy head,
And, seeing him act like a crazy clown,
We know that the day will be upside down.

He gives the kitten a shower-bath
And works her up to a state of wrath;
He ties a bottle to Rover's tail
And drops his cap in the milking-pail.

He drives the hen from her nice warm nest;
The turkeys and geese have no chance to rest;
And oh! how they waddle; and how they run!
As if they knew it was just for fun!

He teases his sister and pulls her ears,
And pulls her hair till he brings the tears,
And is always so rough with her dolls and toys
That she says she had rather not play with the boys.

Sometimes he carries his fun so far
That he's quite as rude as the street boys are,
And, called to account for his ways so rough,
Thinks "I didn't mean to!" excuse enough.

He's such a clown he don't know
How deep in mischief a boy may go;
And yet so sorry when harm is done
We can't help thinking 'twas just for fun.

"DO YOU 'spose little girls have to eat oatmeal in heaven, mamma?" asked a sunny-haired little lady of six, as she was worrying down her morning saucerful, her eye resting longingly on a steaming pile of buckwheats the while.

"Now, WILLIE, do have a little courage. When I have a powder to take, I don't like it any more than you do; but I make up my mind that I will take it, and I do!" "And when I have a powder to take," replied Willie, "I make up my mind that I won't take it, and I don't!"

"Oh," says Jamie, "I havena seen ye this lang time. Could ye cheenge a twenty-poond note?" "Ay could I," says the laird, drawing out his pocket-book. "Ah, weel," says Jamie, "ye're no needin' siller, then," and walked on."

AN old curmudgeon was sunning himself on the postoffice steps yesterday forenoon when a lady came along, having a letter in her hand. She looked up and down the building, hesitated, and asked the man: "Where do you mail your letters here?" "I always mail mine inside the building," he calmly replied, "but you can do as you please about it—there's no law to compel you to!" The look she gave him would have knocked a street car off the track.—Detroit Free Press.

A Recommendation.

When Justice Potter reached his office yesterday morning a man about forty years old and decidedly old-fashioned in looks was there waiting for him. He talked about the weather for awhile, and then remarked:

"A man down here on Larned street sent me to you, saying that you could recommend me to some nice-looking widow."

The Court has become used to such applications, and without betraying any surprise, he gave the stranger written directions to find a widow who lives in the northern part of the city. The man went away, but returned in the course of two hours, one of his eyes growing black and blue, a scratch on his nose, a torn coat-collar, and a generally unsettled look. He sat down, pulled up his pant leg to exhibit the marks of a do bite, pointed to his eye and grimly observed:

"I believe you recommended me to widow?"

"Yes."

"But she didn't want to marry—didn seem to care anything about the ho bonds of wedlock!"

"I didn't think she would!" sigh his honor, as he turned to his law-boo again.

The stranger looked at him for five o six minutes, and then went out witho another word.—Detroit Free Press.

Johnson's Revenge.

John Prince Johnson had an object in getting drunk. John Prince Johnson's wife is not more than nine-tenths angel, according to his story, and he wanted revenge on her. The other day she said to him:

"Get up and dust and go out and work and earn some cash and help me pay the rent and buy wood and keep something in the cupboard."

That was a nice way for a loving wife to talk to a fat husband with a bald spot on his crown. He wanted to sit around and get his breath for the spring campaign, but she didn't seem to care if he worked himself to death. He looked at her across the stove and replied:

"Florinda Jane, I'll make you feel bad for saying them words," and he put on his boots and went out into the cold world. When his Honor asked the prisoner if he had any excuse for being drunk, John Prince Johnson looked greatly pleased and replied:

"None at all. Fine me $5 and she'll have to pay it out of her own money!"

That was his plan to secure revenge. His Honor also seemed tickled when he heard it, and he made the sentence for six months or $50 fine. When John Prince Johnson heard the words his legs gave out and his teeth chattered. He said he had a lame leg, the asthma, a touch of consumption and a taste of dyspepsia, but nevertheless he would go right out and tear up ground and throw bricks around and strike a job if the court would let him off. The court wouldn't do it, and Mrs. Johnson, who was in the audience, went out doors, saying:

"He may howl, and rave, and perspire and expire, but right up there is where he'll roost till his time is out!"—Free Press.

Juvenile Amusements in Denver.

Top-spining, marble-playing, and all other similar sidewalk pastimes, says the Denver News, have suddenly been superseded, among bad boys, by a new and cruel sport called "jewsharping chickens." Procuring a grain of corn, the heart is hollowed out, and in the hole thus made is tied a piece of string. To the other end a straw is secured. When this is done the whole is thrown to a chicken, which gobbles up and swallows the grain. Of course the string and straw follow, lodging in the throat with the end sticking out of the mouth. Then the sport, if anything so cruel can be called sport, begins. The chicken, unable to get the straw up or down, begins a motion with one foot, while standing on the other, which is not unlike that of a boy playing on a jewsharp. No music of course proceeds from the throat of the unfortunate chicken, but its curious gyrations afford an infinite fund of amusement to the boys, who look on in very much the same manner in which a crowded audience views a screaming farce. It is a terrible ordeal to the chicken, but then it is so much fun for the boys, and Young America, you know, must have its part.

Curious Death-bed Scene.

Near Stanton's Mills, Somerset county Pa., there died recently two very aged women, sisters, the elder aged eighty-seven and the younger eighty-two. They resided with the family of the son of one of them, and both became somewhat childish and intractable several months prior to their death. They were sick at the same time, and occupied beds in the same room, footing each other. It is related by a neighbor that the two old women quarreled just a short time previous to their death about the position in which the Bible should be placed upon a table in the room, and each was bound to have her way. Too feeble to move, they lay in bed, and in the manner of little children called each other "names," meanwhile shaking their fists in a way they probably thought was very threatening. It had been the boast of each that she would live longer than her sister; and at last when the younger woman peacefully passed from earth, the elder seemed for a moment to glory in the fact that she had won the race. But it was not for long. Even before the body of her dead sister was cold, she, too, relinquished her feeble hold on life, and sought the sleep that knows no waking this side the portals of the tomb.

Dead Letters.

There were 4,400,000 letters received at the returned letter offices in London last year, of which 20,000 were not addressed. One of them contained over $10,000 in bank notes. Among the odd addresses were the following: "Mr. Smith, at the back of the church, England," and "My dear Father in Yorkshire, at the White Cottage with White Pailings." One was directed, "This is for her that makes dresses for young ladies, that lives at t'other side of the road to James Brockslip, Edensover, Chesterfield." And another, "This is for the young girl that wears spectacles, who minds two babies, 30 Sheriff street, off Prince Edwin street, Liverpool."

A Man and Wife Parted.

A reverend gentleman horrified a small company a few evenings ago by telling them that he and his wife had separated.

"Not parted!" inquiringly exclaimed three or four in a breath.

"Yes," said the gentleman with a sigh; "we had some words and parted."

A shudder went round the room, when some one inquired, "For good?"

"Oh, no!" said the divine. "She has only gone to the country, and will be back in a day or two."

"But," said one of the bolder ones, after a while, "did you really have any words with her?"

"Oh, yes! She said, 'Good by, dear,' and so did I.—Boston Transcript.

THE railways in different parts of the country are beginning to arrange Centennial excursion trains to Philadelphia. The plans and prices are not completed, but the proposed schedules fix the rates at a trifle above half the usual fare. Visitors will then be enabled to go and return from Philadelphia at a little more than the regular fare one way, which will bring the excursion within the reach of the great bulk of our people, and make a paying business for the railroads. If the plans are properly matured, there is no good reason why at least 10,000,000 of our people shall not visit the Centennial this summer. The great hotels in Philadelphia offer accommodations at from $4 to $5 per day, but the Centennial Agency has arranged with several thousand boarding houses where visitors can be accommodated at $2.50 per day, exclusive of the noon meal, which it is presumed will be obtained on the grounds. These houses are to be placed under the supervision of inspectors, who promise to see that everything is decent and in order. So far as prices are concerned the arrangement promises to be all that can be expected, and it is hoped they will be so in every other respect.

The Reign of Alexander II.

A letter from St. Petersburg says: "Russia celebrates to-day (March 2) the twenty-first anniversary of Alexander II.'s accession. The new reign found a debt of two milliards, the budget was 200,000,000 roubles, there were only 974 kilometres of railways, the river navigation had 144 steamers, the people were in serfdom and had no right of real property, there was no popular education, justice was administrative. To-day justice has undergone liberal reforms, including the introduction of juries or barristers; there are 22,000 elementary schools; the people have been enfranchised, are endowed with property and have the right of voting; 18,414 kilometres of railways are at work, and 2,079 are being constructed; there are 700 packets and 2,500 merchant vessels; the budget is 570,000,000 roubles. The purchase of the property given to the freed peasants has cost 500,000,000 roubles, and the railways 550,000,000. The total new expenditure would amount to two milliards, which with the previous debt would form four milliards. Yet the public debt is only 300,000,000 more than twenty-one years ago. Such are the blessings of the reign of Alexander II., executing the last wishes of his august father, daily caring for peace, and making the welfare of the nation the aim of his whole life.

A Contrary Mule.

A farmer in this county (says a North Carolina paper) has a mule so awfully contrary that he can do nothing with it. Put him in harness, and it is hard to say which way he will travel. Put a saddle on him, and he appears to doze, but to try to mount him, and he will all of a sudden begin to kick every way—straight out, straddle-bug, with all four legs at once. As to eating, he will eat anything, from his feed-trough up to a wooden saddle. The owner took a notion to have him shod, but he kicked out the blacksmith shop and returned home. The owner tried to kill him, some time back, so he tied his ears with a trace chain and rode him for six consecutive days and nights as hard as he could under whip and spur. The fact is, that he nearly killed himself in the effort, and had to be carried up-stairs to bed, and his firm belief was that the mule would die that night; but, to his astonishment, the next morning he found that the mule had kicked to death a Chester sow weighing 300 pounds, bit a piece out of his horse's shoulder, ate up a saddle, blanket and bridle, tore down the fence, and was splurging about, more devilish than ever, to find something else meaner to do.

A NEW idea in life insurance has sprung up in the Southwest. The author would have attached to all policies an agreement to the effect that "the insurance company promises in case the insured becomes the victim of chronic disease affecting his prospects of longevity, which skilled medical advice, combined with climatic treatment, can greatly mollify, to furnish the advice gratuitously, and also, if needed, to loan the insured a given amount of his policy with which he may be enabled to go to the climate prescribed."

A Few Words to Feeble and Delicate Women.

By R. V. PIERCE, M. D., of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., author of "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," etc., etc.

Knowing that you are subject to a great amount of suffering, that delicacy on your part has a strong tendency to prolong it, and the longer it is neglected the more you have to endure and the more difficult of cure your case becomes, I, as a physician, who am daily consulted by scores of your sex, desire to say to you, that I am constantly meeting with those who have been treated for their ailments for months without being benefited in the least, until they have become perfectly discouraged, and have almost made up their mind never to take another dose of medicine, or be tortured by any further treatment. They had rather die and have their sufferings ended than to live and suffer as they have. They say they are worn out by suffering, and are only made worse by treatment. Of anything more discouraging, we certainly cannot conceive, and were there no more successful mode of treating such difficulties than that, the principles of which teach the reducing and depleting of the vital forces of the system, when the indications dictate a treatment directly the reverse of the one adopted for them, their case would be deplorable indeed. But, lady sufferers, there is a better and far more successful plan of treatment for you; one more in harmony with the laws and requirements of your system. A harsh, irritating caustic treatment and strong medicines will never cure you. If you would use rational means, such as common sense should dictate to every intelligent lady, take such medicines as embody the very best invigorating tonics and nervines, compounded with special reference to your delicate system. Such a happy combination you will find in my Favorite Prescription, which has received the highest praise from thousands of your sex. Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet or ascend a flight of stairs; that continual drain that is sapping from your system all your former elasticity, and driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces that renders you irritable and fretful,—may all be overcome and subdued by a persevering use of that marvelous remedy. Irregularities and obstructions to the proper working of your system are relieved by this mild and safe means, while periodical pains, the existence of which is a sure indication of serious disease that should not be neglected, readily yield to it, and if its use be kept up for a reasonable length of time, the special cause of these pains is permanently removed. Further light on these subjects may be obtained from "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," in which I have devoted a large space to the consideration of all forms of diseases peculiar to your sex. This work will be sent (post-paid) to any address on receipt of $1.50. My Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists.

Mrs. Fitch's Diamonds.

The revenue authorities are puzzled to know what to do with the Khedive of Egypt's famous gift to Gen. Sherman's daughter. The diamonds are locked up in the big vault in the Sub-treasury. They were placed there in June last, and unless they are taken away before next June, they will be classified as unclaimed goods, and sold by auction to pay the duties and storage. If this should happen, the money, after the deduction of the official charges, would be paid to Drexel, Morgan & Co., in whose name the diamonds are consigned. The trouble is that Congress in authorizing Lieut. Fitch to receive the present to his wife, neglected to relieve him from the payment of the duties. The necklace and ear-rings which compose the gift were first said to be worth $250,000, but experts have since appraised them at $75,000. The duty on this amount would be about $40,000. Gen. Sherman feels that he is too poor to pay this, and he is unwilling to appeal to Congress for an exemption of the payment of the duties. Neither the Secretary of the Treasury, the Collector, nor any of his deputies are disposed to exercise their power of granting a free permit for the diamonds, and the Turkish ambassador, who has the official prerogative of receiving them in his name, will not ask for their release, because the Khedive is only recognized by his Government as a vassal.—New York Sun.

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.—The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country.

AGENTS WANTED

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than 1,000 of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY, M. D., writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:

FERGUSON STATION, Logan Co., Ky., June 6, 1872.

DR. J. BALL & CO., Oculists:

GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too skeptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and indorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye Cups.

I am, respectfully, J. A. L. BOYER.

WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SALVIES, KY., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., ATCHISON, PA., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

REV. S. B. FALKINSBURG, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your name be enshrined in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

HORACE B. DURANT, M. D., says: "I sold and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small, catchpenny affair, but a superb, number one, tip-top business, promises, as far as I can see, to be life-long."

Mayor E. C. ELLIS wrote us, November 15th, 1869: "I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

HON. HORACE GREELEY, late Editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. BALL, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. MERRICK writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am 71 years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M.D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, DR. J. BALL & CO., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss.

June 5th, '73, personally appeared Adolph Biornberg, made oath to the foregoing certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

WM. STEVENS, J. P.

LAWRENCE CITY, Mass., June 9th, 1873.

We, the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Biornberg for years, believe him to be an honest, moral man, trustworthy, and in truth and veracity unspotted. His character is without reproach.

M. BONNEY, Ex-Mayor.
S. B. W. DAVIS, Ex-Mayor.
GEORGE S. MERRILL, P. M.
ROBT. H. TEWKSBURY, City Treas.

Reader, these are a few certificates out of thousands we receive, and to the aged we will guarantee your old and diseased eyes can be made new; your impaired sight, dimness of vision and overworked eyes can be restored; weak, watery and sore eyes cured; the blind may see; spectacles be discarded, sight restored, and vision preserved. Spectacles and surgical operations useless.

Please send your address to us, and we will send you our book, A GEM WORTH READING!

A DIAMOND WORTH SEEING.

Save your eyes and restore your sight; throw away your spectacles!

By reading our Illustrated Physiology and Anatomy of the Eyesight, of 100 pages, tells how to restore impaired vision and overworked eyes; how to cure weak, watery, inflamed and near-sighted eyes, and all other diseases of the eyes. Waste no more money by adjusting huge glasses on your nose and disfiguring your face. Book mailed free to any person. Send on your address.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.
Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.
Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of
DR. RADWAY'S
Sarsaparillian
Resolvent,
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscle, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awakes fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changes from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding; little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functions harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucus from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure, "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hapless to a new life and new existence, where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, APRIL 13, 1876.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, April, 10, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—The lovely weather we have been enjoying for a week past, has had the effect during the day of depopulating residences, emptying their living contents upon the beautiful streets of this city, until the pedestrian is jostled not infrequently in his promenade, to a disagreeable extent. The grass is waving knee high on the thrifty parks, and birds are flitting from the many beautiful trees now just putting forth their green foliage.

The Belknap affair has put a check upon the recklessness of Washington society, and few, if any, hightoned assemblages are indulged in. There is little gossip to record, and even legislative matters loose interest for the attractions of the out-door world. The lobby at Washington has been almost starved to death this winter. There is not a single thing to do, and the patriots who have been so long living at the expense of their country, are in despair. This of course is one of the effects of a democratic House of Representatives. One of my republican friends insists that if his had been a republican Congress it would have been a gay session and "something done." That last he meant by way of lobbying. These lobbyists are not particular in their expressions of affection for a certain member from Indiana, who is generally known here as Judge Holman. They think him parsimonious, mean, and stingy, but he seems to prosper under their adverse opinions. Some of the members are often greatly put out because of his persistent style of objecting to every thing that contemplates an expenditure of the people's money. The great tribulation of a member, when he introduces a bill, is to know how to get it through over the objection of Holman, as his objection will surely come. I have been a spectator of the inner workings of legislation here, and have seen every creditable influence brought to bear upon the "great objector," but while he is polite and agreeable, he never surrenders that one privilege of objecting, to any one.

Mr. Morton's resolution to inquire into the so-called Mississippi outrage, which has been adopted, is of course, only intended to get at one side of the question, and it would be perfectly legitimate for the democratic House to appoint another committee to get at the other side. The only object of Mr. Morton's committee is to flaunt the "red rag" once more in the face of the North, and rally the loyal to the republican flag. The Philadelphia Enquirer, a republican paper, suggests that after it gets through with Mississippi the committee might as well apply for perpetual authority as a sort of standing committee on opposition majorities in the States. It would be a great gain to have such a committee ready at hand when wanted.

Bell, the administration witness, who testified to some ugly facts relative to the Babcock trial is now called a bummer and dead beat. He has been employed by the Grant dynasty for some time, was a union spy in the army, and now because he talks what he knows, he is denounced as a man of no reputation. If you could have heard his story, plainly told, you would not think so. It reminds me of the attempt the radical papers made to slove Belknap upon the democratic party, after his identification for years with the Grant party, because he once was a democrat. If he had remained such, he would not now be suffering the disgrace he merits.

Now it comes out that the reason given why Grant removed Henderson was that the letter spoke of him simply as "Grant," and did not call him His Excellency the President of the United States. Mr. Pierrepoint told Mr. Henderson that this was the only objectionable thing in his speeches. His Excellency.

This brings forcibly to mind what advances a dirty, vulgar aristocracy on the one hand and the adoring flunkeyism on the other, have grown up around the centralization, ring and lavish expenditures of the national government. The public functionaries get rich upon frauds and jobs, and cease to consider themselves the servants of the people, and thought themselves their masters. The extravagant living and shoddy aristocratic love of display at Washington were the chief causes of the venality and rascality of the Cabinet. General Sherman lived in the West because he could not afford to live in Washington and keep up appearances upon a salary of $12,500 per year. What "appearances" has he got to keep up? Who is he? And who is it that wants him to shine and dazzle? The Duke of Wellington and Frederick the Great, both of whom were soldiers that were very well in their way, made it their pride to preserve a Spartan and military simplicity in their lives even in their old age. General Sherman would do himself honor by soldierly frugality and plainness. Nobody wants to see his prancing horses or liveries, nor any other sham splendors.

His excellency! To do Grant justice he personally caers very little for show. He likes a quiet talk with a shrewd horse jockey or a "practical man" like Boss Shepherd. He does not care for display but he likes adulation, subserviency, sycophancy and flunkeyism. He likes to be silent, stern, irresponsible, self-willed, despotic. He considers that he is a sovereign, not a public servant of limited authority, and he likes to be called "His Excellency." Geo. Washington and Thos. Jefferson, after election as President, rode quietly on horseback over to the capitol, tied their horses, went into the office of the Chief Justice were sworn in. That was their inauguration. That is the true ideal republic. Jefferson was a scorner of titles and of all the tags and rags of aristocracy. His example was handed down, and there was always in the old republic a noble pride in republican simplicity. This was the case as late as Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln and Andy Johnson. It is the Belknap-Robeson-Williams-Prince-Fred-and-Dook-Sartoris-dynasty that are the haughty swells and aristocrats. Well, we will soon be rid of the aristocracy, and shall enjoy all the more our return to democratic simplicity and cleanliness.

Speaker Kerr remarked to a prominent Indianian last week that he was "getting tired of these d—d investigations." Just so; as soon as the dragnet began to haul in democrats instead of republicans, the Confederates called a halt. We say let the fishing go on till every last one is caught.—[Indianapolis Journal.

The above appeared in the Republican the other week. I went to the Speaker's room as soon as I saw it, and asked him if that statement was true. He authorized me to say that it was infamously false in every particular, that he has been in favor of these investigations and knew that they were needed. No one, not even the most radical republican could have resisted the impression that he spoke the truth when he made this denial. He is one of the few politicians who have had little to do with buncombe in their political life, and his reputation for integrity is unquestioned. As long as the Republican copies from the Journal it may expect to give publicity to the most villainous of falsehoods. I hope it will make the correction with pleasure.

The impeachment trial has been set for the 17th inst., but it is said the counsel for Belknap will ask for two weeks further time. A desperate effort will be made to save him, even more determined than Babcock. The party must be preserved at all hazzard. The election in Connecticut is more gratifying than that of New Hampshire. A large increase in the Legislature is a fruitful victory.

Shearer & Wilson.

THE above named gentlemen are conducting a Paining Mill on South Jackson street. They are prepared to execute all kinds of scrol work, re-sawing turning matching and moulding of all discriptions, and can, in consequence give the best figures possible, having this advantage over competitors. Their work for the past is a sufficient recommendation as to their competency and responsibility. They also take contracts for all kinds of wooden work.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

Sealed proposals will be received by the Board of School Trustees of the Town of Auburn, Ind., at Rickel & Tefft's law office in said town, until Monday, April 24th, 1876, at noon, for the construction and full completion of a School Building on the five acre lot south of Brandt and Ashleys addition to said town, and furnishing all the material therefore in accordance with plans and specifications on file at said Rickel & Tefft's office. Each proposal to be accompained by a Bond in the sum of Five Hundred dollars, that the builder or builders, will give the proper bond if awarded the contract.

The work to be completed on or before the first day of September, 1876.

The contractors will be paid in monthly estimates, as the work progresses.

The School Trustees reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

Eastern papers are warning young ladies against letters that have been sent out from Philadelphia, signed Hayes, Arlington & Bro., offering them from eight to fifteen dollars per week, meals included, to come to that city during the centennial to tend news stands, and to perform other light but genteel work. The letter adds, "you must not let your parents know that you are coming. This you can better do after you get here." Young ladies will do well to give no heed to such letters. The object most likely is to betray them into wicked hands.

Charley Inks, we feel confident, will peruse the following item of important news with more than ordinary interest:

H. L. Taylor received a letter from the Canada Southern Railroad Company in answer to one he wrote the company concerning the disposition of some ties which lie on his land, in which they say "What will you charge us to delivered there we will either sell them to that company or ship them around and use them on "our Toledo line." This goes to show very plainly that the company does not intend to build the road through Wolcottville very soon, if ever.—Lagrange Register.

All persons who occasionally send papers or other documents to their friends, will be pleased to learn that on Tuesday of last week the postage bill was reported upon favorably by the Senate Postal Committee. It makes a needed and much demanded reduction in the rates of postage on newspapers and other transient matter. The bill establishes a uniform rate of one cent on every three ounces or less of transient papers or magazines, and one cent for every additional two ounces. For third-class matter, one cent per ounce for any distance not exceeding one thousand miles, and two cents for distances over one thousand miles.

One or other of the House committees investigating the Post Office Department should give Postmaster-General Jewell an opportunity to explain what influence led him to withdraw his advertisements soliciting new bids for mail service on routes in the Southwest which had been fraudulently awarded to one of the most notorious of straw-bid contractors. When Mr. Jewell advertised these routes a second time, he was laboring under a great access of zeal for reform and if he had taken honest bids for the service he would have effected a great saving for the Government. It would be interesting and probably instructive, to know what led him to take the back track so suddenly.

The drug store was closed, and he rang the bell vigorously. The druggist at once put his head out of an upper window, and inquired sleepily, "Who's there?" "Mr. Carr," responded the gentleman at the bell. "Missed a car! Well, what's that to me, confound you. Stop ringing that bell, and go about your business man!" Down went the window and the druggist was lost to sight. The discomfited Mr. Carr was lost in amazement for a time, but finally seized the bell and rang it again frantically. The druggist's head appear at the window again. He was wide awake this time. "Who's there now?" Mr. Carr, I tell you." "Why. d——n your impudence! Who cares if you're drunk, and have missed a car, it's your own look out. Don't you touch that bell again." "But I tell you, you idiot, I'm Mr. —— Carr." "Oh, Lord! Why didn't you say so before?"

DIED—At his residence in this place April 11th, inst. Joseph M. Robins, age 60 years. Funeral to-day from the Jackson-st, M. E. Church.

Mr. Robins was a native of the State of New York, but has resided in or near this place since 1851. He was a man of generous and kind impulses, agreeable and companionable almost to a fault, affectionate and indulgent as a husband and father, and to his neighbors a genial accommodating and sympathysing friend, Thus again we see a fellow mortal with many noble and commendable qualities, after a few years of labor, toil and anxiety, and with but few pleasures and joys, pass away, and the busy world who knew them, knows them no more forever. Peace to his ashes.

C. A. O. MCCLELLAN, Secretary.
W. H. DILLS, Chairman.

MR. EDITOR—Accept my sincere and hearty thanks for the high compliment paid to my humble production, in your issue of March 23rd. I assure you it was highly appreciated.

But by the way, Mr. Editor, are there any of the friends, or relations, of the late defunct Secretary of War, among your corps of typos Does the inquiry enrage you? I will tell you why I make it, upon no other grounds can I account for the murderous, and mutilating assault made upon my last production, on the fall of Belknap, only upon the supposition that some of the friends of the man with the crooked conscience, until lately doing business for the firm of U. S. Grant & Co, and occasionally a little job on his own 'hook,' might be among your staff of typos. Well, friends of the typos staff, had I known that my humble little production had been the occasion of insult to any of you, I had rather, bad as the roads are, have made a trip to Auburn on purpose, to have given you a chance for a smash at my own grim and war-like countenance, than to have had the assault made upon my poor little (and as I thought) innocent verses. But perhaps I am entirely mistaken in my supposition. Perhaps it was only intended as a joke. Well, if that was really the intention, I wish you had let me known you were so full of joke, because I am some on the joke myself, being descended from a nation of jokers, my father being a native of the "Bonnie green isle," where they live and grow fat on jokes and "petaties" and I should have been glad to have visited your beautiful city, and spent a full day in passing jokes with you, rather than to have had them passed off upon my inoffensive little production, which was entirely unable to take its own part. Or am I still mistaken, and was it brought about by your having visited your beloved Rachel (is that the name) the previous night, and your eyes being heavy with loss of sleep, and visions of your angels with golden hair, flittering before them, it was difficult for you to distinguish the type, and consequently the mistakes. Or did you have a "wee" morsel of the "a-hem" juice of Rye aboard. Oh, no, "I can never think that of you. But perhaps I am too sensitive about my humble productions, but they are poor enough to make the best of them and when they come before the public eye in the shape they did I confess it does grind a little on my feelings.

For when you leave out 'and' and 'long,'
You spoil the measures of my song;
And 'who' for 'has' and 'sting' for stings,
Makes an almighty miss of things;
But when 'assist' comes for 'assert,'
It makes a feller tear his shirt;
And when you will leave out the 'would,'
A feller can't feel as he should;

And now Mr. Editor, just one word to the typos, and I am done, for the present, and here it comes.

What eer ye do,
Don't bite and chew
My Darling little verses,
I cant endure
Their look demure,
It almost brings the curses.

The following from the Interocean is worth pondering over by those smitten with the fever: "It seems to be generally agreed by all parties in the Black Hills, that no person will find gold plenty and obtain it without laboring hard for it." This coming from a paper which has, from the start, advertised the Hills, as the new Ophir and Eldorado is significant.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1876.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

An extensive crooked whisky ring has been unearthed in New York and Brooklyn. A number of seizures of books and papers have been made, and immediate prosecution of the crooked crew is promised.

Three persons were fatally injured in Division street, New York, the other day, by a falling wall....Patrick Donahue, the proprietor of the Boston Pilot, recently failed and went into bankruptcy, and now it turns out that he has squandered thousands of dollars of trust funds that confiding friends had placed in his keeping.

THE WEST.

Parlman and Rush, the first of the Chicago whisky conspirators placed on trial, have been found guilty....The Union Pacific railroad has discovered a big fraud at Laramie City. A man named A. H. Hill has been advertising through the East for "miners for the Black Hills, work guaranteed for a year and free passes." When letters were received replying to the advertisement, Hill sent a reply that by inclosing $10 to him he would send the promised pass. It is believed he has swindled hundreds of people.

The office of the United States Express Company, at Akron, O., was robbed, a few nights ago, of a large amount of money. The robbers entered the room of the clerk and stole the key of the office from his pantaloons pocket, and the robbery was not discovered till next morning. The loss will amount to $25,000 or $30,000.

The United States grand jury at Chicago has returned an indictment against ex-Congressman Jasper D. Ward for conspiracy against the Government in connection with the whisky frauds. ....A horrible triple murder was enacted at Carlinville, Ill., a few days ago. A man named Thomas Tracy, in a fit of jealousy, murdered his wife and little daughter, and then took his own life by cutting his throat with a butcher-knife.

Wilbur F. Storey, the editor of the Chicago Times, is foreman of the grand jury of the Criminal court of that city....Six roustabouts, all negroes, lost their lives at Boonville, Mo., a few days ago, by the sinking of a grain barge.

The city of Salt Lake, Utah, was thrown into consternation, the other day, by three terrible explosions, succeeding each other at intervals of a few seconds. People rushed into the streets in terror, horses ran away, and consternation reigned supreme. Windows were blown in, doors blown from their hinges, chimneys blown down, and many buildings badly injured. The cause of this terrible explosion was not known until an immense volume of smoke was seen rising from Arsenal Hill, immediately north of the city. Upon this hill was four powder-magazines, in which were stored thirty or forty tons of powder, all of which exploded almost simultaneously. A flouring-mill and the water-works buildings on City Creek were riddled with boulders. Immense boulders fell, crashing through buildings throughout the city, some falling a mile distant. There were three men at work at one of these magazines. All that could be found of them were small pieces of flesh, the largest piece being a portion of a foot in a boot. A Mrs. Vannatta and a boy named Joseph Radden, living in distant parts of the city, were struck by boulders and killed, and one lady died from fright. A number of other persons were injured, some probably fatally. In the vicinity of the exploded magazines were found portions of the remains of two boys who had gone out gunning in the morning. One of their hands was found clutching a duck. It is now supposed they had fired into the magazine, causing the explosion.

SOUTH.

Two young men, named Robinson and Mitchell, in Campbell county, Va., quarreled about a woman, and agreed to settle the dispute at the pistol's mouth. One round was fired, which resulted in Robinson being shot dead, and Mitchell receiving a bullet in the head that will kill him.

A New Orleans dispatch of a recent date says: "At a meeting, to-night, of the Southern Republican club, a wrangle occurred over the adoption of the minutes of the previous meeting. A fight ensued, and during the firing three men were shot, one of whom, Lucien Adams, Jr., will die. The other wounded are Lucien Adams, Sr., and John W. King. Others are reported wounded, but their names are kept secret by members of the club."

WASHINGTON.

One Bell, a Government detective, told a rather extraordinary story to the Clymer committee, the other day. He testified that he was employed by Babcock to rob the District-attorney of certain papers during the progress of the St. Louis whisky trials, and that Levi P. Luckey, late private secretary to the President, was conversant with the scheme, as well as A. C. Bradley, one of Babcock's counsel. Bell said he gained access to certain important papers in Dyer's office, read them, and reported to Babcock. Luckey and Babcock both deny Bell's story, pronouncing it a tissue of lies.

President Grant has just recovered from a severe attack of pleurisy, which confined him to his bed several days....The President has nominated Sumner Howard, Attorney of the United States Territory of Utah, and W. M. Daily, Marshal of the United States District of Nebraska....The following are the provisions of the bill passed by the House of Representatives for the substitution of subsidiary silver coin for fractional currency: That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue silver coins of the United States of the denomination of 10, 20, 25 and 50 cents of standard value in redemption of an equal amount of fractional currency, whether the same be now in the treasury awaiting redemption or whether it may be presented for redemption, and the Secretary of the Treasury may, under the regulations of the Treasury department, provide for such redemption and issue by substitution at the regular sub-treasuries and public depositories of the United States until the whole amount of fractional currency shall be redeemed. That silver coins of the United States of the denomination of one dollar shall be legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $50 in any one payment, and silver coins of the United States of denominations of less than one dollar shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $25 in any one payment.

Dist. Atty. Dyer, of St. Louis, was in Washington last week, and corroborated, before the Clymer committee, the testimony of the detective Bell, so far as it related to Bell's alleged interviews with him, and his exploits in abstracting papers and evidence bearing on the whisky prosecutions from his (Dyer's) office. The District-attorney said the reason he did not use Bell as a witness in the Babcock case, was that he did not regard him as a reliable witness without corroborative evidence. In further confirmation of Bell's testimony, Secretary Chandler says he appointed Bell at the request of the President's and afterwards dismissed him on the President's motion, Gen. Grant telling him that Bell was a scoundrel. It is known that Bell did get access to Dyer's papers in St. Louis, and that a detective or watchman caught him in the act of replacing some. It is also known that the cipher he had was mostly in Luckey's handwriting. Washington dispatches state that Bell will be able to substantiate many of the essential parts of his testimony by records and other written evidence, and by the evidence of credible witnesses....The public debt statement for April is as follows:

Six per cent. bonds	$ 984,999,650
Five per cent. bonds	710,027,600
Total coin bonds		$1,695,027,250

Mr. Schleicher, member of Congress from Texas, received a dispatch from Brownsville, a few days ago, stating that Matamoras had been declared in a state of siege and a forced loan levied upon foreign residents, no Mexicans being included in the demand. It is understood that orders have been sent from Washington for the protection of American residents of Matamoras against the exactions and oppressions of the Mexican authorities.

The amount of greenbacks deposited with the Treasurer of the United States during the month of March by National banks desiring to withdraw their circulation and realize upon their bonds amounted to $5,304,000. Treasurer New estimates that the contraction of the currency cowing the remaining nine months of the year from this cause at $1,000,000. ....Washington dispatches state that "President Grant is in financial embarrassment on account of unfortunate real estate transactions. Recently he sold the bulk of his real estate in Washington. His last act has been to order the sale of his Long Branch and St. Louis property. He does this, his friends say, because he is resolved to clear off all of his indebtedness, and this is the only way possible for him to do so.

Members of both Houses of Congress are looking forward with much apprehension to the anticipated dead-lock over the appropriation bills. A growing disposition is manifested in both branches of Congress to have its own way, and the result of the obstinacy of each will probably be repeated conferences and angry discussion until one House or the other yields....Secretary Bristow, in reply to the resolution adopted by the House, asking for the names of newspaper editors or correspondents he had paid money to in connection with the whisky prosecutions, says "that he has neither the knowledge nor information of the payment of any sum of money by any officer or person to any newspaper editor or correspondent for any purpose whatever; nor has he reason to suppose that any such payment has been made."....Gen. Henderson, the assistant counsel in the whisky trials at St. Louis, who was dismissed by the President, was examined by the House committee on the whisky prosecutions the other day, but contributed nothing new to the stock of information upon that subject. He knew nothing about C. S. Bell and his operations in St. Louis; said he believed the letter of the Attorney-general to the district-attorneys was calculated to cripple the prosecutions, in that it would naturally intimidate or alarm witnesses; said he did not know exactly the cause of his removal, but supposed it was on account of reflections upon the President in his address to the jury.

Information received by the State department justifies the conclusion that the British Government has fully decided not to surrender Winslow, the forger. Under the British laws the criminal will be held for a period of sixty days from the 21st of March, and can then demand to be released under a habeas corpus. If Winslow is released from custody, the extradition treaty between the two nations will undoubtedly be terminated....The House special committee in the whisky prosecutions in Missouri examined Dist. Atty. Dyer at Washington, one day last week. Mr. Dyer now seems to think that all the suspicions he frankly entertained of everybody in Washington, except Secretary Bristow and Solicitor Wilson, were groundless. The testimony taken before the grand jury, Dyer states, was given to the defense by a juror named Fox, one of the two who voted against indictment, who afterward went to Washington and gave the testimony away, getting in some way his son appointed to an office.

Secretary Chandler testifies before the Committee on War Department Expenditures that the statements of the detective, C. S. Bell, so far as they relate to him, are wholly false. He says he never had any conversation with Bell; that Luckey never spoke to him about that individual, and that he had no knowledge whatever of his having been employed by Babcock or his friends. Mr. Chandler admitted that some weeks after the trial and acquittal of Babcock he received a letter from Borie, of Philadelphia, saying that the expenses of the trial had been $40,000; that it had ruined Babcock, and that he thought his friends should come to his aid. Thereupon he drew his check for $1,000 in Babcock's favor. ....An order issued by the President, through the Secretary of War, directing the re-establishment of army headquarters in Washington, and also providing that in future all orders issued by the War department pertaining to military affairs shall be promulgated through the General of the Army. It was on this latter point that the disagreement occurred between Gen. Sherman and Secretary Belknap, leading to the transfer of headquarters to St. Louis ... Postmaster General Jewell left Washington on the 5th inst. on an official tour of the country, for the purpose of inspecting the principal mail-routes and postoffices....The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections are reported to be unanimously opposed to the House bill prohibiting members, Senators and other officials from contributing money for election purposes. It is claimed that, under the provisions of the bill, candidates for office cannot subscribe money to purchase newspapers to distribute among voters.

Gen. Babcock, Levi P. Luckey and A. C. Bradley, who were charged by the detective Bell, in his testimony before the Clymer Committee, with having hired him (Bell) to abstract important papers and evidence from the District-attorney's office at St. Louis, have been heard by the committee touching the matter. Bradley, who, it seems, was a kind of secret attorney for Babcock, admits having directed Bell to get copies of all the evidence he could, and in case he could not get copies to secure the substance and forward it to him in Washington. Babcock and Luckey both deny having employed Bell to perform the service alleged by him. According to their story, Bell represented to them that there was a great conspiracy against the President by Bristow, Dyer, Henderson and others, with a view of breaking down the administration, and hence they hired Bell as a kind of spy on the doings of Henderson and Dyer.

GENERAL.

Our neighboring Republic across the Rio Grande, notwithstanding her little domestic jars, has found time to gather up and send to Philadelphia 228 cases of her goods and wares, to be exhibited at the Centennial. This collection, which arrived at New York by steamer the other day, it is said will form one of the most interesting features of the big show.

Twenty-two buildings, valued, with their contents, at $125,000, were destroyed by fire at Fairmount, W. Va., one day last week.

Severe storms and floods in the New England States have caused serious damage to mill property. At Borrillville, Conn., a mill and manufacturing property valued at over $200,000 were swept away. Some damage is also reported from New Jersey. At Canton, Worcester county, Mass., the Henry Pond dam gave way, destroying much valuable mill property, and almost obliterating the manufacturing village of Fullerville. Fortunately, the loss of life was not large. It is estimated that the damage to property in New England by the freshet will reach $1,000,000.

Forty miners left Scranton, Pa., the other day, for the Black Hills. They were accompanied to the depot by a brass band and a crowd of about 2,000 men, women and children. The gold-hunters were provided with arms, ammunition and mining implements, and were regularly officered.

Charles & Co.'s boot and shoe factory at Hopkinton, Mass., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $200,000.

The statement is made, on semi-official authority, that frauds on customs amounting to from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 per year have been perpetrated at San Francisco, Cal.

The military situation in Mexico is growing decidedly interesting. The capture of Matamoras was one of the most rapid and skillful operations of modern warfare, and if the insurgent chief continues his operations with similar success to the close a change of government may not be regarded as an extraordinary event. Gen. Diaz has expressed his determination to remain at Matamoras until his troops enter the city of Mexico, a threat, considering the great sympathy manifested by the people, and the disaffection existing in the army, which he seems not unlikely to carry into effect.

During the quarter ending with the month of March the receipts of the United States Patent office at Washington were $227,181.09, and the expenditures $161,289.78, leaving an excess of receipts to the amount of $65,891.31.

POLITICAL.

The Democrats of Connecticut have re-elected their Governor, Charles E. Ingersoll, by 7,500 majority, and secured a majority in both branches of the Legislature....Reports have been telegraphed to Washington from New York to the effect that Seymour, Church, and the Tammany crowd are actively opposing the appointment of a Tilden delegation to the St. Louis convention. Senator Kernan and most of the New York Democrats in Congress are also said to be opposed to the Governor.

The President has nominated Charles J. McMillan to be Consul-general at Rome....A Washington dispatch says "the Illinois Democrats in Congress have entered upon a very active canvass for Justice David Davis, of the United States Supreme court, as the Democratic Presidential candidate."

There was no choice for Governor in Rhode Island by the popular vote, of which Lippitt (Rep.), received 8,212; Howard (Prohib.), 6,223; and Beach (Dem.), 3,472. It now devolves upon the Legislature to choose a Governor, and as that body is strongly Republican, Gov. Lippitt's re-election is an assured fact.

The plague has reached Bagdad on its westward march, and the Egyptian sanitary authorities are enforcing strict quarantine upon all traffic from the Persian gulf, hoping thus to escape the simultaneous visitation of pestilence and financial ruin, the latter of which seems now inevitable.

A billiard match between Maurice Vigneaux, of Toulouse, France, and William Sexton, of New York, was played at Paris on the 31st ult. The contest was for the championship of the world, the centennial silver cup, and $1,000 a side, 600 points up, three balls. The match was won by Vigneaux, the present champion, who made 600 points to 459 scored by Sexton. The latter made a run of 129, the largest during the game.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Friday, March 31.—Senate.—The Senate was engaged nearly all day in debating Morton's resolutions directing an investigation into the recent election in Mississippi. The question was finally disposed of by the adoption of a substitute offered by Christiancy—yeas, 29; nays, 19.

House.—Cox presented a memorial signed by women of the United States, asking that women be granted the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia....A bill to define the tax on fermented and malt liquors was reported by Morrison, from the Ways and Means Committee and passed....A bill was passed to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate and fix points at which the collectors and supervisors of revenue shall hold their office....The House passed, by a vote of 122 to 100, the bill for the substitution of silver coin for fractional currency.

Saturday, April 1.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The proceedings in the House, as usual on Saturdays, were dull and uninteresting. A large share of the day was devoted to the consideration of the bill for the regulation of steam vessels, and a monotonous discussion about fog-horns, steam cock-valves, lights, larboard and starboard courses, etc. The bill was laid over till Saturday, 8th.... Robinson offered a resolution reciting that Horace Boynton, Clerk of the House Committee on Military Affairs, had been guilty of corrupt and base practices while an officer of the Internal Revenue Bureau in Texas, and directing the committee to investigate the facts. Adopted.

Monday, April 3.—Senate.—Various petitions were presented remonstrating against any change in the present tariff....Edmunds introduced a bill to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the Government bonds advanced to the Central and Western and Pacific Railroad Companies. ....Morton introduced a bill to amend the second, fourth and fifth sections of the Enforcement act.... The bill to amend the Bankrupt act was passed.... Three hours were spent in executive session on the case of R. H. Dana, Jr., without reaching a vote.... While the Senate was in executive session the Clerk of the House appeared and announced that the House had adopted articles of impeachment against Belknap.

House.—On motion of Knott, the impeachment articles against Belknap were taken up and unanimously adopted. Lord, Knott, Lynde, McMahon, Jenks, Hoar and Lapham were appointed managers on the part of the House....Bills were introduced by Hewitt and Farwell to provide for the resumption of specie payment; by Morrison, to amend the existing laws relating to the duties on imports; by Wells (Mo.), to amend the revenue laws; by Oliver, incorporating the Sioux City, Black Hills and Pacific Railroad Company....Blackburn offered a resolution requesting the President to inform the House whether, since the 4th of March, 1869, any executive office, acts, or duties, and if so, what, have been performed at a distance from the seat of Government established by law, and for how long at any one time, and in what part of the United States, and also whether any public necessity existed therefor. Adopted. Lynde offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information in regard to the payment of money to newspaper editors and correspondents in connection with the whisky prosecutions....Glover offered a resolution reciting that Kilbourn, the recusant real estate pool witness, was being fed in a sumptuous and extravagant manner, and directing that he be allowed only the regular prison fare. The House refused to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

Tuesday, April 4.—Senate.—The special committee to investigate the Mississippi troubles was announced as follows: Messrs. Boutwell, Cameron (Wis.), Oglesby, Bayard, and McDonald (Ind.).... The managers on the part of the House appeared in the Senate and presented the articles of impeachment against William Worth Belknap, late Secretary of War. The managers were received and assigned seats within the bar of the Senate, and when the Sergeant-at-arms had proclaimed silence, Lord read the articles at length. The reading of the articles of impeachment having been concluded, Ferry, the President pro tempore of the Senate, announced that the Senate would take the proper order on the subject of the impeachment, of which due notice would be given. The House managers then retired. The Senate subsequently adopted an order to print the articles of impeachment....The Senate, in executive session, rejected the nomination of Richard H. Dana, Jr., to be Minister to England. The vote stood: Yeas, 17; nays, 36.

House.—A message was received from the Senate announcing that the Senate was ready to receive the Belknap impeachment articles....Knott, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill to amend section 1,044 of the revised statutes so as to provide that "no person shall be prosecuted, tried or punished for any offense, except against the internal revenue, unless indicted within three years after such offense has been or may be committed." After discussion, the bill passed.... Blackburn offered a resolution inquiring under what law, and by whose orders, Gens. Upton and Forsythe and Maj. Sawyer, of the army, are absent in foreign countries. Adopted....Schleicher introduced a bill to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the lower Rio Grande....The House held an evening session, which was devoted exclusively, in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the Legislative Appropriation bill.

Wednesday, April 5.—Senate.—The Senate, at 10 o'clock, organized as a court of impeachment. Chief Justice Waite appeared and administered the following oath to six Senators at a time: "You do solemnly swear that in all things appertaining to the trial of the impeachment of W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, now pending, you will be impartial and just, according to the Constitution and of the law." After the oath had been administered the Chief-justice retired, and the Senate adopted an order instructing "the Secretary of the Senate to notify the House of Representatives that the Senate is now organized for the trial of the impeachment of W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, and ready to receive the managers of the impeachment on the part of the House of Representatives." In a short time the House managers appeared in the Senate chamber and requested that Belknap be summoned to appear and answer. It was ordered that Belknap be summoned to appear on Monday, April 17, at 1 o'clock. The managers then withdrew, and the court adjourned until the 17th ....A bill was passed authorizing the sale of the Pawnee Indian reservation. ....The Senate indulged in a long discussion of the Postal bill without reaching a vote.

House.—Randall offered a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House with an itemized account of the amount expended under the item of $300,000 appropriated for light and fuel for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876. Adopted. ....Cox, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill to regulate the winding up of National banks. He explained that the object of the bill was to facilitate liquidation, and that insolvent banks may be perfectly and speedily closed up in the interest of the public. Passed.....Hubbell, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, adversely, the bill fixing the legal rate of interest on national money throughout the United States at not exceeding six per cent. per annum....The House devoted some time, in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill transferring the Indian bureau to the War department....The evening session was devoted exclusively to the Legislative Appropriation bill.

Thursday, April 6.—Senate.—Sherman, from the Finance Committee, reported the House Silver-coin bill, as amended by the committee. One of the amendments provides for the recoinage of the old American dollar, and making it a legal tender to the amount of $20, instead of $50, as fixed by the House. Another amendment provides that the trade dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender for any amount whatever... Wright, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on the Senate bill to abolish capital punishment, and it was indefinitely postponed....Boutwell introduced a bill making an appropriation to defray the expenses of the committee appointed to investigate the Mississippi election....The Postal bill was again up for consideration, and Harvey offered a substitute, allowing four-pound packages to go through the mails at the rate of one cent for two ounces. Morrison also offered an amendment creating a fourth class of mail matter.

House.—The Printing Committee reported a bill providing for the purchase of the property of the late Congressional Globe......The bill fixing the President's salary at $25,000 after March 4, 1877, was reported from the Appropriation Committee, and passed without discussion.....The bill fixing the rate of interest throughout the country at six per cent. was defeated—yeas, 75; nays, 136. ....There was a lively debate during the evening session. It opened with an attack on the Appropriation Committee by Joyce, Dunnell, Townsend (Pa.), and Williams (Wis.), which was repelled by Randall, Whitehouse, and Willard.

BELKNAP'S IMPEACHMENT.

The Articles Charging Him with High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

The impeachment articles against Mr. Belknap, reported to the House by the Judiciary Committee, are five in number, and are worded in the usual legal phraseology, one being largely a repetition of the other. The first article is as follows:

That William W. Belknap, while he was in office as Secretary of War—to wit, on the 8th of October, 1870—had the power and authority under the laws of the United States, as Secretary of War, to appoint a person to maintain a trading establishment at Fort Sill, a military post of the United States; that said Belknap promised to appoint one Caleb P. Marsh to maintain said trading establishment at said military post, and thereafter the said Caleb P. Marsh and one James S. Evans did enter into an agreement in writing, substantially as follows: [Here the articles of agreement are set out in extenso]; that thereafter, on the 10th of October, 1870, said Belknap, as Secretary of War, did, at the instance and request of said Marsh, appoint said John S. Evans to maintain said trading establishment at Fort Sill, and in consideration of such appointment that said Belknap did, on or about the 2d of November, 1870, unlawfully and corruptly receive from said Marsh the sum of $1,500, and did at divers times thereafter, that is, on or about the 17th of January, 1871, and about the end of each three months during the term of one whole year, while he was still in office as Secretary of War, unlawfully receive from said Marsh like sums of $1,500 in consideration of the appointment of said Evans, and in consideration of his (Belknap's) permitting said Evans to continue to maintain said trading establishment at Fort Sill, whereby the said William W. Belknap, who was then Secretary of War, as aforesaid, was guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

The second article recites:

That said Wm. W. Belknap, while Secretary of War, as aforesaid, did, on the 4th of November, 1873, wilfully, corruptly, and unlawfully, take and receive from said Marsh the sum of $1,500, in consideration that he would continue to permit John S. Evans to maintain the said trading establishment at the said military post, and the said Belknap was thereby guilty, while he was Secretary of War, of high misdemeanors in his said office.

The third article recites:

That the said Wm. W. Belknap, as Secretary of War of the United States, did appoint John S. Evans to maintain a trading establishment at Fort Sill, and that said Evans, by virtue of such appointment had since, until the 2d day of March, 1876, maintained that trading establishment, and had, before he was so appointed, and in order to procure such appointment and be continued therein, agreed with Marsh that in consideration of said Belknap's appointing him (Evans) to maintain said trading establishment, at the instance and request of said Marsh, he (Evans) would pay to him (Marsh) a large sum of money quarterly in advance from the date of his said appointment by said Belknap—to wit, $12,000—during the year, and other large sums quarterly during each year, in order that he, the said Evans, should be permitted by said Belknap to maintain such trading establishment at such post; that Evans did pay to Marsh such sums of money quarterly during each year until the month of December, 1875; that Marsh, upon the receipt of each of such payments, paid one-half thereof to Belknap, and the said Belknap, while knowing these facts, and having power to remove Evans from such position at any time, criminally disregarded his duty as Secretary of War, and basely prostituting his high office to his lust for private gains, did unlawfully and corruptly continue said Evans in such position, and permit him to maintain his establishment to the great injury and damage of officers and soldiers of the army of the United States stationed at such post, as well as to emigrants and freighters and other citizens of the United States, against public policy, and to the great disgrace and detriment of the public service, whereby William W. Belknap was, as Secretary of War, guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

Article four charges Belknap with having received from Marsh large sums of money for and in consideration of his (Belknap's) having appointed Evans to maintain a trading establishment at Fort Sill, and in consideration of his continuing him therein, whereby he (Belknap) had been guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in office. This article is accompanied by seventeen specifications, setting out various times and circumstances of payments of money. Article 5, after reciting the same general facts, charges that Belknap was induced to make the appointment of Evans by the influence and request of Marsh, and that Evans paid to Marsh, in consideration of such influence and request, divers large sums of money at various times, amounting to about $12,000 a year, from the date of such appointment to the 2d of March, 1876, all of which facts the said Belknap well knew, yet said Belknap, in consideration that he would permit said Evans to continue to maintain said trading establishment, and that such payments might continue to be made to said Marsh by said Evans, corruptly received from said Marsh, either for his own (Belknap's) use or to be paid to the wife of said Belknap, divers large sums of money at various times, setting out the dates and amounts; all of which acts and doings were while the said Belknap was Secretary of War, and were high misdemeanors in office.

The close of the document is as follows:

And the House of Representatives, by protestation, saving to themselves the liberty of exhibiting at any time thereafter any further articles of accusation or impeachment against said William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War of the United States, and also of replying to his answers, which he shall make unto the articles herein preferred against him, and of offering proof to the same and every part thereof, and to all and every other article of accusation or impeachment which shall be exhibited by them as the case shall require, do demand that the said William W. Belknap may be put to answer for the high crimes and misdemeanors in office herein charged against him, and that such proceedings, examinations, trials, and judgments may be thereupon had and given as may be agreeable to law and justice.

The committee also report the following:

Resolved, That seven managers be appointed by ballot to conduct the impeachment exhibited against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War of the United States.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

The Supreme Court Annuls the United States Election Law.

The following is an abstract of the lengthy opinion of the United States Supreme court in the Kentucky election case, recently delivered by Chief-justice Waite:

After stating that the United States abandon the first and third counts, and expressly waive consideration of all claims not arising out of the enforcement of the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution, the opinion details the provisions of the amendment, and says: The power of Congress to legislate at all upon the subject of voting at State elections rests upon this amendment. The effect of article 1, section 4, of the Constitution, in respect to elections for senators and representatives, is not now under consideration. It has not been contended, nor can it be, that the amendment confers authority to impose a penalty for every wrongful refusal to receive the vote of a qualified elector at State elections. It is only when the wrongful refusal at such an election is because of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude that Congress can interfere and provide for its punishment. If, therefore, the third and fourth sections of the act are beyond that limit they are unauthorized. The statute contemplates a most important change in the election laws. Previous to its adoption the States as a general rule regulated in their own way the details of all elections. They prescribed the qualifications of voters and the manner in which those offering to vote at an election should make known their qualifications to the officers in charge. This act interferes with this practice, and prescribes rules not provided by the laws of States. It substitutes under certain circumstances the performance wrongfully prevented for the performance itself. If the elector makes and presents his affidavit in the form and to the effect prescribed, the inspectors are to treat this as equivalent of the specified requirement of the State law. This is a radical change in practice, and the statute which creates it should be explicit in its terms. Nothing should be left to construction if it can be avoided. The law ought not to be in such a condition that an elector may act upon one idea of its meaning and the inspector upon another. The elector under the provisions of the statute is only required to state in his affidavit that he has been wrongfully prevented by the officer from qualifying. There are no words of limitation in this part of the section. In a case like this, if an affidavit is in the language of the statute, it ought to be sufficient both for the voter and the inspector. Laws which prohibit doing of things and provide a punishment for their violation, should have no double meaning. A citizen should not unnecessarily be placed where, by an honest error in the construction of a penal statute, he may be subjected to a prosecution for a false oath, and an inspector of elections should not be put in jeopardy because he, with equal honesty, entertains an opposite opinion. If this statute limits the wrongful act which will justify an affidavit to discrimination on account of race, etc., then a citizen who makes an affidavit that he has been wrongfully prevented by the officer, which is true in the ordinary sense of the term, subjects himself to indictment and trial if not to conviction, because it is not true that he has been prevented by such a wrongful act as the statute contemplated, and if there is no such limitation, but any wrongful act of exclusion will justify the affidavit and give the right to vote without the actual performance of the prerequisite, then the inspector who rejects the vote because he reads law in its limited sense and thinks it is confined to a wrongful discrimination on account of race, etc., subjects himself to prosecution if not to punishment, because he has misconstrued the law. When we go beyond the third section and read the fourth we find there no words of limitation or reference, even, that can be construed as manifesting any intention to confine its provisions to the terms of the fifteenth amendment. That section has for its object the punishment of all persons who by force, bribery, etc., hinder, delay, etc., any person from qualifying or voting. In view of all these facts we feel compelled to say that, in our opinion, the language of the third and fourth sections does not confine their operation to unlawful discriminations on account of race, etc. If Congress had power to provide generally for the punishment of those who unlawfully interfere to prevent the exercise of the elective franchise, without regard to such discriminations, the language of these sections would be broad enough for that purpose. It remains now to consider whether a statute so general as this in its provisions can be made available for the punishment of those who may be guilty of unlawful discrimination against citizens of the United States while exercising the elective franchise on account of their race, etc. There is no attempt in the sections now under consideration to provide specifically for such an offense. If the case is provided for at all it is because it comes under the general prohibition against any wrongful act or unlawful obstruction in this particular. We are, therefore, directly called upon to decide whether a penal statute enacted by Congress with its limited powers, which provides, in general language broad enough to cover a wrongful act, without as well as within the Constitution, jurisdiction can be limited by judicial construction so as to make it operate only on that which Congress may rightfully prohibit and punish. For this purpose we must take these sections of the statute as they are. We are not able to reject a part which is unconstitutional and retain the remainder, because it is not possible to separate that which is unconstitutional, if there be any such, from that which is not. The proposed effect is not to be attained by striking out or disregarding words that are in the section, but by inserting those that are not now there. Each of the sections must stand as a whole or fall together. The language is plain; there is no room for misconstruction, unless it be as to the effect of the Constitution. The question then to be determined is whether we can introduce words of limitation into a penal statute so as to make it specific when, as expressed, it is general only. It would certainly be dangerous if the Legislature could set a net large enough to catch all possible offenders, and leave it to the courts to step inside and say who could be rightfully detained, and who should be set at large. This would to some extent substitute the judicial for the legislative department of the Government. The courts enforce the legislative will when ascertained if within the constitutional grant of power. Within its legitimate sphere Congress is supreme and beyond the control of the courts, but if it steps outside of its constitutional limitation and attempts that which is beyond its reach, the courts are authorized to, and when called upon in due course of legal proceedings, must annul its encroachments upon the reserved power of the United States and the people. To limit this statute in the manner now asked for would be to make a new law—not to enforce an old one. This is no part of our duty. We must therefore decide that Congress has not as yet provided by appropriate legislation for the punishment of the offense charged in the indictment, and that the Circuit court properly sustained the demurrers and gave judgment for the defendants. This makes it unnecessary to answer any of the other questions certified, since the law which gives the presiding judge the casting vote in cases of division and authorizes a judgment in accordance with his opinion (Revised Statutes, section 650) is that if we find that the judgment as rendered is correct we need not do more than affirm. If, however, we reverse, all the questions certified which may be considered in a final determination of the case, according to the opinion we express, should be answered. The judgment of the circuit is affirmed. Mr. Justice Hunt and Mr. Justice Clifford dissented from the opinion, but concurred in judgment.

Fashion Fripperies.

Fashionable boots have round toes.

Street dresses are to be worn short.

Club sticks for parasols are out of style.

Plaid Windsor ties are worn by gentlemen.

Ecru-colored lace is fashionable for curtains.

Half-hose will be worn again by little children.

Black lace mittens will be worn in the summer.

Basket cloths make up handsomely for walking-jackets.

Most of the spring hats are profusely trimmed with flowers.

Fringes with deep-netted headings will be used for trimming.

Many of the new corsages for young ladies button in the back.

White underskirts are made with deep embroidered flounces.

Velvet skirts will be worn under thin overskirts and corsages this spring.

Pretty ties are of soft silk, with a delicate spray embroidered in each end.

Evening gloves extend far up the arm, and have from six to twelve buttons.

The few bustles that are worn are very small at the waist and quite large below.

Black guipure polonaises or overskirts and jackets will be worn over colored skirts.

Seal-brown, undressed kid gloves are in demand for traveling and shopping costumes.

White marseilles or pique, with Hamburg embroideries for trimmings, makes pretty and appropriate suits for children.

Blue linen suits, embroidered in white or ecru, and gray linen, embroidered in brown or black, are again fashionable.

Swiss muslin ties, with heavily-embroidered ends, are to be worn around the neck out of doors as the spring advances.

Gabrielle polonaises will be much worn. They are draped but little in the back, and are quite full in front.

Overskirts are cut long, reaching almost to the bottom of the underskirt, which has very little trimming.

A pretty individual saltcellar is of silver in the shape of a pond lily on a leaf. The lily is lined with gold.

The Martha Washington hat or bonnet has a standing brim, which is bent in at the front, back, and two sides until it touches the crown.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Wild Roses.

On long, serene midsummer days
Of ripening fruit and yellowed grain,
How sweetly, by dim woodland ways,
In tangled hedge or leafy lane,
Fair wild-rose thickets, you unfold
Those pale pink stars with hearts of gold!

Your sleek patrician sisters dwell
On lawns where gleams the shrub's trim box,
In terraced gardens, banded wall,
Near pebbled walk and quaint kiosk.
In costliest urns their colors rest;
They bloom on beauty's fragrant breast!

But you in lowly calm abide,
Scarce heeded save by breeze or bee;
You know what splendor, pomp and pride
Full oft your brilliant sisters see;
What sorrow, too, and bitter fears;
What sad farewells and hopeless tears!

How some are kept in old, dear books,
That once in bridal wreaths were worn;
How some are kissed, with tender looks,
And later tossed aside with scorn;
How some their taintless petals lay
On icy foreheads pale as they!

So, while these truths you vaguely guess,
Abloom in many a lonesome spot,
Shy roadside roses, may you bless
The fate that rules your modest lot,
Like rustic maids that meekly stand
Below the ladies of their land!

Around the Farm.

Of all churns that have come under our observation the old dash churn gives best results.—Maine Farmer.

If you want good, sweet mutton, kill your sheep without worrying and fatigue; the less exercise the better. Hang it up at once; now change ends; hang him by the head, and skin down to the tail; the job is done in half the time, and neatly.—Indiana Farmer.

The number of eggs annually laid by a fowl is estimated at fifty-two, which would weigh about six pounds, and, as a fowl seldom weighs more than three pounds, a hen lays annually double her own weight. Seventeen eggs will weigh on the average two and one-fifth pounds.

You give a hungry cow a pint of meal—in the bottom of a stable pail say—and she'll stick her nose into the pail and lick till she has scoured the inside clean. But a horse so fed will fill his mouth at once, and then if he's very hungry or especially well pleased with the meal, he'll begin to swing his head around right and left, sowing the meal like an old idiot—especially if you stop and look at him. Go right away if you want to save your grain.—Connecticut Courant.

Those who scoff at science as the farmer's assistant, rail at the agricultural newspapers, and laugh at book farming are warring against their best interests. Because an occasional enthusiast, devoid of the elements of common sense, makes an utter failure in trying to combine science and the farm, is no argument against educating men for the farm. The fault is in the man, and not in the principle. He would fail anywhere.—Free Press.

To Keep Smoked Meat.—A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says: "In the spring, before fly-time, take your meat down and rub it with a cloth until you make it greasy. This fills up all the cracks. Now take a large-sized pepper box, and pepper your meat well with black pepper. This keeps away all flies and bugs. Then hang in a cool, dry place. This is much better than putting it in ashes. I have tried the above recipe for the last six or seven years, and never lost a pound of meat."

Setting Eggs.—Sprinkle flour of sulphur over and around your setting hens to keep them free from vermin. Ruffle their feathers and their backs, and dust them thoroughly. Never grease a hen while she is setting; if you do, not a chick will you get. If convenient, provide a small yard for your hens to dust and exercise themselves in; keep corn and water constantly by them; watch them closely for the first seven days, and see that they do not remain off too long.

Raise Hogs.—Hog raising requires but very little help. There is not near as much labor about it as in the production of the cereals. The business is not exhausting to the soil, but, on the contrary, enriching, as all that is fed to hogs is returned to the land in manure. The farm can be made to increase in value yearly if hogs are fattened upon it. This is a matter of some importance to the wise farmer. He don't like to see his farm wearing out, yearly becoming less fertile, and finally becoming exhausted, like farms in the older States.—Colman's Rural World.

In the opinion of the Live Stock Journal "autumn calves are usually more profitable than those dropped in spring. The old notion that the cow should come in on grass originated when it was the practice to keep cattle the year around on grass and hay alone; and as grass was more nutritious than hay, and especially better for the calf, the practice prevailed of breeding for spring calves. But it is now well understood that the cow fresh in milk can be profitably fed meal or grain, and that to prevent the running down that always results, especially with good milkers, such feed ought to be given. And the same is true in regard to the calf. As soon as it is old enough to eat, shorts or meal and bran should be given, and will be far better for the young calf than grass. But the great point is, that a calf dropped say in October, November or December, will be old enough to wean on fresh grass in the spring, and to have the full benefit of the next summer's grazing which will make it fully equal by winter to a June or July calf of the previous year."

It is always better to apply all kinds of coarse manure such as obtained from the barnyard to the vegetable garden in autumn; but if one does not have it at that time and can supply the deficiency in spring, then an early application is preferable to a late one. The manure thrown out from the stable during winter is usually coarse, containing more or less straw, corn stalks and like materials which are of little value as fertilizers until thoroughly decomposed; beside, if the attempt is made to incorporate them with the soil, they always interfere more or less with the proper preparation of the land as required for the smaller kinds of seeds. The best way to avoid such an inconvenience is to fork over the manure in the barnyard as soon as the weather will permit in the spring, separating the finer portions from the coarse, placing the two kinds in heaps, each by itself. The first can be used for the vegetable garden or other crops to which it is best adapted, employing the latter for potatoes, corn or for mulching around fruit trees. If it is not wanted for any such purpose, leave it in the heaps and by being forked over two or three times during the summer, it will become well rotted in time for use the next autumn.

About the House.

Warts may be removed, says a celebrated physician, by rubbing them night and morning with a moistened piece of muriate of ammonia. They soften and dwindle away, leaving no such mark as follows their dispersion with lunar caustic.

When white linen becomes mildewed it should be washed in warm water, with a little borax, and then rinsed in clean water. After this it must be put into a tub of water containing a little hydrochloric acid; then rinsed and dried in the sun.

In washing flannels, use good soft water; make two good clean suds, by putting the soap in the water, not on the clothes; have both waters the same temperature; do not put very much soap in the last water, and add a little blueing to it to make them look clear. Never put your flannels in suds in which you have washed cotton clothes; it makes them linty.

Mince-meat Fritters.—With half a pound of mince-meat mix two ounces of fine bread crumbs (or a tablespoonful of flour), two eggs well beaten, and the strained juice of half a small lemon. Mix these well, and drop the fritters with a dessert spoon into plenty of pure lard; fry them from seven to eight minutes, drain them in a napkin and send them very hot to the table. They should be quite small.

To Kill Roaches.—Pour hot water on them. To keep them out of closets, sprinkle powdered borax on the shelves, and this will drive them away. Where water-pipes are brought into a house, roaches inevitably follow, and "eternal vigilance" and plenty of powdered borax is the only safeguard against them. Every time the paper on the pantry and closet shelves is changed fresh supplies of borax should be sprinkled on them, and the same powder should be put in drawers infested with them. This will drive them at last to seek refuge in cracks and corners where the hot-water cure may be effectually tried.

In watering plants, instead of flinging it on with your fingers, take a brush-broom, and, after putting it in the water, draw quickly across the palm of your hand, aiming it at the plants. This throws a fine mist over them and takes off every particle of dust. It is as essential to have the dust washed off the leaves as it is for us to wash our faces. It is also well to give plants a showering once a week in a tub, although hardly necessary. When sprinkled every night or morning with a brush-broom, the plants need not be moved from the shelves.

Choose Your Death.

The people, etc., vs. J. G. Wiggins, convicted for the murder of John Kresmer. The prisoner was brought into court to receive sentence. The court asked if he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be pronounced against him. The prisoner replied that he was not guilty of murder; that his victim, Dutch John, was armed with a pistol at the time of the shooting. The prisoner, in conclusion, called God to witness that he was innocent of murder. The prisoner was then told that the statute allowed him to select his mode of death, to be shot, hanged, or beheaded. He remained silent a moment, and then said: "I prefer to be shot." The court then pronounced the death sentence as follows:

"It is the judgment of the court that you be taken from hence to some place of safe confinement in this county; that you be there safely kept in confinement until Friday, the twenty-third day of June next; that between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and three o'clock in the afternoon of that day you be taken from your place of confinement and publicly shot until you are dead. And may that God whose laws you have wantonly violated, but whose love and mercy are as illimitable and boundless as eternity, have mercy on your soul."

The prisoner scarcely moved while the sentence was being spoken, and manifested little anxiety or feeling at what was going on. However, when all was over, the terrible doom had been told, and he was removed from the court-room, he "let down" considerably, and showed that, hardened as he was in crime, and desperate, daring and lawless as he had been, he still could feel; and as he contemplated the dreaded execution tears filled his eyes and his hands trembled. He was returned to the county jail and placed in solitary confinement.—Salt Lake Herald.

"Criminal Intent."

A man about fifty-five years old, having red hair and whiskers, took a liking to a woman who keeps a stall in the City Hall market, and yesterday morning, after an hour's conversation, made her an offe in marriage, explaining that he was a widower, and worth four or five thousand dollars. Thinking to have some fun at his expense, the woman replied that she would talk to him if he would go and have his hair and whiskers dyed. He joyfully trotted away, and a barber made the change. It was a sick change, and when the old man returned to the market the women up there laughed till the tears fell.

"Are you making fun of me?" seriously inquired the widower.

"Oh! what a man—oh! where's the fool-killer!" shouted the female who had promised to be his own true love.

When he discovered that she had been trifling with his feelings he went down to the Central station and told his story.

"Look at this job!" he shouted, pointing to his hair and whiskers. "Where's my twelve shillings gone?"

The captain replied that he had better go away and not make a fuss, but the old man was aroused and he footed it up to the Police court, and was last seen sitting on the edge of a crippled cane-seat chair and demanding of the clerk:

"I will have a warrant! It's criminal intent, I tell you, and somebody's got to suffer!"—Detroit Free Press.

PASSING EVENTS.

A Cohoes boy swallowed a mouse the other day. It went down his throat when he was asleep. When the doctor came, and administered an emetic, mister mouse came to the surface all alive and squealing.

Exchanges from the Sierra Nevada regions say that an unprecedented quantity of snow has fallen on all the mountains west of Salt Lake. In some of the ranges the snow had drifted and accumulated to the depth of fifty and sixty feet.

A bill has passed the Pennsylvania Legislature forbidding any person under penalty, unless already in practice for five years at the date of the act, to practice medicine, surgery, or obstetrics without a diploma from a chartered medical school.

The feminine agitation for rights and pantaloons is by no means confined to the United States. A congress of women was recently held at Gotha, in Germany, to advocate the admission of females into the medical profession, and the abolition of skirts, allowing women to dress as men do.

The Nestor of the Washington press is Eliot Kingman, native of Massachusetts, a graduate of Brown University, and formerly editor of a Boston paper. He went to Washington to conduct an organ for John Quincy Adams during his administration, and from 1825 to 1865 corresponded with New York, Baltimore and Charleston papers. He now lives quietly and leisurely at his Washington home, at the age of seventy-six.

"A sad-eyed, pale-faced man, with beard tangled, hair uncombed, clothes torn, and his pantaloons tucked into a pair of muddy boots, sauntered wearily into London the other evening, and wandered around heedlessly gazing at the signs and passers-by. It was poor, disappointed Don Carlos." That's the way a California paper paints the baffled dauphin, who is worth $40,000,000 and lives in a palace even when he isn't at home. The San Francisco imagination in search for news is as busy as a hornet in a school-boy's trousers.

The Austrian Minister of Commerce has just made his returns of the accounts of the Vienna exhibition. The total expenditures amounted to 19,123,270 florins and the receipts to 4,256,349 florins, the entire loss, therefore, being 14,866,921 florins, or about $8,500,000, which the State has to make good. Although our own Government is secure from any losses incurred by the Philadelphia exhibition, the figures of the Vienna show are rather eloquently and nervously suggestive to those who have invested in it. It certainly behooves the Philadelphia managers to look sharply after the rocks that wrecked Vienna and try to avoid them.

A plan has been devised by Congressman Cannon, of Illinois, whereby it is hoped to suppress the system of straw bids in the award of said contracts, as well as to prevent the buying off of low bidders. It contemplates the enactment of a law requiring that in the event of a default by one or more of the lowest bidders the Postmaster-general shall award the contract at a rate not above that named in the lowest bid, and if this cannot be done he is to readvertise, the same rule as to the lowest bid governing all contracts for temporary service. The strict enforcement of this regulation, it is believed, would make straw bids unprofitable, and encourage honest bidders to compete in good faith.

The California Senate has passed two bills of extraordinary nature in regard to the press. One requires that the signatures of writers shall be affixed to articles, and the other that a newspaper shall retract any statement proven to be libelous. As Senator O'Connor truly remarked, no signature law has ever been heard of before in any State in the American Union, in England, Ireland or Scotland, or any English-speaking State or nation. The two enactments are as absurd as they are unconstitutional. The law may punish an editor for libel, but it cannot compel him to give the use of his types, paper, and presses for a retraction of the libel. This is a matter for his own judgment and conscience.

The New York World has been summing up the debts of our cities. Since 1867 the debt of Allegheny City has increased 500 per cent.; Albany, 250 per cent.; Baltimore, 69 per cent.; Boston, $13,000,000 to $43,000,000—taxes in proportion. Chicago has multiplied her debt by three and taxes by two. Cleveland has quadrupled; Detroit and Louisville doubled; Milwaukee multiplied by two and two-thirds. Newark owes $5,000,000; New Orleans, $22,000,000. New York has quadrupled; Philadelphia doubled. Portland has increased by three, and Providence by seven. Richmond owes twice as much. St. Louis has increased her debt from $5,500,000 to $16,000,000. Rochester has increased by five, and Pittsburg by four and a half.

The Emperor of Brazil, Dom Pedro, is now on his way to New York, intending to make an extended tour of the United States, and after that "do" the Old World. He comes in a modest way, accompanied by his wife, family physician, and three or four friends. He will be no pensioner upon the bounties of municipalities, as was the King of the Sandwich Islands, nor will his trip be a grand splurge, like that of the Prince of Wales in India, and of the Shah of Persia in Paris and London. He travels as any other intelligent gentleman of means and leisure would, and for the same purpose. He has a thirst for knowledge, and wants to see the world. He comes to us recommended by his own behavior as a man of good sense. The empire of Brazil is divided into twenty provinces, with an aggregate area of 3,200,000 square miles and a population of 10,000,000, about one-third of whom are white, the rest being negroes or Indians.

The Continued Export of Cotton Goods.

It is a fact not generally known that the British drills, jeans, and sheetings imported now are all stamped with American brands and the names of leading American mills. Respecting the export of cotton goods to England, the movement continues with considerable success. The number of packages shipped from New York and Boston since January 1 amounts to nearly 18,000 packages, against 10,000 packages during the same period in 1875. It is admitted that there is not much profit in the movement, but it has a tendency to rid the country of a portion of the surplus cottons, beside giving employment to thousands of hands, though at a reduced rate of wages. It is unnecessary to add that the quality of goods thus exported is of a superior quality to those of English make, and at the same time enables the Manchester manufacturers to export their inferior goods to China, for which a good profit is realized.—Boston Globe.

Granger Centennial Hotel.

A Philadelphia letter-writer says: "The Patrons of Husbandry, who in the Agricultural and Horticultural departments will have a good deal to do with the Exhibition, and who are likely to contribute a large number of visitors from many of the States, started some time ago an enterprise which, if it is honestly carried out, may recommend itself to others besides members of the order, who may not be able to endure the pecuniary "squeeze" at Philadelphia hotels and boarding-houses. The original projector of this enterprise, Mr. R. H. Thomas, perfected the plan of what is called "The Patrons' Centennial Encampment," intended to afford cheap board to all. Officers of an association were elected, who have got the lease of a large mansion house and forty acres of land near Elm station, on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad, six miles from the business part of Philadelphia, and three miles from the Centennial grounds. The association is a joint stock one, whose capital of $150,000 is solicited from subscribers at $50 a share. According to the last announcements of the association the Board of Managers have made contracts for the erection of buildings on their grounds (principally one-story), in which they propose to rent well, but not expensively furnished rooms, for $1 a day each to one or two persons. Meals will be provided at fifty cents each, but parties may bring their own provisions and still occupy rooms. Pure water, thorough police surveillance, plenty of light on the grounds, corridors, dining-rooms and offices at night, a large hall for lectures and religious services, a laundry, barber-shops, cigar stands, ice-cream saloons and other stores and shops (excepting bar-rooms for the sale of liquors)—these conveniences are promised at the encampment, between which and the Centennial grounds and the city hourly trains will run, at fifteen cents to go and return.

Letter from a Black Hills Miner.

Wm. O. Baldwin, who accompanied the Jenney expedition to the Black Hills as an expert miner last season, and subsequently returned, has written the following letter from the Hills to Dr. Gillycuddy, of Washington City:

Dear Sir: I returned to the Hills last December in company with ten others. As near as I could learn there were not forty men here at that time. It is safe to estimate 3,000 men at this date scattered over the Hills. At the junction of Newton's fork and Spring creek, Judge Hollins, in company with a few others, started what is known as Hill City, for winter quarters and protection should it be needed. There are now 130 houses in process of construction and eighty-five occupied. Beany & Boughton, of Cheyenne, have a thirty-five horse power saw-mill running in the town. While digging the well to supply the mill with water they struck a bed which yielded seventy cents to the pan, which created the usual excitement. We have had but little snow at this point, at no time exceeding five inches on the ground.

The Montana Company located on "Stand-off Bar," on claims twenty and twenty-five above discovery on Spring creek, and have been working through a pay-streak of sixteen feet on the bar. The pay is in the bed-rock, averaging over one ounce to the hand per day, with the ground frozen so that they have had to wash in hot water. Others have done equally well. I have satisfied myself as to the richness of this country.

Frank George, a "tender-foot" that herded stock for Col. Dodge last summer, took out of Bear creek one pan containing $34—one nugget alone being worth $28. Tom Mallory, one of Prof. Jenney's tried and true, took out $11 in one pan on Iron creek. Deadwood and Whitewood creeks average from twelve cents to $1 a pan, and still, Doctor, we are not happy.

There are now four saw-mills running in the Hills, cutting out lumber as good as can be got in the Chicago market.

The Indians have commenced their raids on us. Several men have been fired at when out on the foot-hills, and two are missing. Quite a number of horses have been stolen and crippled. Unless these red devils are careful, some one will get hurt. * * *

Wm. O. Baldwin.

A Heartrending Scene.

The storm which has lately spent its fury in this section left many distressing memories which will last as long as a man lives to tell them. The number of poor mariners who perished in pitiless snow and wind storms is daily increasing. One of the most heartrending spectacles, however, was the loss of the schooner Weaver, at Glen creek, N. J., with her entire crew, not a man being left to tell the tale. The wreck was seen from the life-saving station. First the officers saw a man moving about her deck, and then, in a few moments, saw a boat with six men put off. It had scarcely been launched when the waves rose over the deck of the schooner, and in an instant the boat disappeared. She went down in a second. Afterward was seen a solitary man upon the wrecked vessel. Amid the liftings of the storm the officers of the life-saving station attempted to save him. The mortar bearing a life line was fired and the bomb fell over the bow of the vessel, but the sailor was too stupid, through cold, to see it, and a tremendous storm-burst caught the vessel and lifted her out of the waves. She was crushed like an egg-shell. The form of the sailor trembled for a moment and then dropped out of sight. His last cry was heard distinctly, as he shrieked, "Oh! for God's sake, help!" Then the clouds of snow swept down thick, and nothing more could be heard afterward.—New York Times.

Novel Use of Brick in Building.

Mr. Renwick, of New York, has prepared the design for a block of office buildings in Washington, to be built entirely of brick. These are of Baltimore and Washington manufacture in different colors; and a novel use is made of the material by submitting it to the chisel in the working-out of the ornament. The window-lintels, belt-courses and other prominent features are cut precisely as if they were of freestone. The fine-grained brick, it is found, cuts to a good face; and the work is more spirited and artistic than the tame molded work, where burnt clay is used otherwise than in the usual shape of brick. In the construction of fire-proof buildings, where it is desired to use brick to the exclusion of sandstone, granite, or other material, Mr. Renwick's idea of cut brick-work may give to the profession a thoroughly artistic treatment of a really serviceable material.—American Architect.

Frightful Explosion.

The large hardware manufactory of H. Saurbier & Sons, Newark, N. J., was recently the scene of a terrific explosion. The small brick building in which the boiler was situated was blown to pieces, and the whole range of buildings was shattered. Of a large number of men employed in the buildings two were killed outright, eight were seriously if not fatally wounded, and few escaped without injury. A portion of the boiler room was hurled into the blacksmith shop adjoining, burying Christian Zodie and Joseph Kaulpe beneath the debris. The bodies of both were subsequently recovered, but so terribly mutilated and disfigured as to be almost beyond identification. The engineer was taken out of the ruins alive, but so badly scalded about the face, head, and body that his recovery is doubtful. Charles Schneider, the foreman, was on the second floor, immediately over the boiler, and was hurled a distance of several feet by the explosion. He was terribly cut and bruised about the head and body by the falling bricks and timbers, and his injuries are of a very dangerous character. William B. Denmar, who was in the third story, was very seriously injured. He was unconscious and utterly helpless when taken out by the firemen. William Decker was terribly lacerated with broken glass, as were also Mr. Saurbier and his son Henry, who were in the office. Several other employes were badly but not dangerously injured. John Hardman, who was working at a rear window in the drying room, was hurled through the window into an adjoining graveyard, but fortunately escaped with a few slight bruises. Geo. Donner, a blacksmith, was buried beneath a pile of bricks, and badly crushed about the head and body. His injuries may prove fatal. Christian Keller was buried beneath the ruins, but sustained no very serious injuries. Christian Hoischman was painfully scalded by the escaping steam, but his injuries are not dangerous. The force of the concussion was so great that George E. Hart, who was driving along the street at the time, was violently hurled from his buggy to the pavement, a distance of several feet from the wagon, and was picked up unconscious. He soon recovered, however, and was taken home. The utmost excitement prevailed throughout the city during the afternoon, and an immense throng gathered around the scene until late in the evening.

To Get Rid of Household Pests.

Charles Thompson writes to the Scientific American that he has not seen a bed-bug or flea in his house for many years, and adds: If an army of them were brought in mercury would speedily exterminate them; but I think cleanliness is the best and perhaps the only preventive. The common house-fly I do not molest, believing it more than compensates for its trouble by clearing the atmosphere of effluvia and the animalcules which always arise from the putrefaction of decaying substances during the warm weather. So also with the birds, which are quite numerous here, during the summer. Instead of shooting them or setting up scarecrows to frighten them away, I throw out every possible inducement for them to build their nests in my fruit trees. The birds capture a large share of the insects in the larval state, and thus the millers are prevented from depositing eggs for a future crop of worms. As to the loss of fruit by the birds, the latter are always sure to by on hand in force in the season of ripe fruit, whether they come early enough to take the worms or not. For the residue of insects which infest my vegetable garden I find that the laboratory of the chemist furnishes materials fatal to them all, among which white hellebore and cayenne pepper are of the most utility.

The bug or worm which cannot find vegetation unflavored with these articles will seek its breakfast elsewhere, and leave my garden unmolested. A few drops of carbolic acid in a pint of water will clean house plants from lice in a very short time. If mosquitoes or other blood-suckers infest our sleeping rooms at night, we uncork a bottle of oil of penny-royal, and these insects leave in great haste, nor will they return so long as the air in the room is loaded with the fumes of that aromatic herb. If rats enter the cellar, a little powdered potash thrown into their holes, or mixed with meal and scattered in their run-ways, never fails to drive them away. Cayenne pepper will keep the buttery and store-room free from ants and cockroaches. If a mouse makes an entrance into any part of your dwelling, saturate a rag with cayenne in solution and stuff it into a hole which cannot be repaired with either wood or mortar. No rat or mouse will eat that rag for the purpose of opening communication with a depot of supplies.

They make less fuss in Kentucky than in Massachusetts when a man marries his step-daughter. A veteran of the former State, just entering upon his sixty-fifth year, has espoused a blooming damsel of sixteen, the daughter of his fourth wife. The vacancy in the patriarch's household, which has thus been supplied, was not created by the fell destroyer, but by the Circuit court of the county. The new wife is not, however, on visiting terms with her predecessors.

Mr. Ellis, of Amador city, Cal., whilo riding from that town to Sutter creek, was waylaid by three masked men, who ordered him to halt, but his horse, a high-spirited animal, took fright at the appearance of the men and ran away in spite of Mr. Ellis' attempts to stop him, though he pulled hard in the fear that he might be fired on. He now blesses his horse's obstinacy, for it saved $30 which he had in his pockets.

The Diario, of Havana, estimates the Cuban sugar crops at 1,000,000 boxes, and says it is valued at $30,000,000 less than last year's crop.

A postal service organized on the European plan is in operation in Persia.

INDIANA ITEMS.

The police of Evansville, made 1,311 arrests during the year ending April 1.

About 200 tramps were quartered in and around Indianapolis the other evening.

Col. John P. Baird, of Terre Haute, a prominent and brilliant lawyer, has been placed in the Insane hospital.

A woman was married in South Bend last week who has a loving husband in the Northern prison, from whom she had neglected to get a divorce.

Laporte is lamenting the death of Hon. Hugh Donley, President of the Board of School Trustees. He died very suddenly one day last week.

The supply of anthracite coal has given out in Richmond, and dealers refuse to order more. The people are forming a league not to deal further with them.

Cambridge City proposes to have races again this year, and the association has named June 6, 7, 8 and 9 as the days. The premiums will aggregate $5,000.

The family of W. C. Davenport, of Pike County, are in luck. By the recent death of a rich relative in Pennsylvania they have fallen heir to a large sum of money.

An old German named Seaman, who has for some time been at the Scott County Asylum, committed suicide last Tuesday, through fright on account of threats of the keeper.

The widow of Rear Admiral Collins, residing in Lafayette, has a rebel flag taken by her husband when he ran down and captured the pirate ship Florida, in a Brazilian port.

Louis Kallenberg, of Evansville, wholesale confectioner, an old-established house, has filed a petition as a voluntary bankrupt. The liabilities are very large, with little or no assets.

An indignation meeting was held at the Court-house in Fort Wayne last Wednesday night, to express feeling against the Fee bill recently adopted by the Allen County Medical Society, charging $3 a visit.

A child aged ten, the son of wealthy parents in Vanderburg county, refuses to remain at home for any length of time. He has lived a hermit life for nearly two years, and from a strange mania declares that he will never eat at a table.

Jonathan K. Gopan, who purchased the Wabash and Erie canal at Terre Haute in February, has sold that portion of it lying between Lafayette and Eastern Indiana to parties in Fort Wayne, Huntington, Peru and Logansport for $103,000. He paid $85,000 for it.

John Ham, an old resident of Mishawaka, aged seventy-five years, committed suicide one morning last week. He took a small rope and hung himself from a ladder in his barn. He was discovered by his daughter-in-law and grandson and cut down, but not until life was extinct. He had contemplated suicide for some months.

A young boy and girl were badly injured, on Tuesday, at Mr. Schriner's, a few miles west of Lafayette. The boy poured powder on the stove-hearth and put a live coal in it. The explosion burned both the children badly. It is feared they will lose their sight. Nobody was at home except Mrs. Shriner, and she sick in bed.

Col. Edward P. Jones, a prominent resident of Canton, Miss., and widely known throughout the South, temporarily located in Jeffersonville, engaged in introducing several patent inventions, committed suicide one day last week by taking hydrate of chloral. Report says business troubles, coupled with excessive drink, were the cause.

Mrs. Ann Nowling, aged upward of seventy years, met with her death one morning last week at the residence of her son-in-law, S. R. Jackman, in Rockville, by falling upon the grate and burning to death. She was subject to heart disease, and it is supposed that she was suddenly attacked while sitting in a chair near the fire, and fell forward.

Andrew Norris, of Jackson county, went to Madison county last fall and went to work for Joseph Funk, County Commissioner, representing himself to be a widower. In January he married Miss Mary Shinkle, in Perkinsville. Shortly after he met a Jackson county man, who told the friends of Miss Shinkle that Norris had a wife in Jackson county, or did have when he left. He was arrested for bigamy, and on the trial swore that his first wife was dead. An uncle of Miss Shinkle's worked up the matter, however, and discovered that Norris' wife was still living in the vicinity of Jacksonville. He is now in jail under a double charge of bigamy and perjury.

Extract from a Fort Wayne letter: "Isaac Connet, in April, 1859, bought a quarter section of school land in this township under the law of 1843, which requires that no deed shall be given to the purchaser until all the property is paid for, and until then no title shall pass from the State. He now wants to have his taxes refunded, on the ground that the county had no right to tax lands the title of which was in the State of Indiana. In 1872 the new laws took effect, providing that lands sold by the State should be assessed as actually conveyed. From this it is plain that all claims of this nature were then and are now worthless. The case will be one of unusual interest, exciting the attention of all the lawyers in the State, including the Attorney-general, as the balance of the counties may have similar claims passed upon them."

A Mooted Question Settled.

A correspondent of Land and Water proves the fact that vultures are guided to their feasts not by the eye, but by scent. He shot a large pariah dog through the heart one day near a dak bungalow in India, causing a pool of blood. Half an hour after he saw an approaching vulture soaring in the air, then circle, and finally settle upon the carcass. Ere long a second followed, then a third, until a dozen mustered. Now, all these vultures came from one direction of the compass, that one being the direction in which the wind blew. All of them described circles on approaching the region, in order to fix the exact spot of the carrion, to which the eye finally guided them.

Every parent whose son is away at school, should supply him with a newspaper. The Baltimore Gazette says the Republican party is meanly endeavoring to shove the whole responsibility of the war department corruptions upon a woman, Mrs Belknap, and asks: Was it a woman that dragged McDonald down, and Joyce, and Babcock, and Shepherd and Orville and Williams? It is really true that the Republican party is now run and controlled by women, and dishonest women at that? Has the great party of moral ideas come to this?

Connecticut stays with her friends and assures the nation of her devotion to Democratic principles after a struggle with all the elements of opposition. The republican party has polled its full strength and attracted to its banners one-half of the Prohibitionists, while the Democrats have lost some two thousand Currency Reformers." For all of this, upon a full vote, Mr. Ingersoll re-elected to the chair he has so honored by a majority of three thousand over all his opponents. In the Legislature the Democrats secure both Houses by slightly increased majorities, whith insures the continued presence at Washington of two Democratic Senators. Mr. Wells unhappily, is defeated after a gallant race for Congress with his strong Republican antagonist.

The New York World says: Here is a plain and practical device for a grand national banner which should be hung out in front of the grand entrance of the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, to mark the exact progress which we have made in one hundred years of existance as a united people:

Justice to Bristow.

(Huntington Democrat)

Let honest men have their dues always. Notwithstanding Secretary Bristow has been made a target for calumny, as faithful public officers in years of corruption always are, he "still lives." His explanation before Mr. Clymer's committee on Monday of the "Mule case" was entirely satisfactory. It appears convincingly that Mr. Bristow, after he had left the law department of the government, and before he was appointed Secretary of the Treasury, argued a case in the Court of Claims. The decision of the court was in favor of the claimants. The fee of Mr. Bristow was partly contingent, and amounted to about ten thousand dollars.—The case was managed by other well known lawyers, and the decision was clearly made upon its merits, and Mr. Bristow's connection with it was precisely what any honorable lawyer would have accepted, and, for once at least an attack intended to be damaging has utterly failed of its purpose. The mule's nest has turned out to be no better than a mare's nest.

Strong Beard.

Three brothers bearing a remarkable resemblance to each other, recently went into the same barber's shop and on the same day, to be shaved—one in the morning the other at noon, and the third at night. When the last one appeard the barber who was a German, dropped his razor in astonishment, and exclaimed: "Vell, dat man hash de fashtest beard I never saw! I shaves him dis mornin shaves him at dinner-times, and he comes back now, mit his bearb so long as it never vash."

We met with this witty and unanswerable retort in a sketch of a short trip through a portion of Ireland. The writer is conversing with his car driver:

"You are a Catholic, Jimmy?"

"Yes, yer honor."

"And you pray to the Virgin Mary?"

"I do, yer honor."

"Well, there's no doubt she was a good woman; the Bible says so; but she may have been no better than your mother or mine."

"That's true, yer honor; But then you'll allow there's a mighty difference in their children."

An old negro named Ike, not very remarkable but for his piety, was in the habit of praying every night in his cabin, and closings his devotions with a request "that the Lord would send his holy angel down and carry him home to glory." His young master, not believing Ike intelligently sincere in his petition, put on a dough face and wrapping himself up in a sheet, knocked at Ike's door just as he finished his prayers.

"What is dat?" said Ike.

"The angel of the Lord, come to take old Ike home to glory," was the reply.

"Who?" says Ike.

"The angel of the Lord, come to take old Ike home to glory," was the answer.

"Why, massa," says Ike, "dat dar darkey ain't been here for mor'n three weeks."

Good Agvice.

The following good advice is from an address delivered before the Bucks county (Pa) agricultural society, by Thomas Shellcross: "Economical farming implies several conditions. We must raise greater crops per acre. It takes no longer to cultivate a good crop them a poor one. We must have the most improved implement. Machinery is cheaper than labor. A man with a plow can do double the work he could with a cultivator, and do it better. A good washing machine materially lightens the cares of the household. The sewing machine, might be a great labor-saving machine, but since its introduction there are so many useless seams made that the labors of the woman do not seem to be made any lighter. I remember once seeing a garment with nineteen tucks. There is no economy, however, in purchasing half worn implements. They will be continually out of order. The first wear is always the best.

"Pay as you go. A man with cash in his hand can always purchase to much better advantage than he who expects a credit. I have seen corn bring $1,10 per bushel on a credit of nine months. When the market price was only 85 cents.

"The farmer must keep well posted. It is a great matter of economy that he will be well supplied with papers and magazines; not only his county papers which tells him of affairs about home, but also one of the great dailies, which lets him look right out in the world. At least one of the journals devoted to agriculture should find access to his home. One or two hints picked up through the year will amply repay the cost of subscription.

"There is economy in giving the children a good education. We know too little of the whys and wherefores connected with our calling. We work too much in the dark. To get the best possible results from our lands and fertilizers how important that we should understand their constituents and their adaptability to certain crops. As soon as by improved intellectual power man begins to discover and apply the laws of nature, a vast accession is made to the power of human productiveness. If this be so, we see how groundless is the opinion that education and science are without practical benefit, and that philosophers and students are merely a useless burden on the community, since it is knowlege and its application which has given us all the advantages which we possess over savages."

SLIPPERY WEATHER.

I have a story sad to tell,
A tale to grieve your ear;
It happened only yesterday,
Just round the corner here.
Upon the ice my foot did slip,
And I fell down and cut my lip.

But that's not all I have to tell,
Pathetic though it be;
A dire misfortune happened to
The friend who was with me.
Her feet got tangled in my clothes,
And she fell down and broke her nose.

My husband rushed across the street
To pick his loved one up,
But worse misfortune greeted him,
He slipped upon a cup,
And rescuing his wife from harm
Alas! he fell and broke his arm.

Two workmen on the other side,
Our troubles chanced to see,
And both of them came running up
As fast as fast could be;
But one man stumbled o'er a keg
And he fell down and broke his leg.

The other met affliction worse
Than cut or broken limb,
A sorer far calamity
Did happen unto him.
They took him from the ground half dead,
For he fell down and broke his head.

Policeman round the corner runs
With pity in his eyes,
And of our shipwrecked company
To make a rescue tries;
Only to meet completer wreck
For he fell down and broke his neck.

There is a moral to my tale;
I'm sure you'd never guess
The wisdom and the good advice
My story doth express:
If you would keep your limbs together,
Stay in the house in slippery weather.

THE SECRET DOOR.

A Strange Story of the Sequel to a Crime.

The police of Paris have recently stumbled across the sequel to a very remarkable tragedy which occurred over twenty years ago, and has remained until the present an impenetrable mystery. To bring all the facts of the case fully before the reader, it will be necessary to go back to a comparatively remote period.

At the beginning of the year 1852, a family named D'Eimer became the owners of the Vermeuve estate, on the Saone, between Chalon and Dijon. Chateau Vert, the residence, was a very large old mansion, situated on a rising ground on the right bank of a small tributary of the Saone. The locality was romantically beautiful, and the new tenants, who were wealthy, speedily resuscitated the gardens and transformed the decayed and deserted dwelling into a comfortable and attractive homestead.

The D'Eimer family consisted of Mons. D'Eimer, a gentleman of about fifty; Madame, a motherly lady of about the same age, and three daughters and one son—the latter a boy of fifteen, and the youngest of the family. Within three months of their settling at the chateau, the three daughters and the mother died of typhus fever. Mons. D'Eimer was sunk in profound grief, and some time elapsed before he was able to look after his affairs. The following year young D'Eimer formed an acquaintance with a very beautiful but uncultivated girl, named Jeannette Foille, the daughter of a charcoal burner, to whom Mons. D'Eimer had rented a tract of woodland. Foille was a stranger in the locality, but appeared to be industrious and honest. He was a widower—so he said—and his daughter had charge of the small dwelling in which they resided. Charles D'Eimer, the son, spent much of his time with Jeannette, and the fact came to his father's knowledge. He expostulated with his son, and an estrangement was the result. After this Mons. D'Eimer was frequently absent from home, and in the autumn of 1854 he returned with a young wife, whom he installed as mistress of the chateau. After this his behavior to his son was as kind as before, and he supplied him liberally with funds, although he knew that Charles' acquaintance with the daughter of the charcoal burner continued, and that she had given birth to a child.

On the morning of December 27, 1854, Mons. D'Eimer's domestics found him and his young wife murdered in their bed. They had been stabbed in several places, and the crime had evidently been perpetrated while they were asleep. Investigations disclosed certain extraordinary facts.

1. The door of the bedroom was fastened on the inside.

2. The windows of the bedroom and the adjoining dressing room were also fastened within, and were, moreover, at least fifty feet from the ground, which sloped abruptly to the river, and afforded scarcely sufficient foothold for a goat.

3. Nothing was displaced in Mons. D'Eimer's apartments, and no marks of any kind existed to show which way the murderer had come or gone.

In the bedroom, however, was another door, which led into a suite of apartments occupied by Charles D'Eimer, the room adjoining Mons. D'Eimer's bedroom having been used as a library and the one beyond that as the son's sleeping apartment. The door leading into the library was locked and the key could not be found. Charles' bedroom opened on the corridor, and the door of that was also locked. The butler, however, produced the key, and acknowledged that Charles was in the habit of leaving it with him when he went to the charcoal burner with the intention of remaining all night, as he had done the previous evening.

While the first investigation was in progress Charles returned home, and was stricken with horror at the scene that awaited him. His amazement and grief were very great, and, later on, when the authorities made a searching inquiry, and he was conscious that they suspected him of the crime, his indignation was deep, and his denial of any participation in the dreadful deed almost contemptuous.

Suspicion next fixed itself on the butler, who had had the keys of Charles' room in his keeping, but Charles pointed out to the police the utter absurdity of supposing that the bedroom had been entered from the study, as the dust around the door was undisturbed, and the lock had not been used since his father had purchased the property. In addition to this, it was shown that the butler was nearly eighty years of age, and had been in the employ of Mons. D'Eimer and his father before him for over sixty years.

The authorities were greatly puzzled to fix the crime on any one, or to discover a clue to the perpetrator. The prevailing suspicion was against Charles D'Eimer, and the fact of his having been on bad terms with his father for a long time, and the probability of there being a new family of children to share the patrimony with him, were considered as presumptive evidence against him. He was not arrested, however, but the neighbors, who had before been on friendly terms, began to shun him, and even the domestics quitted his service. Within a reasonable time after the murder, Charles brought Jeannette to the chateau and installed her as mistress, giving out that they were man and wife, which turned out to be actually the case. At the same time the charcoal burner disappeared from the neighborhood.

After residing for about six months at Chateau Vert, Charles D'Eimer and his wife discharged their domestics and removed to Neufchatel, in Switzerland. The chateau was left in charge of a steward, and was only once visited by its owner in twenty years.

As before stated, the sequel to this almost unprecedented tragedy has just been disclosed, and in order to complete the story it is necessary to give the particulars of a crime of a later date.

On February 24, 1875, one Monsieur Lecoq, a wealthy bachelor of Avignon, disappeared under singular circumstances. He resided in a small detached house in the suburbs, and kept two domestics—an old woman and her daughter. He had been a resident of Avignon about seven years, and had come there, it was generally supposed, from Paris, where he had been in business and amassed a fortune. On the day named, two men called at his house and were closeted with him for an hour. He directed his housekeeper to prepare a valise, and then quitted the house with the strangers, saying he might be absent a week. Half an hour after he had left, one of the two men returned and informed the housekeeper that he was a detective, that Monsieur Lecoq had been arrested for a crime committed in Paris many years before, and that he had come for certain documents in Monsieur Lecoq's possession which would tend to establish his innocence.

He showed the keys which Monsieur Lecoq, he said, had given him, and said his directions were to place the housekeeper and her daughter in a secure place until the next morning. He conducted them to an upper room in the rear of the dwelling, and fastened them in. There they passed a miserable night, and waited disconsolately until noon the next day for deliverance. Weary and hungry, they then managed to burst open the door, and on descending discovered that their master's bureaus and safe had been rifled of everything of value. Their suspicion of foul play was for the first time aroused, and they gave the alarm. It was soon clear enough that the arrest of Monsieur Lecoq and the pretended search for documents was the scheme of expert and audacious thieves, and measures were taken to secure their capture. They had nearly twenty-four hours, however, in which to make good their escape, and there was little hope of their immediate arrest. It was likewise difficult to get any accurate description of the men, and the police had to work on the most meager information. There was little doubt, however, that the men would seek refuge in Paris, and the police of that city were soon in possession of all the facts, and occupied in seeking for a clue to the perpetrator of the crime. Nothing, however, was heard of them or Monsieur Lecoq for over three months, when the old gentleman unexpectedly made his appearance, and learned for the first time that he was the victim of a conspiracy.

It seems that in 1840 he had in his employ, as clerk, a man named Dunesme. This man had a very beautiful wife, of whom Lecoq became enamoured. He dispatched Dunesme to Russia, as his agent, and in his absence endeavored to seduce his wife. He represented to her that Dunesme had robbed him of a large sum, and that unless she acceded to his desires he would send her husband to the galleys. She yielded to save the man whom she loved, but overcome by remorse she lost her reason, and Lecoq awoke, one morning, to find the woman by his side a corpse, with a stiletto in her breast. He paid the woman who acted as Madame Dunesme's servant a heavy bribe to keep his presence in the house a secret, and returned unobserved to his own residence. The evidence showed that Madame Dunesme had taken her own life, and the terrible news was sent to her husband. Immediately on his arrival in Paris he was arrested for embezzling his employer's funds, and after a speedy trial sent to the galleys.

The woman who had been his wife's servant took care of his only child, and Dunesme served out his ten year's sentence. On his liberation he found that the woman had a short time before married, and turned over his daughter to his sister, from whom he claimed the child, but the former custodian could not be found.

At the close of last year Dunesme suddenly came upon the person whom he had given up all hope of ever seeing again. She was in poverty and he aided her, and in return she told him the story of his wife's wrongs, and gave utterance to the suspicion that Lecoq had himself murdered her.

Dunesme, who was a lawless man, then concocted the plot which has been already treated of. Two of his companions played the part of detectives, and arrested Lecoq, as they said, for the murder of Madame Dunesme over thirty years ago. He was taken to Paris and kept there in seclusion, the supposed officers assuring him that, for a large sum of money which he had drawn from his bankers, they would secure his ultimate safety. At length he was released, and returned home, having been assured by the sham detectives that his innocence had been established to the satisfaction of the police, and that he would suffer no further molestation.

When the outrage perpetrated on Monsieur Lecoq was made known to the police, the most strenuous exertions were put forth to capture the offenders. Lecoq was summoned to Paris, and after several days spent in perambulating the city, he at length fixed on a street which he believed was that in which he had been confined. The police watched it thoroughly for several days, and ultimately arrested a man of suspicious behavior as he was entering one of the domiciles early in the morning. Lecoq positively identified him as one of the sham detectives, and a room into which he was going when taken as the apartment in which he had been imprisoned. There was a memorandum written in pencil on the wall by Lecoq, which left no doubt as to its being the place. There were letters on the man arrested which led to the securing of the other sham detective, and finally to the capture of Dunesme. The latter was in the last stage of disease, and made revelations of an astounding nature.

Among other things he detailed the facts respecting his wife and Lecoq already given, but his most important confession related to the dreadful tragedy of which Chateau Vert was the scene.

After his discharge from the galleys and the restoration of his daughter he rented a tract of woodland from Monsieur D'Eimer at the Chateau Vert. There he went under the name of Foille. It was he who encouraged the visits of young D'Eimer to his dwelling, and procured his marriage to his daughter Jeannette. When Monsieur D'Eimer brought home his young wife, Foille saw the hope of one day seeing his child the mistress of the chateau and the mother of children who would inherit vast wealth cut off. The thought preyed upon his mind until he became almost demented.

The woodland which Foille rented was in the rear of the chateau, and within it were the ruins of a small chapel. While searching them one day he partially removed a large slab and saw a deep hole underneath. He raised the block, and a flight of stone steps was discovered. Procuring a lantern and a flint and steel, he explored the subterranean opening, and soon found himself in the vaults of the chateau. More than one skeleton lay around, and here and there rusty bolts and chains, which showed that the place had once been used as a prison. In one corner of the vault he discovered an opening and winding staircase, which he ascended. After a while it became narrow and straight, and evidently ran inside the walls of the chateau. Having ascended some distance he came to a landing, and to the right saw what resembled a wooden door. He gave it a gentle push and it shook. A careful search disclosed a small knob in the wood, and a slight pressure upon it sent the door ajar, and a flood of daylight poured in. He was somewhat startled, and drew the door toward him. Hearing no indication of any one's being on the other side, he opened the door, and saw that he was on the threshold of what he knew at a glance must be Monsieur D'Eimer's bedroom. The door was a panel of the wainscot extending from almost the top of the room to within a foot of the floor. He retired and closed the door, and thought little of the discovery until the dread of his daughter's children being robbed of a splendid inheritance dwelt on his mind like a horrible nightmare.

To shorten a horrible confession, Foille resolved to murder the elder D'Eimer and his young wife, and entering the room by the secret stairway, accomplished his design only too effectually. As soon as his daughter and her husband were securely domiciled in the chateau Foille disappeared, his son-in-law having first made arrangements by which he was secured an income amply sufficient for his ordinary wants. Foille, however, became a gambler, and finally got mixed up with a lawless gang, who assisted him subsequently in carrying out his designs on Lecoq. He died within a month of his confession, and the two sham detectives are now undergoing a fifteen year's sentence.

There is every reason to believe that neither Charles D'Eimer nor his wife ever had the slightest suspicion of Foille's having any hand in the long unexplained murder of the elder D'Eimer.

Unmitigated Millionaires.

When one reflects upon the immense wealth now possessed by the four principal owners of the incalculably rich bonanza developed in the Consolidated Virginia and California mines, at the north end of the Comstock, the mind is dazed with wonder, and figures after figures are added to the already long array until they shade off into the misty realm of the fabulous and incomprehensible. The wealth of the Rothschilds, the Astors, and other rich men noted in history and known of at the present time could be counted, calculated, and defined by regular estimates based upon proper financial grounds and established principles. But in this instance, when we get to counting by the hundred millions, and see hundreds of millions beyond, with very possible billions in prospective, and no defined or understood or even guessed at limits to the great bonanza or source of this immense wealth, all figuring and calculation is lost in a glittering, golden-hued and silver-starred firmament or boundless wilderness of incomprehensible affluence, the materialization of a vast golden dream, compared with which all others pale into utter insignificance. Crœsus, Aladdin, Monte Christo, and Sinbad the Sailor were mere paupers as compared with Mackay, Fair, Flood & O'Brien.—Gold Hill (Nev.) News.

"The Great Unknown."

The following conversation about the Presidency is reported in the regular correspondence of the New York Tribune: Judge Jeremiah Black, meeting ex-Speaker Blaine one day, asked him if he felt apprehensive that Senator Morton would defeat him.

"Morton will have fair strength in the Convention," replied Mr. Blaine, "but it will not represent a single electoral vote. You see it would never do to nominate such a candidate. I'm not at all afraid of him."

"Are you afraid of Mr. Bristow?"

"No; Bristow has a good deal of strength among the people, but it is not organized. I don't see how he can possibly get a majority in a convention."

"Well, are you afraid of Senator Conkling?" asked Judge Black, going on with his catechism.

"He cannot carry his own State in the Convention or at the election, and his candidacy is an absurdity. No, I'm not afraid of him.

"Is there anybody you are afraid of?"

"Yes; there is," replied the ex-Speaker, with a serious air.

"Well, who is it?"

"The great unknown."

Russia has only 18,000 miles of railroad, and proposes to add thereto by constructing several long lines, among them one to span the empire from east to west, connecting European Russia with the Pacific by the way of Central Siberia. This will largely increase the demand for American locomotives.

WANT AT WASHINGTON.

A Disheartening Picture of Clerical Life at the Capital.

[Washington Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.]

Not long ago a Congressman from Ohio, serving his first term, asked me to assist him to get an appointment in one of the departments for a lady living in his district. She was the widow of a man who was my comrade during the late war, and in consequence the application came to me with peculiar force. Finding, however, that she was in receipt of an income which, by the closest economy was adequate to support her and her children, I declined to take any action, and asked my friend to write her that she was a thousand times better off out in Ohio with her limited income, and compelled as she was to exercise the most stringent economy to enable her to feed and clothe her children, than she would be if she should come to Washington to accept a position in one of the departments on a salary of $900 or $1,200 a year, for the reasons that her expenses here would be three or four times as great as they are in Ohio; her common every-day wearing apparel here would have to be better than anything she wears at home; she would be compelled to pay for her house or room-rent five times as much as in the village in which she lives; her board here would cost her twice as much as she would pay in Ohio.

If you know of any person who is longing to fill a Government office in Washington, dissuade him by all means. He will live a life of constant alarm and uneasiness, and whatever salary he may receive he will find it as much inadequate to the requirements upon it as his present income in Ohio may be.

I am not in position to see much of the distress prevailing in Washington, but in my limited view I have seen enough to drive sleep from my pillow.

I know of a widow woman, formerly a clerk in one of the departments, who has a number of children dependent on her for support, who has besieged the doors of the departments for weeks to secure an office which would enable her to earn her living. Three days ago she had $4 in money, nothing else available or that could be turned into bread, with little or nothing in the cupboard or coal-bin, and a month's rent nearly due. She will probably utterly fail to get the position she seeks, as she has not great political influence and there are no vacancies. What then?

Within the last two weeks two young girls, orphans, from the States, lately in office, have been literally frightened to death because they have lost their positions, and have no hope of securing them again. Their scant earnings sufficed to keep them for only a few days, landlords and boarding house mistresses grew importunate for money due them; the prospects presented only two solutions of the difficulty. They could prostitute themselves, and make then only a stinted living, for, commercially speaking, the competition in this line is as great as in any other in Washington—or they could die. They died.

I had the case brought to my attention, yesterday, of a man who came here from a comfortable home in one of the States, a few days ago, to accept office under the Government. He is a lawyer by profession, and had a fine law and miscellaneous library. He lost his position and went into the practice of the law here, but that profession is, of course, crowded. For weary months he lived in hope. Then he began to sell his library, and a few days ago parted with the last remainder for five dollars. He has nothing in the world and a family to support. What will he do?

I know that three or four days ago an artist of world-wide celebrity was glad to accept the loan of ninety cents from a friend who was willing to part with one-half his available assets to relieve as far as might be the immediately pressing wants of a hungry man.

A few months ago a young man, with nothing in the world but the consumption and a family, holding a clerkship in one of the departments, was unable to pay a debt when it fell due, and, although he was an efficient clerk, his unrelenting creditor had such influence with his immediate superior that he secured his dismissal. The man was a stranger, in a strange land, with no resource whatever, except a friend or two, who were fortunate enough to secure through the head of the department his reinstatement. But he lives in daily fear. He is dying by inches, but is menaced with the probability that before he dies he will be thrown upon charity for his maintenance and that of his family.

It would be a waste of time to go further on this line. I could fill the columns of your paper with similar illustrations of this one phase of Washington life. The recent cessation of work in the treasury bureau of printing and engraving (which was occasioned by a lack of funds, the appropriation to carry on the work having been exhausted), threw several hundreds, possibly a thousand, of women out of employment. Columns of the Republican of this city have been filled with statements from these people, recitals of sudden want and hardship, forced upon them in this way, so pitiful that in very self-defense one is compelled to pass them over without reading.

A few facts of a different character by way of filling up this necessarily crude and hastily sketched picture:

A lawyer, who has lived comfortably and decently for ten or fifteen years on an average yearly income of probably $5,000 to $7,000, well and fairly earned, two or three days ago suddenly came into a cash fee of $120,000, having gained a case before one of the mixed or international commissions sitting here.

Ladies' costumes that cost from $150 to $2,000 each, without reference to diamonds and other costly jewels, can be seen by the hundreds on fair days on the streets and avenues, at receptions, church services, etc.

It is not uncommon to see a child of six or ten years of age with seal skin sacque and rich costume, the cost of which fairly represents three month's earnings of a female employe of one of the departments.

It is also quite common to see some of these same female employes wearing costumes that have cost an amount of money equal to their pay for three or four, or even sometimes six months.

There are families here with moderate incomes who almost starve and half clothe their children in order that they may appear fairly in society. They might live decently and comfortably but for their foolish desire to shine socially.

There are probably, at this writing, 300 dwelling-houses in process of construction in the city, averaging in cost from $1,500 to $10,000 each, and there will probably be 1,000 such structures completed during the coming season.

Not one department official in five, of rank or respectability, lives within his salary.

Many Congressmen, who have paid from $5,000 to $50,000 by way of "election expenses" to secure their seats, live here at an annual expense of from twice to four times their salary.

Two thousand dollars are occasionally paid for the flowers alone to adorn a mansion for an evening party or reception.

Coffee Making.

"To an ounce of ground coffee, allow a pint of boiling water," besides the half pint of cold water you moisten and mix the coffee with, and the half gill of cold water you settle it with; this amount of cold water you require with any proportion. Put the ground coffee into a bowl, add one egg, shell, yolk and white, and half a pint of cold water. Rinse out the coffee boiler with boiling hot water, put the coffee in and pour over it the required amount of absolutely boiling water, close the spout and boil for fifteen or twenty minutes, then pour in half a gill (same as four tablespoonfuls) of cold water. Let it stand for a moment where it will not boil, then serve. A heaping tablespoonful of ground coffee weighs half an ounce, and is a liberal allowance for one person. The "two-gill measure" of ground coffee level full (that is, not heaped up) weighs three ounces exactly, and will require three pints of boiling water. This proportion may be too strong for some families, and too weak for others. An old rule is, "to one measure of ground coffee allow seven of the same measure of boiling water;" then the two-gill measure of ground coffee level full, weighs three ounces, and seven of the same measure of boiling water would be three pints and a half. If families would experiment on the making of coffee until they get the proportions exactly right to their fancy, then have tin measures made for the required amount of ground coffee and boiling water, they would be greatly surprised at the improvement in quality, and the great saving in quantity, over the haphazard style of making. Keep the coffee boiler wiped clean and dry inside; a damp tea or coffee pot acquires a musty flavor that spoils the best tea or coffee. The grounds should never be left in a moment longer than needed. The boiler should always be kept perfectly clean; well scalded and aired after being used. Every now and then put some washing soda and boiling water in it, and let it boil for ten minutes. Occasionally have a new tin bottom put in the coffee boiler, for it is impossible to make good coffee in a boiler from which the tin is worn. Have the boiler made tight, with tight fitting lids over spout and all, otherwise the kitchen ceiling receives a delicate aroma and essence-laden vapor that escapes during the boiling. Many families will not decant their coffee, but serve it in the vessel it was made in.—Country Gentleman.

On a Visit.

John Anderson, a great big three-fisted chap, with a neck as big as a nail-keg, slouched around in front of the desk and remarked:

"Good morning."

"It is a good morning for the guileless and free," replied his honor, as he signed his name to the warrant.

"That's just what I am, Judge. The boys brought me in here for fun."

"Yes—ah—yum. You deny being drunk?"

"I do, sir."

The officer set forth twenty-one different statements of facts, one being that the prisoner was dead drunk, and another being that the prisoner was lying in a gutter unable to even shut his mouth against the snow storm.

"Looks like a plain case," remarked the court.

"Judge," replied the prisoner, in a quavering voice, "I came to this town on a visit to my wife's relations, and it isn't right to treat a stranger in this way. When I woke up this morning I was bent all out of shape, one heel digging into my back and one of my knees jammed into my ribs. I was cold, all whitewash and mud, and I've been damaged over a thousand dollars. I ain't used to being piled up like stove wood and flung around."

"There's a man at the House of Correction who will doctor you up," said the court, "and thirty days from now you will come out blithesome and gay and full of ambition. It makes my mouth water to think of how fat and handsome you will be."

"But what about the damages," asked the prisoner. "I can't be used this way for nothing."

"As soon as you get up there draw on me for a thousand dollars," was the bland reply, and the prisoner hadn't been seated on the saw-horse over ten seconds when he began to whistle "Mollie Darling."—Detroit Free Press.

The Silver Deposits in Texas.

Rich and extensive silver deposits have been discovered on the right bank of the Colorado river, which promise to Texas an experience similar to that of Nevada and Montana. The veins lie in an undulating, well-wooded and watered country, the climate of which is described as perfect. More than 1,000,000 acres of land have been located this year, and many shafts have been sunk, which yield from $18 a ton upward, and grow richer as they descend. The Galveston and Austin railroad has been surveyed through the region to strike the projected Southern or Texas road, and a confirmation of the present promise will lead to the exploration of all this great territory between the Colorado, Pecos, and the Rio Grande rivers.—Nashville American.

A Warning to Gum-Chewers.

One of the girl operators at Crane's paper mill, Westfield, Mass., suffered a severe attack of the lockjaw one day last week, in which the jaws were set for more than an hour. The attending physician gave it as his opinion that the disease was the result of a long and daily practice of chewing gum, and that if the young lady persists in chewing the article a fatal return of the disease may be expected.

HOME COMING.

When brothers leave the old hearthstone
And go, each one, a separate way,
We think, as we go on alone
Along our pathway, day by day,
Of olden scenes and faces dear;
Of voices that we miss so much,
And memory brings the absent near,
Until we almost feel the touch
Of loving hands, and hear, once more,
The dear old voices ringing out,
As in the happy time of yore,
Ere life had caught a share of doubt.

If you should place against your ear
The shell you plundered from the sea,
Down in its hidden heart you'd hear
A low and tender melody,
A murmur of the restless tide,
A yearning, born of memory—
And, though his longings be denied,
The shell keeps singing of the sea.
And sometimes when old memories throng
Like ghosts, the chambers of our soul,
We feel the yearning, deep and strong,
A longing we cannot control,
To lay our cares and business by
To seek the old, familiar ways,
And cross home's threshold, and sit down
With comrades of our earlier days.

For, though our paths are sundered wide,
We feel that we are brothers yet,
And by and by we turn aside
From hurrying care and worldly fret,
And each one wanders back to meet
His brother by the hearth of home;
I think the meeting is more sweet
Because so far and wide we roam.
We cross the lengthening bridge of years,
Meet outstretched hands and faces true;
The silent eloquence of tears
Speaks welcome that no words can do.

But ah, the meetings hold regret!
The sad, sad story, often told,
Of hands that ours have often met,
Close folded under churchyard mold—
Of eyes that smile into our own,
Closed in the dreamless sleep of God;
A sweeter rest was never known
Than theirs beneath the grave's white sod.
A tender thought for them to-night,
A tribute tear from memory;
Beneath their covering of white
Sweet may their dreamless slumber be.

IT is generally accepted as a good sign when a sick person is cross and peevish—a sign that he is on the gain. A Fifth street man was taken down with lung fever some weeks since, and his wife has watched over him and seen him so near death so often that she was about discouraged. She, however, rushed into a neighbor's yesterday in great joy and excitement, crying out: "He's better—he's better—he's on the gain!" They asked how she knew, and she replied: "Because he's cross! It is only a minute ago that he threw a fork at me and called me the biggest liar and meanest woman in Detroit!"—Free Press.

Fretting.

He who frets is never the one who mends, who heals, who repairs evils; he discourages, enfeebles, and too often disables those around him, who, but for the gloom and depression of his company, would do good work and keep up brave cheer. The effect upon a sensitive person of the mere neighborhood of a fretter is indescribable. It is to the soul what a cold icy mist is to the body—more chilling than the bitterest frost, more dangerous than the fiercest storm. And when the fretter is beloved, whose nearness of relation to us makes his fretting, even at the weather, seem almost like a personal reproach to us, then the misery of it becomes indeed supportable. Most men call fretting minor fault—a foible, and not a vic There is no vice except drunkenne which can so utterly destroy the pea the happiness of a home.

AMERICAN WHEAT.

The Marvelous Increase of the Wheat Crop—Flattering Prospects for the Future—America Bound to Become the Granary of Europe.

(From the Philadelphia North American.)

Notwithstanding all that has been and can be said against the production of raw materials in the United States, and especially breadstuffs, the increase of the interest seems to be resistless and marvelous. In 1770 the wheat crop was but 851,000 bushels, and in 1873 it had reached upward of 300,000,000—a century of amazing progress. From 1830 to 1840 the exports of wheat and flour averaged $25,000,000 a year, and in 1873 they had reached $130,000,000. In every part of the Republic the culture of this crop is well understood and increasing, and there is no country in the world where the cultivation of it is so generally diffused and so steadily progressive. If we added to this the immense corn crop we shall have such an aggregate as no two nations, however great can equal. That we have really gained the permanent ascendency in the breadstuffs markets of the world, does not admit of question. In the British markets our domination is complete and well established, and the dependence of England upon Russia for food appears to be ended, the gloom and discouragement in the Russian wheat regions being general.

Our prodigious crops of wheat would never have been raised had we depended solely upon the foreign demand for compensation. But the main reliance of our farmers has always been upon the home market and its rapid increase. Domestic industrial pursuits have made such progress as to give unlimited confidence to the wheat and corn farmers, and justified an unlimited spread of the area of tillage. Northern farming has indeed been one of the main props of the nation, and has done wonders in stimulating the whole forward movement. Although a great deal has been said to dissuade the increase of wheat and corn farming as being unnecessary and unprofitable, it may be doubted whether, after all, any other pursuit has been so free from loss and attended by such a steady improvement in the condition of the prosecutors. New England and the Middle States, although fully capable of raising their own food products, do not do so, having their capital and enterprise mostly embarked in other lines of business. Formerly the South was in the same condition, but since the war the case is different, so that large grain crops are raised in that section, and there is a decided prospect of the South becoming a heavy exporter of breadstuffs.

The idea that has been industriously spread abroad that the limit of wheat cultivation has been attained at the West is a total mistake. Missouri, Arkansas, Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Nebraska and Kansas are all capable of a very great increase, and the receipts of grain and flour from these regions increase at Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, St. Louis and Cincinnati. If we take these States alone and inquire into the facts, we shall find that they are capable of trebling their product of wheat within a reasonably short space of time, and that the railroad and navigation facilities are constantly overcoming more and more the cost and difficulties of transit, while at the South the capacity for wheat culture is far beyond all present development.

The Pacific grain region has unexpectedly become remarkably productive, and defied all attempts of the northwestern cities to regulate the prices and supplies, and the trade has become so reliable and profitable there that it has become a permanent and great interest. While we have been talking of the Northwest becoming too distant from the European markets to admit of profitable grain culture for export, the Pacific trade steps in as a competitor, shipping grain around Cape Horn 18,000 miles to Europe, and making money at it. In view of this no one can reasonably doubt that the increasing surplus crops in the Mississippi valley may be transported by the river to New Orleans, and thence shipped to Europe by sea.

It is no exaggeration to say that America is becoming the granary of Europe, and that we have it in our power to remain so and to oust all competition. That of Russia, which was the most formidable, is already broken. Spain, Portugal, Holland, Belgium and Italy ought to take large quantities from us, and will do so through English operators until we supply them direct.

Too Much Noise for the Size.

After a most ridiculous and extravagant plea by a young lawyer in a trivial case, an older lawyer, who had a way of saying quaint things, remarked, in opening the opposing side of the case, that this young friend's elaborate plea reminded him of the experience of a neighbor of his who was once engaged in breaking a colt, and the story he told of it was in substance like this:

The colt breaker made his young son hide in the bush, while he himself was to mount the animal and put him at his top speed to the hiding place and then the boy was to rush suddenly out and shout "Boo!" the idea being to prove how well the colt would stand the scare.

Everything was done according to programme, but the result was altogether too much of a scare for the colt, who kicked up his heels and put down his head and the old man was thrown over it far into the road on his head.

Clearing the dust from his loosened teeth he made for the boy with the switch he had cut to drive the colt, and with rage began to dress the astonished young man down, shouting, "What did you do that for? What did you do that for?"

"But, father," said the crying boy, "you told me to holler 'boo!'"

"Yes," said the old man, "but, dang it, it was altogether too big a 'boo' for so small a colt."

Railway Accidents in Germany.

The statistical office of the German railway lines has published the returns of the accidents which happened during the year 1875 on all the German railways except the Bavarian lines. There were 755 runnings off the rails and collisions of trains outside, and 1,376 runnings off the rails and collisions inside the stations, and 1,250 accidents of divers natures by which the regular service was interrupted. These accidents have caused the loss of the lives of 509 persons; 1,545 persons were hurt. The proportion of accidents to the number of passenger trains was 1 to 5,394, and to that of freight trains 1 to 1,290.

STATE TAXES.

The Growth of Taxation During Fifteen Years—A Startling Record.

The New York Financial Bulletin gives, from every State government, official returns showing the taxation, debt and assessed valuation of taxable property of the respective States at the latest dates, and from like sources corresponding figures for 1860, and from these facts we quote as follows:

From 1860 to 1875, inclusive, the population of the States increased from 31,200,000 to 44,100,000, or 41.19 per cent. The assessed valuation of taxable property has risen from $12,547,900,000 to $18,380,900,000, or at the rate of 46.48 per cent., or only 5.29 per cent. in excess of the ratio of gain in population; so that those who have maintained that valuation and not population is the true standard with which to compare taxation do not gain much by preferring that standard. Taxes for purely State expenditures have grown from $27,200,000 to $70,400,000, or at the rate of 158.44 per cent.; and State debts have risen from $266,800,000 to $367,100,000, an increase of 37.99 per cent. It should be explained in reference to debts that the figures for 1875, so far as respects Southern States which have repudiated, include only the debt now recognized by the governments, and that Mississippi is charged in 1860 with the large debt which that State has repudiated. To recapitulate:

	Per cent.
The population has increased	41.19
The valuation on has increased	46.48
The taxes have increased	158.44
The debts have increased	37.9

Taxes have increased in nearly four fold the ratio of growth in population or valuation of taxable property. The States generally have yielded to the extravagant tendencies of the times and contributed an ample quota, along with the National Government and the counties and cities, toward enormously aggravating the public burdens. It is gratifying to find, however, that the increase in the State debts falls below the rate of growth in population.

The ratio of increase in taxation and debt varies widely. Western and Southern and Southwestern States make by far the most favorable exhibit. In the Western States the percentage of increase in taxation is 103.79, with an increase of 163.84 per cent. in population; while the debts of that group of States show a reduction of 31.61 per cent. In the southern and southwestern division, there is an increase of 103.40 per cent. in taxes, with a decrease of 51.99 per cent. in the valuation (mainly owing to the emancipation of slaves), and an increase of 27.92 per cent. in population. Measured relatively with population and valuation, the Southern and Southwestern States make a much less favorable showing than the West; but compare favorably with other sections. Their debts have been very largely augmented, the ratio being 83.08 per cent.; this percentage is likely to be materially diminished in some of the States to repudiatory "scaling" of bonded obligations.

By far the worst showing occurs in the New England group of States. The State taxes of that section have risen from $1,646,002 in 1860 to $10,456,377 in 1875, and the debt from $8,645,853 to $46,476,898; the ratio of increase in the taxes being 535.26 per cent., and in the debt 437.56 per cent. Yet the increase of population in that section has been only 20.19 per cent., and the augmentation in valuation but 100.76 per cent. This is an astounding exhibit. It appears utterly inexplicable on any other supposition than that New England, more than any other section of the Union, has yielded to the political extravagances of the times. We are aware that New England contracted considerable State debts for war purposes; and this may in some measure account for the enormous increase of 437.56 per cent. in State debts; but this can only in small part account for the still larger increase of 535.26 in the State taxes.

The Middle States increased their State taxation from $6,647,875 in 1860 to $19,165,804 in 1875, or at the rate of 188.29 per cent.; while the valuation shows an increase of only 82.76 per cent., and the population a gain of but 31.45 per cent. The debts of this section have been reduced 2.69 per cent., New York and Pennsylvania having together paid off $18,300,000 of indebtedness. Here we have an increase of taxation out of all proportion to valuation or population, being in a double proportion to the former, and six-fold compared with the latter.

To be Razed.

Paris destroys her landmarks as well as Boston. According to a chronicler in the Gaulois the house in which Marat was assassinated by Charlotte Corday is to be demolished to make way for the Boulevard St. Germain. The room where the assassination took place now forms part of an apartment occupied by Dr. Gaultier, and it appears that the preceding tenant several times received a call from Mlle. Albertine Marat, who used to visit the spot where her brother was stabbed. She died in 1842 in extreme poverty. Another person used to visit the house, M. Pallett, who died quite recently, and who was the last person who spoke to Marat before Charlotte Corday was admitted. He brought a bill, and the terrible member of the convention, who was in his bath, asked him to open a bit of the window. As Palet was leaving the house he met Charlotte Corday, who was trying to persuade, and who finished by persuading Simonne Evrard to allow her to see Marat.

The Centennial.

If the Centennial exhibition costs $7,500,000, the amount claimed to complete it, in order simply to realize this sum it will be necessary for 15,000,000 people to visit it at once, at the price of admission, fifty cents; and as the time is confined to 158 days (from May 10 to November 10, deducting Sundays, on which it will be closed), it will require the daily attendance of over 94,000 people. From these figures the resident citizen may form some idea of the crowd and bustle in our city during the six months succeeding the 10th of May.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE AMERICAN INSURANCE CO. OF CHICAGO.

The American of Chicago has been much slandered of late. Let us see why. Has it ever failed to meet its obligations—to pay every loss maturing against it? No; that is not claimed by its bitterest enemies. Are its officers or stockholders unreliable business men, or of inferior moral standard? The mention of their names disproves that. No one has dared to impugn such men as Hon. H. N. Hibbard, Hon. J. M. Bailey, Hon. W. H. Bradley, H. Z. Culver, L. L. Munn, Wm. H. Ovington, Nicholas Kranz, M. A. Hoyne, R. B. Currier, D. A. Knowlton, Jr., and Chas. L. Currier. Yet these are the men to whom the American's interests are intrusted. Does it lack enterprise or stability? Its cash income of $817,000, and the $40,000,000 of insurance written last year, and its $905,000 cash assets, together with its $2,000,000 of installment notes, are sufficient denials of that. What then is the matter? Success! Merit! These are what draw the enemies' fire. Perhaps the reader of this has received or had shown him by some rival agent one of the numerous circulars which are being so industriously distributed over the country. If so, let him probe the motive of the source from whence it came. The insurance commissioners of four different States have just done this, and after a searching official examination of the American's plan of business, its assets and liabilities, all came to the same conclusion. In closing his published report, the Hon. W. D. Hill, Superintendent of Insurance for Ohio, says: "It is my opinion that "the American Insurance Company of "Chicago is as safe and sound financially "as other insurance companies possessed of the same amount of capital and assets." The same results were reached by Col. C. P. Ellerbe, Attorney, and Hon. A. Harvey, the eminent Actuary, both of whom represented the State of Missouri in its official examination of the American's standing. Also by ex-Auditor Cattell for Iowa, and Mr. Kellogg, Actuary of the Illinois Department. These men declared what they knew, for they went to the Company's office and saw for themselves. Are not the results found by them, after days of personal examination, trustworthy, and to be accepted, instead of misrepresentations indulged in by business rivals for mercenary and selfish purposes? The American does business only in eight of the Western States, and insures no business property whatever, confining its risks to detached dwellings, school-houses and churches; yet there are only six companies in the United States whose business equals the American's, and these write heavy lines in large cities throughout the Union. Of course their agents fight the American. It's their bread and butter to do so. The American is getting the cream of the non-hazardous business. It will take no other. It knows how to get it, too; for in 1871 its cash income was only $238,672, while in 1875 it reached the splendid proportions of $817,424. It shapes its business to the needs of its members in writing five years' policies and collecting in cash only one year's premium, taking installment notes payable in one, two, three and four years for the balance. In conclusion, the American is old in years, prosperous in business, strong in reputation and money, and what is better than all, prudently and honestly managed by experienced, successful business men with unsullied reputations for integrity and moral worth.

Pimples on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.—The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic, and Schenck's Mandrake Pills, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of Sixth and Arch Sts., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country.

At our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

If you have a discharge from the nose, offensive or otherwise, partial loss of the sense of smell, taste, or hearing, eyes watery or weak, feel dull and stupid or debilitated, pain or pressure in the head, take cold easily, you may rest assured that you have the Catarrh. Thousands annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, terminate in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive, or less understood by physicians. R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., is the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy—a perfect Specific for Catarrh, "Cold in the Head," or Catarrhal Headache.

THREE POINTS FOR CONSIDERATION.

During the past five years the VEGETINE has been steadily working itself into public favor, and those who were at first most incredulous in regard to its merit are now its most ardent friends and supporters.

There are three essential causes for those having such a horror of patent medicines changing their opinion and lending their influence toward the advancement of VEGETINE. 1st. It is an honestly-prepared medicine from barks, roots and herbs. 2d. It honestly accomplishes all that is claimed for it, without leaving any bad effects in the system. 3d. It presents honest vouchers in testimonials from honest, well-known citizens, whose signatures are a sufficient guarantee of their earnestness in the matter. Taking into consideration the vast quantity of medicine brought conspicuously before the public through the flaming advertisements in the newspaper columns, with no proof of merit or genuine vouchers of what it has done, we should be pardoned for manifesting a small degree of pride in presenting the following testimonial from Rev. J. S. DICKERSON, D. D., the popular and ever genial pastor of the South Baptist Church, Boston:

THE TIRED BODY SUES FOR SLEEP.

Boston, March 16, 1874.

H. R. Stevens, Esq.:

Dear Sir—It is as much from a sense of duty as of gratitude that I write to say that your VEGETINE—even if it is a patent medicine—has been of great help to me when nothing else seemed to avail which I could safely use. Either excessive mental work or unusual care brings upon me a nervous exhaustion that desperately needs sleep, but as desperately defies it. Night after night the poor, tired body sues for sleep until the day dawn is welcomed back, and we begin our work tired out with an almost fruitless chase after rest. Now I have found that a little VEGETINE taken just before I retire gives me sweet and immediate sleep, and without any of the evil effects of the usual narcotics. I think two things would tend to make brain-workers sleep. 1st. A little less work. 2d. A little more VEGETINE. This prescription has helped me.

Now I have a particular horror of "patent medicines," but I have a greater horror of being afraid to tell the straight-out truth. The VEGETINE has helped me, and I own it up. Yours, etc., J. S. DICKERSON.

VALUABLE EVIDENCE.

The following unsolicited testimonial from Rev. O. T. WALKER, D. D., formerly pastor of Bowdoin Square Church, and at present settled in Providence, R. I., must be esteemed as reliable evidence.

No one should fail to observe that this testimonial is the result of two years' experience with the use of VEGETINE in the Rev. Mr. Walker's family, who now pronounce it invaluable:

Providence, R. I., 164 Transit street.

H. R. Stevens, Esq.:

I feel bound to express with my signature the high value I place upon your VEGETINE. My family have used it for the last two years. In nervous debility it is invaluable, and I recommend it to all who may need an invigorating, renovating tonic. O. T. WALKER, Formerly Pastor Bowdoin Sq. Church, Boston.

VEGETINE is SOLD by ALL DRUGGISTS.

This Cordial is a CERTAIN CURE for Coughs, Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Sore Throat and Breast, Bronchitis, and if taken in time, will arrest that fatal disease Consumption. The basis of this medicine is a preparation of Tar obtained by a peculiar process from the sap of the Pine Tree, the medicinal properties of which are well known. With this powerful element are thoroughly incorporated several other vegetable ingredients, each of which possesses soothing and healing attributes, thus making it the most POTENT ANTAGONIST to all diseases of the pulmonary organs that has yet been introduced.

DR. L. Q. C. WISHART'S PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL is not a new remedy that has never been heard of before, but an OLD, RELIABLE AND WELL-TRIED medicine that has been in daily use by families and intelligent physicians for the last sixteen years, and is spoken of in the highest terms by all who have used it, as thousands of UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIALS prove.

If you suffer from any disease for which this Cordial is recommended, we unhesitatingly say, "TRY IT, WE KNOW IT WILL DO YOU GOOD." A single bottle will demonstrate its valuable qualities.

Williams for Governor.

The State Convention yesterday commenced rather stormy, the friends of Holman and Landers standing firmly by their candidates. Finally Hon. James D Williams of Knox county, now a member of Congress, was chosen by acclamation. Col Grey, of Randolph, a liberal, is the candidate for Lieut. Governor The present incumbents were re-nominated. The convention was thoroughly harmonious and the ticket is a splendid one.

The Ligonier "Banner" in speaking of Capt. Mitchell as a candidate for Governor says, "no one combines more elements of strength availability and popularity than the captain." What is the use of such a fulsome notice as that.—We like Captain Mitchell and would like to see him nominated, if Holman is not. But there is no use saying Holman is second, as the above implies, for the Captain knows he aint.

The printing and engraving bureau at Washington, is to be overhauled. This is where the U. S. notes and fractional currency is printed. Col McCarty, was Superintendant for several years at a salary of about $3,000 per year. Of course its all right, everybody honest, &c., but the Committee just want to know, you know, how one, on that salary in so short a time, can own a house in New York worth $60,000 and one in Washington worth $30,000. They want to get hold of this new kind of 'rithmetic.

Witnesses summoned to Washington from Florida, Alabama and other distant regions, by the Confederate smelling committee, are now in extreme destitution, and actually in pawn at their boarding houses. They can be seen in squads hawking about their witness certificates, for which they are offered 50 cents on the dollar.—[Press

Upon what authority the Press makes the above assertion we don't know, but presume it copies from some other paper. The witnesses up to about two weeks ago were paid the cash by the Clerk of the House on their certificates, and since the appropriation run short, they have been compelled to take 95 cents on the dollar, a much better percentage than Jay Cook & Co., have ever yet paid the Government.

Kilbourn is still kicking against the pricks His friends tried hard to get him out of the hands of the House through a writ of Habeas Corpus, but it wouldn't win. He is the ring-leader of the real estate pool. This pool was composed of a very few gentlemen, who bought property in Washington improved it with those $22,000,000 given to the district by a Republican Congress and then they sold out and divided the spoils like robbers. Boss Shepherd was a member and ran the Board of Public works which had the disbursement of the money. Now you see the difficulty at a fair investigation. When Kilburn was called before the Committee he refused to bring his books or testify to certain things. Rather than involve his friends, he goes to jail and they pay him well. And the Committee must seek elsewhere for such evidence as it can find, while our Radical papers cry that these investigations are expensive. Why did they not think of this when they brought about the necessity for them.

Congress at Work.

It is quite a relief, after a sojourn of several months in close rooms, pumped full of hot air by a 40-horse engine, with but little means of escape to get out into the free open country, where pure air and a moral atmosphere causes a return of a once good appetite, which has been tampered and fed by unwholesome cookery, until the gastric machinery is about played out. The eye seldom wearies with the beautiful scenery in and around Washington, but the stomach either less patient or more exacting, soon grows tired of the attractions offered for its enjoyment. We left the city last Wednesday evening, and were whirled into Harper's Ferry for supper. Twenty minutes over we found ourselves again on our serpentine course along the base of mountains, until at last wearied by the rattle of the cars, we turn into a pullman berth, and are soon unconscious of the ascent and descent of the renowned Alleghenies. Just think of it, seven hundred and twenty miles in 22 hours, stopping three times for meals.—We left the city pulsating with the heat of eighty degrees, warm and beautiful, canopied with a hazy atmosphere that appeared, from the distance like a scene of enchantment. The beautiful dome of the capitol with its statue of Freedom lifting far into the blue above never looked more grand than in the glow of that evening sunset. Peering through the car window we could see the flickering of the lamps mounted like sentinels on the terrace above. The evening session would soon begin, as agreed upon by a resolution passed by the House a few days before. The duties of this ex-confederate House, as our Radical friends facetiously call it, being so much more arduous than any other session ever known before, they very properly conclude to commence night work early in the session, and even by this arrangement they do not expect to be able to adjourn before August, There is but one appropriation that has yet been considered, and the most important ones are yet to come. Committees are working steadily in hunting up and tracing out the rascalities of a venal administration, and this adds largely to the arduous duties to be discharged. If these committees would only harken to the Republican press, they would abandon such attempts as it will cost something to show up these corruptions. But somehow the Democracy of the House are imbued with the idea that the people would like to know where their money has went to do the most good and as the Republicans failed to respond in this work, a chance was brought about for this purpose, in the complexion of the House, so that it comes in the shape of a trust confided to them by the people, which they have no desire to disregard.

The printing committee have the government printer, Mr. Clapp, on their hands. Clapp testified the other day that he had $50,000 on hand. A clerk was sent down to count it and only found $16,000 and now Clapp seems embarrassed. The postal committee have the postal contracts to look into, and they have already seen, how low responsible bidders were left out in the cold, while favorites were awarded contracts at twice the amount of the former making thousands of dollars in the operation. The Committee of the District of Columbia, are trying to make out how much a Dr. Nichols, of the Insane Asylum, made in a short time, by supplying tainted meats and decayed vegetables to the unfortunate inmates. The naval committee is busy with the retou: al Robeson, of whom Don Piatt says:

> We have marveled often that such desperate attempts should be made to destroy by fire the Navy Department buildings while the War Department should be left. The solution of the mystery comes out in the fact that Belknap, stupid as he is, did a better thing. He procured the passage of a law that authorized him to have destroyed such papers as he might find troublesome.—How neatly and quietly William went through. No midnight alarms; no fetching out of engines and brutal splashing of water. Only a coalgrate—a stealthy search and an active hand. Score one for William, and shame on the Rotund.

The Freedman's Bank Committee would like to ascertain who got the earnings of the poor colored folks, when that bank went under and a hundred other things are to, and will, be brought to light, the Lord being willing. If the Republicans would only help us in these matters how happy we might dwell in unity together. There are a few honest men on that side who are trying to cleanse and purify their party, but they have been at it so long that they are completely discouraged, and it is now a matter of indifference to them what becomes of the corrupt organization.—They know that no party can purify itself, and are therefore ready for a change. The Democratic party in 1860 had to pay a penalty for what was then charged as extravagance and profligacy in the administration, and that penalty was the loss of power. Now, not only extravagance but wholesale robbery and frauds have been not only charged but proven, and it is time for the Republican party to step down and out in order to have a chance to purify and tone up.

Written on the death and memory of Mrs. Harriet Shutt, who was an affectionate sister, true and devoted wife; by Miss Annie Byroad, a sister, and Franz J. Strager, a cousin of the departed one:

Many a time, when I am all alone
Fond recollection brings past scenes to view
While thinking of thee, who from me art gone,
Thou who wert to me ever kind and true.

Sister, thou wert fair as roses in bloom,
Fair as violets that in our pathway grow,
But death called thee to the silent tomb.
Cruel death with his sharp sword laid thee low.

Sister, thou wert but young, heathful and str'g
And life's pleasures were all before thee,
Pleasures for thee with sorrows mixed among,
When called from time to eternity.

Sweet little "Kelly," in this world of sin,
Thou didst leave her like a little flower,
To grow 'mong thorns, but in the care of Him
Who watches over all every hour.

Two summer's grass o'er thy grave has grown,
And autum's hues have tinged the golden grain.
Two winter's winds have whistled o'er thy tomb.
And lovely spring has returned again.

Lovely spring has returned to us again.
The south wind is sighing for the flowers,
All nature is coming to life again,
Bringing all but the fair and good of ours.

Oft to thy grave, alone I have repaired.
When seated on the grassy mound alone,
With my forehead to the cool breezes bared,
What recollections of the departed one.

What scenes recollection presents to view,
What vivid thoughts through my brain surging go,
Of thee my sister ever kind and true,
Who wert too fair to remain here below.

Father, mother, brothers, sisters all,
To all thou didst bid a fond adieu,
Home thou wert called—thou obeyed the call,
To thy home on the wings of angels flew.

We mourn our loss, but 'tis thy eternal gain,
For thou hast a mansion and a crown,
We also shall not long here remain,
For one by one time will cut us down.

One by one we'll, come where thou art laid,
One by one we'll meet thee over yonder,
One by one our bed with thee be made,
One by one meet where we ne'er shall sunder

Thy body is laid in the silent tomb,
And to dust thou hast returned again,
But not thou—thy spirit sees not its gloom,
Thou art where joy and peace ever remain.

Farewell then, but not a long farewell,
For one by one minutes come and go,
One by one the beating pulses tell,
That all, all is transient here below.

Thou didst say, father meet me in heaven,
Mother, meet me in that happy land,
Husband, brothers, sisters, I'm forgiven.
Washed from sin in the blood of the lamb.

Where thou art laid in the silent tomb,
One by one we'll come and make our home,
One by one with thee we will find room.
And dwell with thee—thou shalt not be alone

But with thee in fairer climes on high,
We'll walk the Elysian fields o'er,
In that land we ne'er shall say good-bye,
But rejoice in Christ's love forevermore.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The imp or has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and whol sale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices. Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these inter mediate profits, No middlemen with us. Mr. F. Zimmerman receved quite a hard bump on the face this week. He was repairing some machinery at his plaining mill, when one of the wheels broke and a part of it striking him.

The Columbia City Post says: "The wheat prospects is not at all flattering in this county. A large majority of fields are nearly bare, while but few give hope that they will produce a full crop. The prospect is not encouraging.

The new Bank building soon to be erected, will be a handsome edifice when completed. It will be two stories high, 20 x 40, on the ground, and the architectural design will be something for our town. It is expected that the Courier office will find a lodgment in the second story.

Our enterprising merchants, Messrs Miller & Casebeer, have established a branch store at Reading, Mich. They will confine their trade at that point exclusively to Clothing and Gents Furnishing Goods. With their active energy and well known popularity we have no doubt of their entire success.

Owing to a sudden attack of sickness Mr. Lauferty has been unable to go East for his spring and summer stock of Clothing. His intention was to start this week, but will not go until next week. He has made up his mind for purchasing a large and tasty stock and to have them sold at prices never before known in the city. It will pay you to wait one week.

W. H. Dills, Esq., has taken T. H. Sprott as a partner and they have arranged a neat and tasty room over Woodford's store, and have purchased one of the finest libraries that was ever brought to Dekalb Co. Mr. D. is thoroughly posted in his profession and being so nicely located would be glad to receive calls from all wanting legal business attended to.

Many of our farmers do not feel greatly encouraged over the prospects of the coming wheat crop. One of them told us the other day that he had sown 84 acres, out of which he expected three or four acres fit to cut. With poor promises of an abundant harvest, hard grinding times and heavy taxes, the people may well murmer at the gloomy prospects ahead. We hope it will not prove so bad as anticipated.

One of those knowing fellows from Indianapolis who is supposed to be the receptacle of facts that would startle the world, if they were made public, wrote to the Clymer Committee that he would like to communicate with said Committee. An answer was returned that if he desired could do so. In a few days his august presence was announced, and when sworn, testified to simply nothing He got neither fees nor traveling expenses, and he went back a sadder and poorer man.

When a boy, in a quiet little village in Ohio, we often wondered what a lamp lighter was. When we saw Dry Houghton the other evening, all aglow with matches and oil, climbing a sweet little ladder, and touching off Underhill's latest, it struck us "all of a heap" that he was one of the "very fellows." The only difficulty we realized when Dry was up, was, which was the lamp post. We found out which was which very easily. We asked if it wasn't hard work. A voice responded. "It don't take any skin off" &c. And then we knew it was Dry.

A right smart chance of an individual down at Pittsburg, is fixing up an apparatus so as to take passengers on board of a train without stoping the same. We looked at it a moment and inquired the manner of operating it, you stand on a platform, and as the train approaches, there is something reaches out and knocks you over when you fall on a table, that comes up in the rear, and the conductor has you by the throat in a minute. It takes you about four days to get over the attack, providing you live at all, but then you see it don't stop the train and that is the main object in view.

A. O. Miller's troupe gave two entertainments at Ensley's Hall, this week. The last one, The Two Orphans," was a fine "Send-off," and would give satisfaction to New York audience. If Mr. M. would manage his own business it would be more pleasant to his patrons. His tickets were sold as reserved seat tickets —that is reserve it where you could—but every few minutes some one would claim your seat. It seems to be b'hoys out of the city that had engaged them, and a fellow would either have to blush, and set out, or raise a disturbance, to keep a seat. We dont blame the boys, but we do blame Miller's one-horse managers.

Our Republican fellows tell us that their's going to be a Long run for Sheriff. We'll make it short, however, on election day.

We are now ready to announce the names of candidates for the various positions to be filled in the county. Owing to the hard times, we have reduced our rates to three dollars for announcements, which must be paid in advance.

We were delighted in reading over a very amusing criticism of "Caste," given by our local talent, in the Republican the other week. Weamer would make a fine theatrical editor, for our metropolitan dailies, though we always thought his tastes were quite the reverse. There was a verbosity of style, an indifference to circumstances that was perfectly charming, and would at once command at least $8 per week, in our best cities. Why one will so obstinately resist their natural calling when it is so palpably shown to them has always been a mystery. But the compliment of "true inwardness" to one of the lady characters, was the acme of the writer's genius in that article, not so delicately conceived as it was beautifully expressed. But the last word was the crowning stroke of erudition, Dramique is good, and shows that "we've been there." The animus of the writer is expressed in that one word, as if his soul in that one word he did outpour. It is at least synonymous to something more emphatic, but our church connection would not permit us to say so.

We beg leave to respectfully express our objection to the miserable means of transportation offered the people along the line of the Saginaw Railroad, in this State. The most important train to the local travel is called an 'accommodation,' but it is a mere aggravation. From Angola South to Fort Wayne, the local business on this train is many times greater than on the express trains, and yet the accommodations are not nearly so good. While we are aware that the road cannot afford to increase their expenses, we believe that some arrangement could be adopted by which a trip to Fort Wayne would be more comfortable. Sometimes it requires three hours to make the distance from Fort Wayne to this place, and by the time of arrival, one's patience is well nigh exhausted. A very uncomfortable car is provided, adding much to the length and annoyance of the journey. But this would not be heeded so much if the time was reduced. Twenty miles an hour ought not to be regarded as a startling rate of speed, and we believe it to be within the power of the Company to accomplish this. Long trains of freight cars with a coach attached, is one of the greatest nuisances of modern civilization, and we hope they will be abandoned. We have no doubt it would conduce to a largely increased trade.

Can we Afford It.

An absence of several weeks has prevented us from having our say about the lamps now decorating several of our streets. We have nothing in common against street lamps, but a naptha Jack-o-lantern of the Underhill pattern is our special abhorence. But the purchase having now been made, there is no use crying for spilt milk. The question now arises what are we going to do with this elephant on our hands. We can do nothing for the expense already incurred, but we can do something to prevent a useless and profligate expenditure of the people's money. When a few determine that it is better to "show off" the town, in an enterprise that is much more expensive than profitable it is time for our citizens to give the matter some consideration. In the midst of a paralized industry, with business stagnated, with a prospect of almost a complete failure the cry of hard of the winter crop, with times ringing painfully through the land with taxes fearfully augmented, and the outlook most discouraging, is it the proper time, fellow citizens, to pay out one single cent more than is actually necessary to meet the most pressing demands of the community. Now that these lamps have been bought have you considered the expense necessary to keep them up. We have been informed by those who have figured the thing down to a fine point that it will require $600 a year to light and keep these lamps in shape. Is our finances such, that we can indulge in this expensive luxury? The above sum would pay the interest on six or eight thousand dollars in bonds with which to erect a creditable school house. Which is the more desirable, which reflects the credit of a town to the best advantage, street lamps or good school edifices? Say but half that amount will be needed yearly to maintain them, cannot the amount be expended to greater advantage. We believe it would be a matter of economy to take every lamp post down and store them away. The original cost will be nothing as to the great expense of maintaining them. We understand there are a number who will buy those in front of their property, and keep them up themselves. We hope they will be accommodated. Here is the expense of a new school house to be erected, and our taxes already burdensome. Extravagance and show is scarcely in accord with the dull times. The poor man striving now with bared arms and sweating brow to meet the demands upon him, to be still further burdened is more than human nature can stand.

New School Edifies.

The new school building to be constructed the coming summer promises to be one of the best in the country. Plans have already been drawn, and from them, we can see that it will be complete in all its appointment The building will be about 80x61 feet, with half basement, first and second stories. Three main rooms in the first story will be, one 37 x 28 and the other two, 35 x 28 with halls, cloak rooms, &c., adjoining. The second story will be a duplicate of the first. A main hall will run from front to rear in the first story, and stairs five feet wide will ascend therefrom. We would like to see double stairs to the landing half way up and then a broad stair way from there to the upper floor. Stairs in a school house should be broad and ample. The Board have shown excellent taste in the selection of the design, and we believe they will prove entirely efficient in its construction.

Do our farmer friends ever sit down and take a calm survey of things, and then arive at principal cause of the hard times now upon us. It has been said that there is no corner of the land that does not suffer under the heavy hand of dishonest administration. Swindling and corruption comes home to every household in the land. It take away a part from the market value of every bale of cotton, every barrel of molasses every hogshead of sugar every barrel of flour, every cask of tobacco, every tierce of bacon, every head of cattle, every package of wine, every cargo of lumber, and every product of mechanical labor whatsoever.

The people are poor because their rulers steal. The people groan and suffer because they can not sell what they create for its lawful market value. The times are hard everywhere, and the causers of hard times are our corrupt rulers. Heavy taxes represent stealage. We pay tribute to political brigands and official pirates. Forty per cents of all duties goes into the pockets of scamps. Sixty per cent. of all internal revenue is likewise diverted. Somehow by hook or crook, the profits of all industry go into the coffers of bankers, leaders, speculators and jobbers. The fraternity of scamps fatten and flourish, but the people mourn. Rich get richer all the time and the poor grow poorer from day to day.

It must be apparent to every observer that this state of affairs cannot last long The people of the whole country feel that they are paying too dearly for their political whistle. They are beginning to look closely into the causes that have produced the present suffering of the nation. They are fast gaining an inside view into the strange ways and the marvelous extent of frauds and swindles which have been perpetrated upon them. The developments relative to the gigantic whisky ring. Babcock, Belknap, Orville Grant, Robeson, Delano the Pension Bureau, Pendleton's railroad claim, have opened the people's eyes. They are amazed at the extent of these high-handed frauds. In a quiet way the people are resolving that this plundering and stealing must cease, and that the guilty shall be brought to punishment. Thieves and rogues must take back seats. Men of sterling integrity and of clean record will be called to the front. Take warning, ye culprits! The day of retribution is at hand. The records of political scoundrels are to be overhauled Thieves shall govern the people no longer.

—The Disciples have been holding a protracted meeting at their church, under Rev. Mr. Sutton. Large congregations lend their encouragement.

—It is claimed that the wheat prospects are good, although there are a few who still tremble at the result.

—A lawsuit of five days duration is the latest legal feature in town. The leading spirit was Pinchin as the length of time would indicate.

—Prof. J. P. Rous, Superintendant of the public schools, lectured in the M. E Church on the subject of Personal "Responsibility." The lecture was highly enjoyable.

—It is known by two or three person that a certain good looking gentleman of this place, of good form and address and very engaging, is very intimate with not a very handsome married lady. It is not known whether it has gone so far as to be of a criminal character or not, but there is a certain air of sweatness about both which augers great admiration for each other. The gentleman is very discreet, however, and there is not much chance for a denouement at present. The lady is very lovable, and says "darling" in such a rougishly smiling way as to be perfectly irresistible. There is a little romance connected with the affair, an episode one evening at church that makes it doubly interesting, but we are not now at liberty to give particulars.

It is almost impossible to get a lead on the dark transactions of the present administration. The investigating committees of the House are doing all they can to ferret out the corruption, but they have not the zealous co-operation of the Republican press of the country with them. Why Clymer's Committee, two days before they found out about Marsh, had debated the question of abandoning any further investigation because there seemed to be nothing tangible to take hold of in the War Department. Everything was covered up so completely that it was almost impossible to get at the truth. The whole department was under Belknap and he had his tools to prevent any exposure.—At last a reporter and a clerk riding down the Avenue one evening fell in with a man named Arms, and through him the name of Marsh was ascertained and lo and behold, a cabinet officer falls So with many others. Unless some fortuitous circumstance occurs to develop a lead they may never get down to the bottom of their rascalities. But there is more coming. Every little division of the various departments is more or less tainted with frauds and stealings.

THE EAST.

The game of billiards played at New York between Cyrille Dion and A. P. Rudolphe for the championship of America, a diamond cue, and $1,000, on a four-pocket table, 1,500 points, was won by Dion, Rudolphe scoring only [illegible]....The New Jersey House of Representatives has tabled, by a vote of 45 to 16, a bill for the taxation of church property....Drs. Storrs and Budington, the well-known Congregational clergymen of Brooklyn, have formally withdrawn from their fellowship with the Congregational association, on account of the Beecher scandal.

A terrible boiler explosion occurred at Binghamton, N. Y., last week. Three persons were killed, two seriously injured, and a number of others slightly injured.

Alexander T. Stewart, the great New York dry goods merchant, died in that city on the 10th inst., of inflammation of the bladder, with which he had been afflicted for the past six years. Mr. Stewart was born in the North of Ireland in the year 1803. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and the earlier part of his career was devoted to school-teaching. He came to New York city in 1823, and, after teaching school for a short time, he started a retail dry-goods store in Broadway. His business increased steadily, until, for many years back, he has owned and managed probably the largest dry goods house in the world. His fortune has been variously estimated at from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000, but, like the late William B. Astor's, it will probably prove to have been exaggerated.

The new census of Philadelphia, just taken, shows a population of 817,448....John Seal, one of the tellers of the Security Savings bank, of New York, has been discovered to be a defaulter to the amount of $69,000.

An explosion of fire-damp in the Nesquehoning mines, near Allentown, Pa., last week, killed three men and seriously injured five others.

The funeral services of the late Alexander T. Stewart were solemnized at his house and at St. Mark's church, New York, on the 13th inst. Bishop Potter officiated, assisted by a number of clergymen. The floral decorations at each place were magnificent, and the crowds in front of the house, the church, and along the streets were very great. The admission to the house and the church was by ticket, and the holders of these included leaders in social, professional and political life. Govs. Tilden and Rice headed the pall-bearers.

THE WEST.

A shocking tragedy was enacted in St. Louis one day last week. A wealthy citizen named W. W. Jilz had seduced a girl named Shane, who was working in his house as a servant. A brother of the girl, a mere youth, attacked Jilz in his own mansion, firing a fatal shot through his lungs. The latter defended himself with a revolver, firing four shots in rapid succession into Shane's body, and inflicting almost instantaneous death. Jilz is the owner of a patent auger for boring wells, from which he has realized quite a fortune. He was a man of considerable inventive genius, but of a restless, roving nature, and has lived in scores of towns in Illinois, Indiana and Michigan.....An immense indignation meeting of property-owners and tax-payers was held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, one day last week, to protest against the ballot-box outrages perpetrated by the bummer politicians at the recent town election in that city. The leading men of the city participated in the deliberations, and judging from the tone of the speeches and resolutions, the determination has been arrived at by the people of the city that the town officers who were fraudulently counted in shall not be permitted to assume the duties of the position to which they claim to have been elected. Suggestions of vigilance committees, lamp-posts, etc., were freely indulged in, and in a manner which indicates that the most radical and summary remedies for the evils complained of may possibly be resorted to in case of emergency.

Joe Taylor, engaged as a guide for Custer's expedition against Sitting Bull, who arrived at Fort Lincoln a few days ago, from winter trapping above Fort Buford, reports the massacre by Yanktons, near Little Rocky river, of seven whites and two squaws. The Yanktons pretended friendship, and often visited the camp. They finally came armed, and at a given signal fired and killed the entire party.

A second mass meeting of Chicago property-owners and tax-payers was held in the Exposition building in that city, on Tuesday evening, April 11. It was probably the largest meeting ever held under roof in the West, the attendance being variously estimated at from 25,000 to 35,000 people. Hon. Thomas Hoyne was nominated for Mayor by acclamation, and committees were appointed to wait on Mayor Colvin and the town officers who were fraudulently counted in at the recent election, and request them to yield to the will of the people and step down and out. Speeches were made by Hon. John Wentworth, Hon. Leonard Swett, Rev. Robert Collyer, and other distinguished citizens. The spirit of the monster assemblage, as reflected in the speeches and resolutions, indicates a fixed determination on the part of the people of tax-ridden Chicago to rid themselves of bummer rule, and inaugurate an era of honest municipal government.

Two more of the Chicago whisky ring, Freysinger and Seavers, distillers, have been convicted.

It is reported from Chicago that there are now in the West 200,000 head of cattle awaiting the drying up of the country roads to ship to the eastern market. The value of this live stock is estimated at $12,000,000, and this sum will be distributed throughout the West within two months....Gen. John McDonald, the ex-United States Supervisor of Internal Revenue at St. Louis, recently convicted of conspiracy to defraud the revenue, was last week sentenced to three years in the Penitentiary and to pay a fine of $5,000....W. O. Avery, late chief clerk in the Revenue bureau at Washington, was at the same time sentenced to two years in the Penitentiary and $1,000 fine.

SOUTH.

Three young men of Newport, Ky., were drowned in the Ohio river, opposite that city, last week, by the sinking of a skiff in which they were rowing across the stream....Jefferson, Texas, telegram: "F. J. Pattillo, local editor of the Leader, met and attacked Ward Taylor, editor of Jimplecute, with a cowhide, which he used freely till Taylor got his pistol out, fired, and killed Pattillo immediately, the ball entering the heart. The difficulty originated in publications in their respective papers."....The large wholesale house of William H. Brown & Co., Baltimore, was destroyed by fire last week. Loss, $225,000.

A daring attempt was recently made to rob an express car on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad. As the train approached Blue Jacket, a side-track station thirteen miles north of Vinita, Indian territory, a light was displayed. When the train halted six or eight robbers, white men, began exchanging shots with thirteen of a marshal's posse who were posted at different positions on the train, anticipating an attack. The robbers were completely repulsed. One was killed on the ground, two captured, and the rest escaped.

WASHINGTON.

A Washington dispatch of the 7th inst. says: "A sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee of the House has had the safe-burglary subject under investigation for several days, and to-day struck something substantial. H. C. Whitely, late Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury department, was indicted with Harrington, ex-Assistant District-attorney, and some others, for the safe-burglary conspiracy. Whitely was examined by the committee to-day, and for three hours gave the history of the conspiracy and the manner of carrying it out. His testimony, if true, convicts Gen. O. E. Babcock of having given the first orders that set the conspiracy at work, and of having had a knowledge and a certain participation in it to the end. Whitely testified that Babcock, for him and in his own house, developed the service he was expected to perform."....The Boutwell committee on the Mississippi troubles have decided not to begin their labors until an appropriation is made to the contingent fund of the Senate, which is reduced to $2,000....Trenor W. Park testifies before the Congressional committee that the Emma mine exceeded in value the representations of the vendors....The House Committee on Appropriations have decided in the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill to reduce by consolidation the districts of Internal Revenue from 209, the present number, to 105. It is proposed to make a compromise and establish the number at 166.

Gen. Babcock denies the story of Detective Whitely implicating him in the safe-burglary conspiracy. He admits having dealings with Whitely, but claims that the work he assigned to him was the ferreting out of newspaper men who had been denouncing him (Babcock) for false measurements of work made for the Board of Public Works....Col. Broadhead, of St. Louis, was in Washington last week, and called upon the President. The latter said he had long desired to explain to him (Broadhead) his action in revoking the order transferring supervisors, as he had observed that Broadhead in his argument before the jury in St. Louis had followed the same line of argument as Henderson in censuring this revocation. The President explained his action at great length. He said the first idea of a change was original with him, and that he afterward revoked the order upon the representations made to him by Tutton, in whom he had explicit confidence. Tutton said the transfer would be a mere advance notification to distillers, and that the only way to discover crooked distillers was to send an honest man secretly into the suspected districts. Broadhead says Grant's explanation satisfies him entirely with the President's sincerity of purpose in the matter.

The President has lately expressed himself as being opposed to the House bill transferring the Indian bureau to the War department, and has gone so far as to intimate that if the bill is passed by Congress he will veto it....The Committee of Ways and Means has completed the Morrison Tariff bill, and ordered it to be reported favorably to the House. The tax on coffee of three cents and on tea of fifteen cents was stricken out. The concluding proviso of the free list has been amended to read as follows: "Provided, That alcohol to be exclusively used for the manufacture of ethers, chloroforms, and vegetable alkaloids, made free by this act, may be withdrawn from bond free of the specific internal revenue tax per gallon on quantities not exceeding 1,000 gallons at any one time, under such rules, regulations, and bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

It is said the President will not appoint a successor to Minister Schenck for several weeks. Rumor credits him with the intention of returning Gen. Schenck should the House Committee on Foreign Affairs make a favorable report in his case....The House Committee on Territories has voted to amend the bill making New Mexico a State so as to provide that the election for the adoption of the State Constitution shall be held in June, 1877, instead of "not later than January, 1877," as the Senate proposed. This will prevent the new State from taking part in the next Presidential election.

GENERAL.

Secretary Fish has sent to the American Charge d'Affaire at London an official note informing him that the United States cannot under any circumstances take cognizance of the act of the British Parliament of 1870 touching extradition treaties, and peremptorily refusing to give any assurances whatever that Winslow, the Boston forger, shall not be tried for any crime except that for which extradition is asked. He also gives notice that the enforcement of this condition will be regarded by our Government as an abrogation by Great Britain of the Ashburton treaty.

President Prado, of the South American Republic of Peru, arrived at New York last week. He will make a quiet tour of the country and visit the Centennial in May.

A convict in the Vermont penitentiary named George Miles claims to have been the mechanical expert in the famous Washington safe-burglary affair, and says he was hired by Babcock and Harrington to perform the work. The latter, it is proper to say, deny the allegation, and denounce the alleger as the champion liar.

POLITICAL.

The National Colored Convention at Nashville, last week, was quite largely attended. Resolutions were adopted reaffirming their devotion to the Republican party; that, nevertheless, they have just reason for complaint against those members who have proved recreant to their trusts; returning thanks to the friends of freedom; and disfavor any desire to cherish ill-feeling against the ex-slaveholding element of the South; express gratitude to President Grant and Senator Morton for their efforts in behalf of the colored race, and favor a compulsory educational law in the South.

A Washington dispatch to the Chicago Tribune says: "There is good authority for the statement that the President has discovered that he has been deceived by Babcock and others in very many things during the entire course of his administration, and that he will soon take occasion in some decisive way to convince the public of this fact. Those who have recently conversed with the President say that he has become keenly conscious that he has been grossly deceived and betrayed by those around him, and that he has never been fully aware of this until quite recently.... Blaine has returned to Washington, exuberant and hopeful. He says that he expects to receive 160 votes on the first ballot at Cincinnati.

The Vermont delegation to Cincinnati is said to stand six for Bristow, two for Blaine, and two neutral....The South Carolina and Texas delegations are said to be solid for Morton.

FOREIGN.

Official advices from Madrid announce that the Government of King Alfonso is carefully organizing a force, which will include some of the troops which recently surrendered under Don Carlos, for the suppression of the Cuban rebellion. The army will sail for Havana about October 1, as it is not thought advisable to commence operations until after the sickly season in Cuba.

A dispatch to the London Times from Odessa represents that the insurrection in Bosnia and Croatia is assuming dangerous proportions. The majority of insurgents are veterans of the Austrian militia. The Governor of Bosnia has advised the proclamation of holy war. He has been recalled. The intelligence is so alarming that the Russian Government is afraid to publish it in Odessa....The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Allegemeine Zeitung maintains that the Czar really intended to abdicate, but the idea was abandoned in consequence of restoration of his health.... It is given out in St. Petersburg that the Russian government thinks the addition of "Empress of India" to Queen Victoria's title is just about the right thing, and will good-naturedly give it official recognition as soon as the Queen officially assumes it....The English university boat race this year was won by Cambridge.

Affairs on the Rio Grande are getting decidedly interesting. A fight recently occurred between Mexicans and Americans, in which three of the former and two of the latter were killed. The fight was about branding cattle. On the 10th inst. the Mexicans at New Laredo opened fire upon the American citizens and soldiers across the river, wounding several persons. A hot fight ensued between Mexican and United States troops on opposite sides of the river, the latter throwing shells at a lively rate into the Mexican town.

The Mark Lane Express, in a review of the British grain trade, says: "A full crop of wheat must not be expected. The acreage under wheat appears to be about five-sevenths of that of 1875, and the quantity of wheat sold in the country for sowing has been considerably less than usual."

According to late European advices Russian intervention in Turkish affairs is among the probabilities....The Madgeburger Zeitung says it is incontestable that the Czar has declared his intention of abdicating as soon as Russian interests necessitate war....It is said the emigration from Ireland for 1876 will be the smallest since 1851....The University of Prague has prohibited the attendance of women at their medical lectures.

A treaty of peace has been made between the Republic of Liberia and the revolting tribes....A heavy rain-storm prevailed throughout England and Ireland on the night of the 12th of April....Late advices from Algiers report a serious engagement between French troops and insurgents near Constantine. The latter, numbering 4,000, were completely routed, with a loss of 600 killed and wounded. The French loss small....An idea of how they deal with bribe-takers in Greece may be gained by a perusal of the following telegram from Athens: "The High Court of Justice has sentenced M. Balassopoulous, a former Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs, to one year's imprisonment, deprivation of political rights during three years, and to give the $10,000 he received as a bribe to the poor-house. M. Nikolopoulos, a former Minister of Justice, was sentenced to ten month's imprisonment. The Archbishop of Cephalonia was fined $10,000, the Archbishop of Patros, $4,400, and the Archbishop of Messeno $4,000, being double the amounts they received as bribes. All were impeached for corruption and simony."

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Friday, April 7.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—After a sharp discussion the House, by a vote of 89 yeas to 128 nays, tabled a resolution authorizing Gen. Weitzel, of the army, to act as trustee for the Cincinnati Southern railroad.... Whitthorne, the Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a resolution instructing the sub-committee to proceed to the Philadelphia and League Island Navy-yards to inquire into certain alleged abuses and frauds. Adopted....The House then went into committee of the whole on the private calendar.

Saturday, April 8.—Senate.—The Senate held no session.

House.—The proceedings in the House were limited to the delivery of speeches, to which there were few listeners, either on the floor or in the galleries.

Monday, April 10.—Senate.—In the Senate during the morning hour a large number of bills and petitions were presented and referred. The House bill to provide for the deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury department, and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency was taken up and passed as amended by the Senate Finance Committee....A resolution was adopted authorizing Boutwell's Mississippi Committee to employ a clerk and stenographer, and to send for persons and papers. A bill was also introduced appropriating $10,000 to defray the expenses of the committee.

House.—The Committee on Elections reported a resolution that C. B. Farwell is not entitled to his seat as a member from the Third Illinois district, and that J. V. LeMoyne is entitled to such seat. The minority report, in favor of Farwell, was not ready, but leave was granted to present it. Both reports were ordered printed, and to lie upon the table until called up for action....The House suspended the rules, and, without any consideration or discussion, passed the River and Harbor Appropriation bill. The total amount appropriated is $5,872,850....A resolution was adopted inquiring into the cause of the imprisonment of E. O'Meagher Condon.

Tuesday, April 11.—Senate.—A bill was passed to provide for the expenses and admission of foreign goods to the Centennial....Howe introduced a bill, by request, to provide for cheap transportation of freight between tide-water at or near the Atlantic ocean and the Ohio and Mississippi valleys by railroads. The Senate passed the bill for the improvement of the Capitol grounds, with a provision that none of the funds appropriated shall pass through the hands of Gen. Babcock, as Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds....Edmunds, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on the House bill to protect witnesses who shall be required to testify in certain cases, with a written report. Stevenson, of the same committee, presented a minority report.... The Senate was engaged nearly all day in discussing Hamlin's Postal bill.

House.—A bill was passed authorizing the bridging of the Mississippi river at Sioux City....Wells (Mo.), from the Appropriations Committee, reported the Deficiency bill. It appropriates $652,486.... The evening session was devoted to the consideration of the Legislative Appropriation bill.

Wednesday, April 12.—Senate.—Spencer introduced a bill to prevent panics and give elasticity to legal-tender currency without impairing its value....Hamlin's bill regulating the postage on third-class matter was passed....The bill to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents, and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof, was passed.

House.—The House passed the Deficiency bill without opposition....The Silver Coin bill came up, and the Senate amendments were concurred in without debate and without division....Hoar offered a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire what steps have been taken for properly representing the interests of the United States in the suits instituted against the Credit Mobilier and others, under the provisions of the act of the 3d of March, 1873; and, also, whether the Union Pacific Railroad Company has not forfeited its charter, and whether the same should not have been repealed because the company has resisted the recovery in its behalf of its capital stock wrongfully withdrawn by means of fictitious construction contracts or unlawful dividends. Adopted....An evening session was held for the consideration of the Legislative Appropriation bill.

Thursday, April 13.—Senate.—The proceedings in the Senate were dull and uninteresting. Bills were passed providing for the imprisonment and transfer of United States prisoners; providing for the separate entry of packages contained in one importation, and authorizing the construction of a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi river, from some point in LaCrosse county, Wis., to some point in Houston county, Minn....Adjourned till Monday, April 17.

House.—Several bills of a local and unimportant character were passed.....The Senate bill to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants, in cases where such entries have been made under regulations of the Land department, was passed....The bill to transfer the Indian bureau to the Interior department was discussed without action....Adjourned to the 17th.

According to a French statistician, taking the mean of many accounts, a man of 50 years of age has slept 6,000 days, worked 6,500 days, walked 800 days, amused himself 4,000 days, was eating 1,500, was sick 500 days, etc. He has eaten 17,000 pounds of bread, 16,000 pounds of meat, 4,600 pounds of vegetables, eggs and fish, and drank 7,000 gallons of liquor, viz., water, coffee, tea, beer, wine, etc., altogether. This would make a respectable lake of 300 square feet surface and three feet deep, on which small steamboats could navigate. And all this makes up the routine of an average man's life.

An oyster opener of Toulouse, while opening half a dozen raws for a customer, found a fine pearl, worth thousands of dollars, and pocketed it. The customer insisted that it belonged to him, asserting that the shells, oysters, juice, and everything else in the shells of the oysters he ordered were his property. The law will decide the question.

Norristown Herald: A St. Louis woman says it is no worse to encircle a lady's waist with your arm in a ball-room than to hug your friend's sister on the back stairs. No worse? Why, it is not as good!

The Impeachment—An Interesting Scene.

After some dispute in the House as to whether it was necessary for the whole House to go to the Senate or not, it was finally decided that the managers only need go, and they went. They were preceded to the door of the Senate chamber by Sergeant-at-arms Thompson, and were met at the door of the Senate by Sergeant-at-arms French, of the Senate.

The scene was quite interesting. The galleries of the Senate were crowded with spectators, and on the floor were many prominent men, among them Ben Wade, of Ohio. When the managers reached the entrance, Sergeant-at-arms French cried out: "The managers of the impeachment of William W. Belknap on the part of the House of Representatives desire admittance." The President of the Senate replied: "The managers of the impeachment of William W. Belknap on the part of the House of Representatives are admitted, and the Sergeant-at-arms will conduct them to their seats." The managers then came in, Mr. Lord, of New York, the chairman, walking ahead, with his hands full of papers, his coat buttoned up very tightly, his collar very white and stiff, and his boots newly blackened. Behind him came Proctor Knott and Lynde, of Wisconsin, both looking very solemn and clasping arms. Then came McMahon, of Ohio, and Jenks, of Pennsylvania. They were also arm in arm. Then came Judge Hoar and Lapham, of New York. Mr. Lord, who is a very fuffy man, fumbled around among his papers, then got up, and, addressing Senator Ferry, said:

"Mr. President."

Mr. Ferry—Mr. Manager.

Mr. Lord—The managers, on the part of the House of Representatives, are ready to exhibit the articles of impeachment against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The President pro tem.—The Sergeant-at-arms will make proclamation.

The Sergeant-at-arms—Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! All persons are commanded to keep silence, on pain of fine and imprisonment, while the House of Representatives is exhibiting to the Senate of the United States articles of impeachment against W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War of the United States.

The managers then rose from their seats.

Mr. Lord—The managers will now exhibit the articles of impeachment by the House of Representatives in the name of themselves and of all the people of the United States against W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, for high crimes and misdemeanors while in office.

Mr. Lord then, standing, read the articles of impeachment, the other managers remaining in their seats. The reading of the articles occupied about fifteen minutes. On the conclusion of the reading the President pro tem. said: "The chair will inform the managers that the Senate will take proper order on the subject of the impeachment of W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, of which due notice shall be given to the House of Representatives."

The Emma Mine Heiress.

The young lady after whom the famous Emma mine is named is a boarding pupil at Miss Grant's finishing school for young ladies, on North Dearborn street, an aristocratic stone mansion, with an air of exclusive gentility about it. She is a tall blonde, with a satin-smooth, ivory-tinted skin, and light, waving brown hair, which was coiled in a loose, classic knot at the back. Her dress was a simple Maria Louise blue. A long scarf of black lace was tied about her throat. She was guiltless of the smallest piece of jewelry, and her long, slender fingers were unadorned by a single ring. A soft fringe of curling hair outlined a low, wide brow. This was Emma Chisholm, sole daughter of Robert Bruce Chisholm, of Elgin, Ill., a few years ago half owner of the Emma mine, now a retired capitalist. I explained my visit to Miss Chisholm, who laughed merrily, and said:

"Well! I have always eluded an interview, and all those newspaper reports have been solicited from papa and the boys. I found the notoriety of the mine unpleasant at first, but I do not mind it now. Three years ago I visited the mine, and enjoyed the trip very much, especially the ride from Salt Lake City to Alto, the little village at the mine. I found the miners enjoying a brand of cigars called 'The Little Emma,' and they actually had my picture on the box." The young lady laughed merrily at the recollection. She further added that she was only ten years old when her brother named the mine after her as a voluntary peace offering, as she was constantly importuning him to "come home to his dear Emma." She was born in Eastern Minnesota, April 6, 1859.—Chicago Letter to Graphic.

An English Schoolmistress.

Considerable amusement was caused in the Bideford County court in England, the other day, by a case in which a schoolmistress sued one of her patrons for 15s. 4d. for the tuition of his children. On being asked by the judge for her account, the plaintiff produced three almanacs, upon which were marks signifying the attendances of the three children, and a piece of paper with some pot-hook signs showing the money paid. She told the court she could not write, and, therefore, was obliged to keep her accounts in this manner. The judge gave judgment for the amount claimed, but expressed surprise that a parent should send his children to a school the mistress of which could not write.

Animal Food in Hot Weather.

It has hitherto been the habit to recommend a temperate use of animal diet, and to replace it by a free use of vegetable food in hot climates. This has been proved by Dr. Livingstone, by careful observation and experiment upon himself during his travels in Central Africa, to be a false theory. He says that among the natives the appetite for animal food is voracious in the extreme, and is not the result of a savage nature, but a natural consequence of climate; and his conviction was that "for all climates, and under all circumstances, the most valuable of all food is beef."

The grangers of the United States have over $18,000,000 invested in their various enterprises.

PASSING EVENTS.

Prof. C. V. Reilly, the State Entomologist of Missouri, in the course of a recent lecture in St. Louis on "Insects," said that the annual loss to farmers, caused by insects, averaged $100,000,000 a year; that the chinch bug alone, during 1874, caused a loss of $30,000,000 in the Western States, of which $19,000,000 were lost in Missouri. Prof. Reilly estimated the losses by locusts (grasshoppers), during the last three years, at $50,000,000.

The Khedive of Egypt has undertaken to manage the general business of that country as well as run its political machinery. The two do not go well together. He is finding it out, too. His finances are in a bad way. A few years ago he was accounted one of the richest men in the world, and his country was prosperous. If he would conform to the modern theory of political restriction, he would find it very much better for himself and his people. The floating debt of Egypt is £14,000,000.

Elizabeth Taylor Greenfield, sometime known as the "Black Swan," died suddenly of paralysis at her home in Philadelphia a few days ago. Deceased was born a slave in Natchez, Miss., sixty-eight years ago, and was manumitted when one year of age. At an early age she became somewhat distinguished for her peculiar vocal abilites, and her subsequent success was rapid. She visited Europe, and sang before the various crowned heads, receiving everywhere lavish praise and innumerable presents.

The Little Emma scandal has seriously confused the journalists of Constantinople. They ascribe the difficulty to the jealousy of a herd of hot-headed Occidentals who are clamorous and wrangling suitors for the favor of a fair infidel named Emma Mine. The columns of a recent issue of the Stamboul contain a picturesque recital of the coy damsel's coquetry, and the eagerness of her admirers which must greatly surprise the chibouque-smoking Turks, among whom such irregular flirtations are unknown.

The politeness of the Californian was well demonstrated at the recent big race at San Francisco. A man who lacked the lucre to secure him admission at the gate perched himself on a monument on Lone Mountain cemetery and composed himself to watch the flyers, when suddenly another fellow, reaching up, touched him on the leg. "I want that seat, sir." "Oh, you be damned." "But it's my family tombstone. My grandmother lies buried here." "Oh!" said the sport, and accomodatingly climbed down.

Larkin G. Mead, the American sculptor, has vindicated his fame against the charges of the ambitious Italian stone-cutter who claimed to be the designer as well as the sculptor of Meade's most important work, the Lincoln monument. In the suit brought by the stone-cutter for compensation he was defeated, and upon appeal to the higher court he was again defeated. He is the same individual who has persistently slandered nearly all the American artists in Italy by alleging that the work claimed by them was really done by their Italian workmen.

The latest estimate of Vanderbilt's wealth places it at a hundred millions, and it is increasing every day. The old man has a large library which consists of scrap-books pasted full of government and other bonds. He could buy out half the crowned heads of Europe. Nobody, not even himself, knows the exact figures of his wealth. There is no danger of his following the road so disastrously traveled by Daniel Drew, because he is more careful about scattering his promissory notes around, and sticks rigidly to his library of government-bond scrap-books. He is the richest man on the American continent.

Still another expose of cruel neglect and brutality practiced upon the inmates of a public charitable institution by the officials in charge. This time it is the Government Insane Asylum in the District of Columbia, in which it is shown that the food was scant and unwholesome, and that the half-starved maniacs who proved "unreasonable" were beaten, handcuffed, and otherwise ill-treated in such fashion as, of course, must have aggravated their mania, while inflicting upon them tortures which the law does not suffer to be visited upon criminals. Naturally enough is coupled with it revelations of how the superintendent made money out of his position by running a job.

Representative Schleicher, Chairman of the House Committee on the Texas Border Troubles, has reported a bill for the protection of the Texas frontier on the lower Rio Grande. It authorizes and requires the President to station and keep on the Rio Grande river from its mouth to the northern boundary of the State of Tamaulipas, above Laredo, two regiments of cavalry in addition to the infantry for garrison duty, and to keep each troop to full strength of 100 privates. It also authorizes the President, in view of the inability of the Mexican Government to prevent the inroads of lawless parties from Mexico into Texas, to order troops to cross the Rio Grande, and use such means as may be found necessary to recover stolen property and to check raids, guarding, however, against unnecessary injury to the peaceful inhabitants of Mexico.

Edwin Booth.

Mr. Booth, who is now playing a four weeks' engagement at McVickers' theater, Chicago, has created a new gem in the dramatic diadem, and with as much success as he has kept all the old ones bright and clear in their luster. The press of the country award to Mr. Booth the meed of praise which is justly his due—to him we look for the elevation of the dramatic art—he is the grand exponent of the very highest of the most difficult art to acquire. Mr. Booth's last study, "King Richard II.," is now creating a great sensation in all the principal cities of the Union, with an accord which must create a feeling of pride in the great tragedian. He is the acknowledged head of the dramatic stage in American. The press of Cincinnati thus speaks of his "Richard II.": "Those who witnessed Mr. Booth's touching 'Lear' may know something of his power in 'Richard II.' His wonderful voice, with its thousand inflections and its clearness of utterance and searching power, came out more fully and with less hindrance from cold than in previous performances of the engagement. Taken altogether, the latest triumph, 'Richard II.,' was glorious and memorable in every respect. It is a very great characterization, and as worthy of study as his 'Hamlet' or 'Richelieu.'"—Chicago Journal.

Detective Bell.

A Washington correspondent furnishes a few brief scraps from the history of C. S. Bell, the detective who represents that he was hired by Babcock and Luckey to steal papers from the District-attorney's office at St. Louis:

"It seems that Bell was originally from Galesburg, Ill., and was a member of the Nineteenth Illinois infantry. He volunteered to become a spy for Gen. Hurlbut during the war, and went through considerable danger and hardship in the service. At one time he went from Gen. Hurlbut through Johnson's army to Gen. Grant at Vicksburg. He got into the confidence of Johnston and undertook to carry a lot of secession caps from him to Pemberton in Vicksburg. He came to Grant's headquarters with the caps, gave Grant his dispatches from Hurlbut, showed him Johnston's dispatches to Pemberton, and after having dampened the caps so that they were useless he went on through the lines to Pemberton in Vicksburg. He remained there some days, drew a map of the fortifications, which he concealed between the soles of his shoes, got some dispatches from Pemberton to Johnston, and started off. He delivered the Pemberton dispatches and the map he made to Gen. Grant, and both proved very useful. He was once seven months in the rebel army, and in communication with Hurlbut all the time. He rose to be a sergeant in the rebel ranks. One of his characteristics is his wonderful eyesight. It is said that he can distinguish objects at a distance that would be impossible to other eyes unaided by telescopes. He can read ordinary manuscript or newspaper print at a distance of two yards, and this wonderful faculty is very useful to him in his business as a detective. Since the war Bell has been making a livelihood by blackmailing and borrowing money, being much of the time in government service. He pretends to be editor of the Southern Journal, printed at Chicago, and exhibits a contract with that paper authorizing him to solicit subscriptions and advertising on commission."

The Increased Cotton Yield.

It is well that the people of the South should realize that the low prices of cotton during this season are not caused as much by the large size of the particular crop now being marketed as by the steady yearly increase in the yield of the South in the past and the prospect of the continuance of that increase in the future. And while the consumption has also steadily increased, to the extent of using all of the production, yet the price at which the raw staple has entered into consumption has been yearly becoming lower and lower, the result of the steadily increasing supply. The following statistics will show how regular the increase in the yield of the South has been since 1822, and from them we may form some idea of what may be expected in the future. The yields of 1875 and 1876 are of course only estimated, and the aggregate yield of each decade is given as showing more clearly the average steady increase. It will be observed that the average weight of the bales has increased from about 300 pounds each in 1822 to about 480 pounds each in 1876. The yields of the five years from 1862 to 1866 are omitted, as the south was too much disturbed to render statistics reliable:

Crops from	Bales.	Pounds.
1822 to 1831	7,851,000	2,357,138,000
1832 to 1841	14,932,000	6,233,445,000
1842 to 1851	23,226,000	9,290,479,000
1852 to 1861	36,598,000	16,103,521,000
1867 to 1876	38,115,000	18,290,000,000

It appears from the above that the yield of the ten years since the war has exceeded that of the decade immediately prior to it by about 2,186,489,000 pounds, equivalent to about 4,700,000 bales of 460 pounds each. In the statistics above given we have estimated the crop of 1875 at about 4,600,000 bales, which is quite the general estimate now, and that of 1876 we have assumed to be about 4,500,000 bales; for, of course, in a period of two years a difference of even 500,000 bales would not materially affect the results of our calculations.—Baltimore Gazette.

Fifty-nine State conventions are to be held within two months.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Old Brown House.

The trembling shadows of green leaves
Upon the old roof lay
With noiseless flutterings throughout
The long, long summer day.
The warm, glad sunshine softly crept
Down through their cooling shade,
And shining arrows, tipped with gold,
Among the shadows laid,
And gently waved the elm tree o'er,
And fanciful winds swept down
Upon the old house nestling there—
The dear old house of brown.

The woodbine clambered tenderly
Above the lowly door,
Trained by soft hands, whose gentle touch
Will guide the vines no more;
A honeysuckle, on whose bloom,
'Mid fragrance, slept the dew,
And humming birds light hovered round
Where roses thickly grew;
Beneath the low green mossy eaves
The swallow's darting wings
Went in and out, with twinklings bright,
Through many balmy springs.

Beside the narrow grassy walk
The flowers, with hearts of gold,
Were nodding, while gay peonies
Their crimson leaves unrolled;
And hollyhocks, red, pink and white,
Along the borders grew,
While violets 'mid bright green grass
Upturned their eyes of blue;
But still the graceful elm tree was
The glory and the crown
Of the old house beneath the shade—
That dear old house of brown.

Around the Farm.

Onions given as food to horses in the first stages of the epizootic are said to be very beneficial. They cause the animal to cough and sneeze and discharge freely from the mouth. Try them.

A correspondent of the New England Farmer says that he has seen the application of a liberal dressing of muck give that part of the field to which it is applied a decided appearance of fertility over the rest of it, thirty years after the application was made.

One feature of fruit growing by the farmers, who are mainly the fruit growers, is the neglect to thin out the crop when the fruit is about half grown. The refuse taken from the tree at that time, being one or two of the smallest from a cluster, and all the small and knotty ones on the weak twigs, etc., are profitable food for all classes of stock.

To prevent an ox or steer from going ahead of his yoke-mate when attached to a sled or cart, put a chain around his end of the yoke and fasten it to the pole or tongue of the sled or cart, just back of his fore leg, allowing him to come up even with his mate. He will soon give up the habit as a bad job.—R. W. F., in Main Farmer.

Hungarian Grass.—The Lancaster (Pa.) farmers lately discussed the merits and demerits of this grass. The majority of the speakers believed it an exhaustive crop. Several had found that wheat did not do well on land sown to Hungarian the previous year. It was recommended to cut it before the seed had ripened, and even then to feed it sparingly to horses.

A highly respectable and wealthy farmer in Connecticut gives the following as his experience: When I first came here to settle, about forty years ago, I told my wife I wanted to be rich. She said she didn't want to be rich—all she wanted was enough to make her comfortable. I went to work and cleared up my land, I've worked hard ever since and got rich—as I wanted to be. Most of my children have settled about me, and they have all got farms, but my wife ain't comfortable yet.

A correspondent of the Rural Home recommends the following mode of protecting fruit trees from mice: Take common roofing tin 14x20 inches, have the tinner cut it into two equal parts, leaving 10x14 inches, and rolling it lengthwise, which leaves it ten inches high. If made smaller they will not be large enough to protect the trees until the latter are out of danger. It is not essential to have them close to the trees, but they should be close to the ground, so that the mice cannot get under them.

A correspondent of the London Agricultural Gazette traced the change of opinion with regard to hay in his own neighborhood. "Years ago the practice here was almost invariably to feed the milking cow on hay alone; then some few dairymen began to give those cows that had lately calved two or three pounds of linseed cake per day; then some of the poor grass land on the dairy farms would be broken up, and some mangels were grown. Now the rule is often to cut up partly straw and partly hay, and mix with pulped mangels, and give each cow four or five pounds of cake or meal, or both."

An Iowa correspondent says: Tell your friends who plant broom-corn that no one ever had prime brush by keeping it down before cutting, as I have twice seen recommended lately, as the louse that infests this plant turns red, when it dies, and colors the brush. If it hangs down, there is no sprangling or sprawling brush; and if it is cleaned of seed when it should be, just after blossoming, the value of the seed will not equal the difference in the value of the brush if allowed to ripen before cutting. The best broom-corn is secured by curing partly or wholly in the shade. Great care should be used to avoid heating, to which broom-corn is very liable. It is folly to break down broom-corn to make its crooked ways straight, as any fool knows that if he breaks it down it dies all above the break, and for one crooked head he will get a dozen little sprawling, worthless ones coming out of the stalk just above each leg.

About the House.

Wax flowers, if left out in the drizzling rain, will be thoroughly cleaned in a short time.

A simple remedy for biting the nails is quassia. Wet the fingers and allow them to dry; if tasted it will be a bitter reminder. I gave it a trial and it was effectual.

Indian Rusk.—Two light cups of Indian meal, one cup of flour, one teaspoonful of saleratus, enough sour buttermilk to dissolve, one cup of sweet milk; stir in three-fourths of a cup of molasses.

If the inside of your tea-pot is black from long use, fill it with water, throw in a small piece of hard soap, set on the stove and let it boil from half an hour to an hour. It will clean as bright as a new dollar, and costs no work.

Bread Balls.—Break the bread in small pieces, and moisten with milk, or a little warm water, season with salt, pepper and nutmeg, adding a little fine sage or parsley and a small piece of butter, mix and form into small cakes or balls; roast with beef or chicken, or fry after meat in a skillet.

Pumpkin Brown Cake.—One cup of stewed and strained pumpkin or squash, one cup "C" oatmeal porridge, and one cup water. Beat these up together, and then add three cups fine Graham flour. Mix thoroughly, spread half an inch thick on a baking tin, and bake half an hour in a good oven. Cover for ten minutes, and serve warm or cold.

Hot Slaw.—Butter the size of an egg, half a cup of milk, yellow of two eggs, teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of pepper, small level teaspoonful of dry mustard and three tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Put the butter into the skillet with the fine cut cabbage and the other ingredients, and stir all the time until the cabbage heats well through.

To Mend Chinaware.—Take a very thick solution of gum arabic and stir into it plaster of Paris until the mixture is of proper consistency. Apply it with a brush to the fractured edges of the chinaware and stick them together. In a few days it will be impossible to break the article in the same place. The whiteness of the cement renders it doubly valuable.

Breakfast Muffins.—This recipe will be valued by housekeepers as a dainty substitute for bread at breakfast or tea: Two eggs well beaten with a cupful of sugar and a lump of butter the size of an egg; to this add one pint of milk with a teaspoonful of soda, one quart of flour, and two tablespoonfuls of cream tartar; bake in muffin-rings on top of the range, or in gem-pans in a quick oven.

Mark Twain's Report of an Accident.

Mark Twain recently tried his hand writing up a distressing accident for a Boston local paper, and this is how he did it: Last evening about 6 o'clock, as Mr. William Schuyler, an old and respected citizen of South Park, was leaving his residence to go down town, as has been his usual custom for many years, with the exception of only a short interval in the spring of 1850, during which he was confined to his bed by injuries received in attempting to stop a runaway horse by thoughtlessly throwing up his hands and shouting, which, if he had done so even a single moment sooner, must inevitably have frightened the animal still more instead of checking its speed, although disastrous enough to himself as it was and was rendered more melancholy and distressing by reason of the presence of his wife's mother, who was there and saw the occurrence, notwithstanding it is at least likely, though not necessarily so, that she should be reconnoitering in another direction when incidents occur, not being vivacious and on the lookout, as a general thing, but even in the reverse, as her mother is said to have stated, who is no more, but died in the full hope of a blessed resurrection upward of three years ago, aged eighty-six, being a Christian woman without guile, as it were, in property, in consequence of the fire of 1849, which had destroyed every solitary thing she had in the world. But such is life. Let us all take warning by this solemn occurrence, and let us endeavor so to conduct ourselves that when we come to die we can do it. Let us place our hands upon our hearts, and say with earnestness and sincerity that from this day forth we will beware of the intoxicating bowl.

Maxims.

Delusion is the devil.

The most incorrigible delusion is conceit.

A pill in the mouth makes the whole world bitter.

Easy roads lead to hard places.

Habit is a dead tyrant's old law.

To be poor is to begin to be perfect.

God's gifts are not in man's currency.

A blow argues a rough and wretched soul.

Genuine modesty is the sense of imperfection common to the wise and good, impossible to the fool and villain.

Our pride is of service to all but ourselves.

Virtues and vices go in troops from fear of the enemy.

Mingled virtue and vice make a very uncertain twilight in the human soul.

Kindness is not relished plain; it needs the sweet sauce of flattery.

The door-sill of home is the threshold of heaven.

The delicacy of ordinary friendship is such it cannot endure a naked or ragged associate.

A Non-Explosive Lamp.

In Paris, the watchmen in all magazines where inflammable or explosive materials are used or stored employ for the purposes of illumination a light provided according to the following simple and ingenious method: An oblong vial of the clearest glass is taken, and into it is put a piece of phosphorus about the size of a pea, upon which is pored some olive oil heated to a boiling point, the vial being about one-third full, when it is closed securely with a tight cork. To use it, the cork is removed, the air allowed to enter the vial, and it is then recorked. The whole empty space in the bottom by this means becomes luminous and the light obtained is equal to that of a lamp. As soon as the light grows weak, its power can be increased by opening the vial and allowing a fresh supply of air to enter. In winter it is sometimes necessary to heat the vial between the hand for a while, in order to increase the fluidity of the oil. Thus prepared the vial may, it is stated, be used for a period of six months.

Jerry Black chews up a paper of tobacco every six hours, and expectorates copiously. A Harrisburg lawyer once said to him: "Take my advice, Judge, and keep away from Africa. If Stanley ever met you there in the dark he might take you for one of the sources of the Nile."

INDIANA ITEMS.

The Indianapolis Sentinel has a $50,000 libel suit.

John Ham, of Mishawaka, hung himself up the other day.

Col. Thomas Wright, once the editor of an Indiana paper, has turned preacher.

The young folks of Canton behave so badly in church that it has been found necessary to arrest several of them.

Judge James A. Fay, one of the leading lawyers of Northern Indiana, died at Fort Wayne last Monday, aged 61 years.

Louis Kaddenberg, of Evansville, wholesale confectioner, an old-established house, has filed a petition as a voluntary bankrupt. The liabilities are very large, with little or no assets.

Joseph Blair, a Methodist minister, dropped dead at Quail Tower, Jennings county, on Sunday of last week, of heart disease, at the close of a funeral sermon, as he turned to sit down.

The grand State Convention of the Independent Champions of the Red Cross, of Indiana, will meet at Lafayette, on the 12th of May. Delegates from all parts of the State will be present.

Mr. Willard G. Nash, a journalist of Logansport, has written a novel to be called "A Century of Gossip." It is a story of New England life, and will be published by W. B. Keen, Cook & Co., of Chicago.

Palmer, the convict, who shot Editor Murray, when he started from South Bend to the penitentiary, could be distinguished from the sheriff in charge by the elegant bouquet that he carried in his gloved hand.

Near Fort Wayne, a few days ago, Officer Chase, while attempting to arrest a notorious character named Stephen Tracy, was bitterly resisted, whereupon he shot Tracy in the head, inflicting a wound which will probably prove fatal.

James M. Lambert, the proprietor of the Ray House, at Indianapolis, a prominent citizen, committed suicide a few mornings since by hanging. Small-pox caused the death of his son and scattered his patrons, depressing his spirits and driving him to the deed.

The trial of Garr, who was indicted with J. D. Pratt for killing Jacob Warwick, at Tampico, last October, was concluded at Kokomo on Saturday of last week. Great interest has been manifested throughout the trial on account of Garr's prominence. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty. Great surprise is expressed at the verdict.

A girl in Logansport, named Crager, died the other day and was laid out, and the arrangements for the funeral were made. The following day she threw back the sheet, raised up, and asked for tea, and is yet living. They called in Dr. Brenton, and he called in five others and they all said they had never witnessed such a scene, but had often heard of it.

Vevay bases her hopes for distinction at the Centennial upon a basket which was made by the Indians in Wilkesbarre, Pa., prior to the year 1755. It is neatly made of hickory, and well proportioned and well preserved. It now belongs to Mrs. Catherine Stow, and was a present from the great-great-grandmother of Mrs. Stow to her grandmother, who gave it to the mother of Mrs. S., who retained it in her possession sixty-seven years.

The watchman at the New Albany glass works heard a loud noise one night, recently, and upon going into the store-room found about $2,500 worth of glass broken. It happened in this way: In the room were stored about a thousand boxes of glass from 30x70 to 40x60, double thickness. The boxes containing the glass were standing on their ends, about six inches apart, and by some means they started falling like a row of bricks, increasing with force as each box fell, and going as fast as a railroad train, until the end box was reached.

At Fort Wayne, on Saturday evening, an indignation meeting was held at the Opera-house, composed of laboring men from the shops and manufactories of the city, to protest against the recent action of the Council in appropriating $400,000 to build water-works, and condemning their trip to Cincinnati to decide upon a system after they had employed an eminent hydraulic engineer for that purpose. This was commented upon, besides other items of extravagance. The meeting adjourned after resolving itself into a permanent organization until the wrongs are righted and retrenchment commences.

One day last week, two miles east of New Haven, the dead body of an unknown man, about forty years old, was dug out of a brush heap. He was of medium height, comfortably dressed, and had his throat cut from ear to ear, the skull crushed above the eye, the jaw bone broken, and one shoulder dislocated. Evidence taken before the Coroner's jury shows that deceased left New Haven three weeks since to go East on the banks of the canal in company with a well-known desperado. The latter carried an ax, and probably murdered the unfortunate man for the purpose of robbing him, and then concealed the body. The crime seems to be cold-blooded and brutal, and has caused great excitement.

The fifth annual meeting of the Women's Presbyterian Board of Missions convened at Indianapolis last week, fully 300 delegates being present, representing the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, and Minnesota. The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. A. H. Hoge, of Chicago, who replied to brief and appropriate welcome addresses by Miss Catherine Merrill on behalf of the city, and Mrs. J. P. Ekumler, of Cincinnati, late of Indianapolis, on behalf of the State. All the exercises were exceedingly impressive, and business was conducted in a most orderly, rapid manner. At a crowded meeting at one of the evening sessions addresses were made by President Hoge and Mrs. Ray, a Persian missionary. On invitation of Mrs. Mitchell, the next session will be held in the First Presbyterian church, Chicago.

In view of the fact that rat pies are a favorite diet with Chinese sailors, is it in any way remarkable that the adjacent waters swarm with pie-rat-ical craft?

Relics of a Dead Race.

Mr. A. J. Conant, the artist, returned recently from the Ozark mountains, where he passed a week in exploring some remarkable caves on the Gasconade and tributary streams, lying principally in Phelps and Pulaski counties. Mr. Conant about two years ago made some interesting discoveries in the region mentioned of human skulls and skeletons, supposed to belong to a people who existed before the historic period, and as it is understood that he has been engaged since 1862 in collecting the materials of a work on archæology, it may well be supposed that he is enthusiastic in following up his discoveries.

He and his party first visited Bruce's cave, so named after one of the early settlers, who made saltpeter from the cave deposits. The cavern is in the limestone formation, with an entrance about 130 feet in the bluffs above the Gasconade river. They first entered a spacious chamber, but as the passage narrowed, the party were forced to get down on their knees and crawl some distance. They next made a nearly perpendicular ascent of fifty feet, when they entered a large chamber sparkling with stalactites of a snowy whiteness like alabaster, with hundreds of bats hanging in festoons from the roof. Having explored the caverns, the work of excavating began at the mouth of the cave, where bones and implements were found. They made a vertical section of six feet, and studied the stratification of the soft deposits. The layers changed from a black, rich soil to ashes, alternating with strata composed of soil and ashes intermixed. It was in these strata that human bones and fragments were found. The skulls exhibit a low facial angle, and the teeth, some of which dropped out, are as well preserved as if drawn by a dentist yesterday. There is the skull of an old man, known from the knitting together of the sutures, and also one of an infant, of almost wafer-like thinness, and the several parts separated at the sutures. Beside the skulls there were found arrow and spear heads, flint implements, knives, and awls for sewing skins, made of bone, very hard and polished; also, the bones of the turtle, deer, and wild turkey, intermingled with various fragments of carnivorous and browsing animals not yet identified. Great care was required in exhuming these remains, as the skulls were liable to be broken by the pick.

The second cave explored was about a mile distant from the former, and is locally known as Ash cave, from the fact that there is a deposit of ashes from the saltpeter manufactured there about thirty years ago. These saltpeter operations have so far disturbed the original deposits that nothing satisfactory could be obtained, except one corpse, which was found in a sitting posture, with the knees drawn up to the face. With this corpse was also found the nearly entire skeleton, very much decayed, of an elk or large-sized deer.—Missouri Republican.

Silver Change.

The passage of the Silver Resumption act through the House by so large a majority has surprised those who have not watched the change of public opinion on the silver question. The discussions of the last thirty days have developed facts, and statistics which have an important bearing on the whole question, and set it in an altered light, and one far more favorable to silver resumption. The facts in regard to fractionals leave nothing to be said by those who are opposed to replacing them with silver coins. The fractionals last only about a year. It costs about $1,250,000 a year to replace them with new bills. Some $9,000,000 have been lost or worn up by the people without redemption, which is a tax on them to that amount. Silver coins last fifty years, are seldom lost, and never burned up; and, though they cost more in the outset, are immensely cheaper in the end. The Government has $12,000,000 of these coins lying idle in the treasury, and $4,000,000 of silver bullion waiting for coinage. Silver is two per cent. less than greenbacks, owing to the demonetization of silver by Germany and the consequent throwing of a great quantity of it on the London market. A question in addition is not simpler than that presented to the consideration of Congress, so far as the replacing of fractional with silver coin is concerned. But the House bill goes beyond this, and makes silver a legal tender for any amount not exceeding $50. It practically resumes in silver. And it is thought the Senate will pass the bill with some important modifications, thus opening an unexpected way out of our financial embarrassments.—New York Graphic.

An Expressive Appendage.

Pussy's temper may be known by the demeanor of its tail. When the tail is erect it is pleased; when angry, it lashes it; and when excited and about to spring, the tail quivers. The tail changes its expression as its owner outgrows its early innocence and commences to develop its treacherous and catlike nature. The tail of a catling, before the blood of mice has reddened its incipient whiskers, has no deceit or malice in it; it is carried about honestly, bolt upright, rigid or oscillating in a paroxysm of fun. It lengthens or limbers until, as the mature puss sneaks round the chicken coop or prowls in the larder, its air and motion betray all its changeful nature. The tail of the veteran mouser varies as content or passion sways its owner. Purring in your lap, puss waves it coquettishly, or droops it in drowsy satisfaction. But the same tail, when its proprietor is angered, becomes a veritable bottlebrush, in which each particular hair stands on end as if electrified.

The Rejection of Richard H. Dana, Jr.

[Washington Cor. Chicago Times.]

There was a long discussion in the executive session of the Senate upon the disposal of Dana. Morton made the opening speech against Dana's confirmation. He regaled his associates in relation to Dana's literary piracy. A general firing off followed. Senator Edmunds replied to Morton in a speech of upward of an hour and a half in length. He made the strongest possible plea for Dana. He was very earnest and gesticulated more than usual for a man of his frigid temperament. He said that this literary piracy charged upon Dana was no piracy whatever. He said that all English precedents and American decisions were upon the side of considering mere notes and citations as common property. Such citations as had been taken by Dana were open for any one. Mr. Morton in reply to Mr. Edmunds said that granting this, there was the undeniable fact that Mr. Dana had sworn that he had not taken them. Mr. Boutwell spoke a few words in favor of Dana. It came out in the discussion that, contrary to the general outside belief, the President had long been in favor of withdrawing Dana, but had deferred to Dana's wishes in allowing his name to remain before the Senate. There was no excitement in the session. There were some 60 Senators present, 13 of whom did not vote at all. Of the 13 who did not vote all were Democrats except Oglesby, of Illinois. At the close of the session a vote was taken with the following result: 30 nays to 17 yeas. The following are the yeas: Morrill and Hamlin, of Maine; Wadleigh and Cragin, of New Hampshire; Morrill and Edmunds, of Vermont; Boutwell and Dawes, of Massachusetts; Anthony, of Rhode Island; Conkling, of New York; Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Ferry, of Michigan; Sherman, of Ohio; Windom, of North Carolina; McMillan, of Minnesota; Booth, of California; Hamilton, of Texas. Of the Republican Senators who voted against him were Cameron, of Pennsylvania; Morton, of Indiana; Cameron, of Wisconsin; Mitchell, of Oregon; Logan, of Illinois; Sargent, of California; Sharon and Jones, of Nevada; Paddock and Hitchcock, of Nebraska. Senators Howe, of Wisconsin, and Christiancy, of Michigan, were absent. If they had been present they would have voted for him.

The Noble Briton's Financial Forethought.

The Pall Mall Gazette of a late date says: An inquest was held on Saturday by Dr. Hardwicke on the body of a man who died from the bursting of an aneurism of the aorta. The deceased, it appeared by the evidence, was taken suddenly ill in a shop which he had entered to make a purchase. He staggered into the street, and a doctor who was on the spot, seeing that he was covered with blood, asked the passers-by to assist in taking charge of him. With the exception of a policeman they one and all refused, asking "who was to pay them for their trouble." At last a cab was procured and the dying man was removed to the workhouse, but was dead on his arrival. Another incident of the same nature is recorded by a correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, writing from Portsmouth. During the severe gale on Sunday last, assistance was required by a boat off Ryde. The lifeboat was on the beach ready to be launched, but the men refused to put off until £5 was forthcoming. There was a crowd of between 400 and 500 people looking on. A subscription of a few pence all round would have produced the sum required to meet the chivalrous demand, yet the money was not raised, nor did any volunteers come forward to man the boat without a thought of recompense. A man, supposed to be a local tradesman, chanced, however, to pass that way, and with wonderful prodigality produced a £5 note. The effect was electrical. The lifeboat was manned and a rescue effected.

A Detective's Ruse.

For the past three weeks a man has been in Oconto, Wis., whose actions have been somewhat remarkable. Dressed as a beggar, and begging from door to door, he obtained access to a number of houses, and being quiet and inoffensive, no shadow of suspicion was raised that he was anything more than he represented himself. He would sleep in barns and take what shelter he could from the weather during nights, and many times during the day he was a target for the youngsters to snow-ball. Last week he found the man for whom he was looking and disclosed himself. He was a detective from Nevada, who had followed a murderer, for whose apprehension a heavy reward had been offered, for three years, capturing him at last.

Extraordinary Coincidences.

The San Francisco Chronicle relates the following series of strange coincidences: "A few years ago there resided at the Mission San Jose, in Alameda county, two young ladies, between whom, although not of kin, a strong friendship existed. They were married at the same time and by the same service. They then took up their residences, one at Haywards and the other at Alvarado. In the course of time they gave birth to children on the same day, the birth of one child preceding that of the other by two hours. Three weeks later both children died on the same day, the eldest dying just two hours before the other. Three weeks after the death of the children both mothers died on the same day."

A Soda Bonanza.

Mr. Pontey, geologist of the Union Pacific railroad, describes two soda lakes in Wyoming Territory, the larger one of which covers about 200 acres. The other covers about three and a half acres, and during the greater part of the year it is a concrete mass of soda crystals. The soda is nearly all carbonate, and in quality is said to be fully equal to the imported article. It is estimated that the larger lake would yield, on evaporation, over four and a half million dollars' worth of soda, and the smaller lake, already crystallized, is supposed to contain another million dollars' worth of soda.

Mr. Oliver Perkins, of Illinois, is a man of sound sense, if his education has been neglected. He lately sent his boy to the schoolmarm with the following note: "Miss Haze—Pleas lik the barer for running away. Lik him Well. No mor at preasant. Yours respective, Mr. Oliver Perkins."

The jury to assess the damages for straightening the Pennsylvania railroad between Cain station and Coatesville, a distance of about one mile and a quarter, has found the sum of $25,226.60, which is thought to be enormous. The railroad company have no appeal, they having agreed to abide by the decision of the jury.

The committee appointed to investigate the subject of ladies' luncheons when traveling, report that they invariably consist of a very small sandwich, large quantities of white and yellow cake, and an immense pickle; if the latter is absent, the affair is considered a failure. These data are trustworthy, and shed light upon a subject to which little attention has been paid hitherto.

Lazardo, who performs the gun trick, catching (as is supposed) the bullet in his teeth, came very near losing his life in Mississippi recently. He had just finished one of his performances when an excited and partially intoxicated Mississippian in the audience drew a revolver and shouted, "Dern you, see if you can catch this." He didn't quite "catch it," but he came pretty near it.

THE ROSES IN PARADISE.

She showed me roses in my morning dream,
So fragrant, fresh, and exquisite of hue,
In no cold earthly pasture could I deem
Things of such grace and beauty ever grew.
The hand that held them owned no mortal mold;
She had been dead for years; and on her face
Glancing, I instant felt the wish too bold
To track the secret of her dwelling-place.
Turning the flowers about, her eye met mine,
"Oh give one rose to me!" "Not yet," she said,
Then melted like a cloud at day's decline,
Pointing the blossoms upward as she fled!

Devices for cheating in games of chance are extensively advertised in sporting publications by dealers in New York. The circulars sent out by them describe the goods. Marked cards are made in great variety, the backs showing to the initiated what is on the faces; also cards cut in slightly varying lengths, so that advantage may be taken in cutting. Faro boxes for unfair dealing, loaded dice, and appliances for holding extra cards, are offered.

A Washington correspondent writes: "Thurman sports a bandanna handkerchief, and blows the loudest nose in America. It is said that on one occasion Senator Jones, of Nevada, who early in life had been a brakeman on a railroad, dropped to sleep at his desk. Senator Thurman solemnly waived his red bandanna and gave his nose a terrific snort. The sleeping Senator sprang to his feet and, seizing his desk, commenced twisting it with all his might. He afterward explained that he thought Thurman's blow was an engine whistling down brakes and the red handkerchief a signal of distress, hence his wrenching at the desk."

Vegetable Hair Dyes.

"But I may continue to use my hair dye? my 'vegetable hair dye?'" Yes, when you have found a hair dye which is certainly not made of acetate of lead with sulphur, or of some other poisonous compound. Suppose you believe that it is purely vegetable, what warrant have you that it is innocent? You know something of our native poison ivy and of the poison sumac, popularly misnamed dogwood, which injure the blood of hundreds every year? You have read of the violent drugs, fox-glove, "Indian poke" (veratrum), ipecacuanha, opium, belladonna, and of the deadly poisons, prussic acid and strychnine? These are all vegetables, all plants and products of plants. Hair dyes, like candies, are shoddy, are made for the benefit of the seller, not the user. Gray hairs, sound teeth, healthy skins and stomachs are very kindly evils. You buy two sorrows in everything that damages these.

Like one raised from the dead is Mrs. Jane Reynolds' husband to her, and this is the how of it: In December last, two bodies were found near Waverly, N. J., under circumstances that indicated that they were those of suicides. They were taken to Newark and buried, and on the 24th of January one of them was exhumed and identified by Mrs. Jane Reynolds, of Brooklyn, as the corpse of her husband. She took the body to New Haven, Ct., and it was buried there. Yesterday, to the astonishment of Mrs. Reynolds, her husband appeared to her, hale and hearty. He explained that he had taken a trip to northern New York.

General improvements are going on all over our city, in the way of cleaning door-yards, streets, &c.

The mayor of Chicago will sing that touching hymn, "Lord, to thee I now resign"—by particular request.

The mercantile house of A. T. Stewart & Co., will continue in business. Whether it will be conducted with as much success in the future, without its master-mind at its head as it has been in the past remains to be seen.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 17.—The Centennial grounds were closed to visitors until the formal opening on May 10. This is in order that the final work may be done without the interference of the visiting crowd.

And now it is Blaine that is under a cloud. It is positively asserted that $64,000 of monies belonging to the Union Pacific Railroad Company stuck to his fingers in 1871. If this thing keeps on the Republican party will have some difficulty in finding a candidate for President.

The ceremonies connected with the unveiling of the statue of Lincoln, the tribute of the colored people to their emancipator, which took place at Washington last Sunday, are said to have been very impressive. It is said that the interesting occasion was witnessed by over 20,000 people.

A few weeks since Orth was "hotter'n a lime kiln," and could hardly wait to return home. Now we are apprised that he lingers in Italy, and will not sail for America until May. Orth is waiting to see what the Democratic Convention will do. If Holman is nominated, Mr. Orth will conclude to remain abroad for the benefit of his health. Meanwhile he has not resigned the Austrian mission. —Fort Wayne Sentinel.

It will be noted that when a party has a chance for success there is no contest or controversy over the offices to be filled hence the Republican convention without trouble registered the edict from Washington. But when the Democracy met, and had the duty to perform of really selecting a governor and other state officers, then there was a sharp contest.

Allen county seems to be prolific in murders, but not very prolific in capital punishment. It is very strange, but very true that on this hypothesis we may logically reason not only from cause to effect but from effect to cause! Thus will it ever be as long as the divine command is violated in the punishment the state meets out to murderes.

Before coming on the witness stand C. S. Bell, the detective, was a government officer of the Grant-Belknap kind, unimpeached. He gave damaging evidence against Babcock and turns out to be a most unconscionable scoundrel. It is so easy for a man to be undone in an hour, if he only knows anything wrong about the administration.

There is something quite sensible and practical in the Brazilian character which harmonizes well with our American ideas, and Don Pedro is likely to meet a warm welcome in his swing around the circle of the states. Scarcely one of our leading Eastern eductional institutions but has ten or twenty young Brazilian nobles as students and they are close students too, both of books and customs. They learn the language readily, and are extremely sociable and intelligent. Who shall say that we are not to convert the world?

"Pull Down Your Vest."

(From the Fulton Times.)

"You keep vests, mine frient?" said a Dutchman, entering a Fulton clothing store the other day. The clerk promptly averred that the store was crammed with them.

"I vant," said the Teuton, "vat don't rise up on its hint legs mit the neck. I bought one in Syracuse not long ago mit a dwo dollar pill, and by shimminy I don't notice dot myself, but everywhere I go the boys gry out mit der street, 'Yacub, vy in der name of der board of drustees don't you pull down your vest down?' and py dam it, I have pulled dot vest more'n dree dousand dimes, till I wore all the pindings off mit der puttons!"

The clerk explained the joke and sold him a vest, and the old man went out with the exclamation: "Pyshimminy, I don't hear somedings about dot in Shermany pefore.

Sensible Advice.

You are asked every day through the columns of newspapers and by your Druggist to use something for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint that you know nothing about, you get discouraged spending money with but little success. Now to give you satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will cure you of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint with all effects, such as Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, Heart-burn, Water-brash, coming up of food after eating, low spirits &c., we ask you to go to your Druggist and get a Sample bottle of Green's August Flower for 10 cents and try it, or a Regular Size for 75 cents two doses will relieve you.

The eleventh anniversary of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln was observed in a peculiarly appropriate manner at Washington on the 14th inst. It consisted of the unveiling, by the president of the statue of the martyred chief magistrate, which was erected by the contributions of the colored people of this country alone, who revere the memory of the great "emancipator." The unveiling was witnessed by an immense multitude of people, consisting of cabinet ministers, justices of the supreme court, senators, representatives, &c. Frederick Douglass was the orator of the occasion

It now appears that Belknap fortified himself from exposure by issuing an order that all military officers visiting Washington should register at the war office and state business. The same order forbade any officer speaking to members of congress on military affairs, or writing letters to them, or suggesting any changes or directing the attention of congressmen to the conduct of the war department. The language of this extraordinary order is as follows:

That no officer either active or retired shall directly or indirectly, without being called upon by the proper authority solicit, suggest or recommend action by members of congress for or against military affairs. All petitions to congress by officers relative to subjects of a military character will be forwarded through the general of the army and secretary of war for their action and transmissal. An officer visiting the seat of government during a congressional session will upon his arrival register his name at the adjutant general's office, as now required, and in addition address a letter to the adjutant general of the army reciting the purpose and the time that will be embraced by his visit, and the authority under which he is absent from his command or station. The purpose or object so recited will be the strict guide of the officer during his stay."

The fact was brought out by the testimony of General Custar, and references to the files of the war office. This order was issued immediately after the Hazen report. Under it even General Sherman could not converse with a member of the military committee without being liable to courtmartial.

New Banking Bill.

It may be well regarded as a compliment to Hon. Wm. H. English, that he should have been selected by the convention of bankers at Washington to address the committee on banking, representing the conclusions in convention in favor of a revision of the banking law, and the futher compliment is noticed in the determination of the committee to report a bill embracing the views set forth by Mr. English. The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer thus speaks the matter:

The banking and currency committee will report a bill embodying the points suggested by Mr. English, of Indianapolis, in the recent conference of bankers with the committee. The bill will provide for an amendment to the banking law so as to enable banks to receive from the government an amount of national bank notes equal to the par value of their gold bonds deposited in the United States treasury to secure the bank circulation, instead of 90 per cent as now provided by law. The effect will be to add to the circulation of national bank notes $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 without an additional deposit of bonds as security for increased circulation. This can be done with perfect safety, as gold bonds are held at 18 to 25 cents above par, and the bonds on deposit will still be worth more than increased circulation. This will prevent further contraction of currency by the withdrawal of bond circulation. Under the existing law banks are compelled to keep 30 and 40 cents on the dollar in gold bonds lying idle. By placing them in vaults of the treasury, and by withdrawing their circulation, they procure the benefit of the difference of 90 cents on the dollar of bonds and their market value. This bill will give the banks an additional benefit of 10 cents on the dollar of bonds on deposit. Under the resumption act the Western banks have made more money out of their bonds then their circulation, hence the closing up of business by many banks in the West.

A Mob of negroes and dirty carpetbaggers assembled in Columbia, S. C. and endorsed Morton, thanked Grant, and dispersed under the impression they were a republican convention.

[The following is pronounced by the Westminster Review to be unquestionably the finest American poem ever written:]

Within the sober realm of leafless trees,
  The russet year inhaled the dreamy air;
Like some tanned reaper, in his hour of ease,
  When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray barns looking from their hazy hills,
  O'er the dun waters widening in the vales,
Sent down the air a greeting to the mills,
  On the dull thunder of alternate flails.

All sights were mellowed and all sounds subdued
  The hills seemed farther and streams sang low,
As in dream the distant woodman hewed
  His winter log with many a muffled blow.

The embattled forests, erewhile armed with gold,
  The banner bright with every martial hue,
Now stood like some sad, beaten host of old,
  Withdrawn afar in time's remotest blue.

On somber wings the vulture tried his flight;
  The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint;
And like a star slow drowning in the light,
  The village church vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel cock up in the hillside crew—
  Crew thrice—and all was stiller than before;
Silent, till some replying warden blew
  His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the jay, within the elm's tall crest,
  Made garrulous trouble round her unfledged young,
And when the oriole swung her swaying nest,
  By every light wind like censer swung.

Where sang the noisy martins of the eaves,
  The busy swallows circling ever near—
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
  An early harvest and a plenteous year.

Where every bird that waked the vernal feast
  Shook the sweet slumber from its wings at morn,
To warn the reaper of the rosy east—
  And now was sunless, empty and forlorn.

Alone, from out the stubble, piped the quail,
  And croaked the crow through all the dreary gloom;
Alone the pheasant, drumming in the vale,
  Made echo in the distance to the cottage loom.

There was no bud, no bloom upon the bowers,
  No spiders moved their thin shrouds night by night,
The thistle down, the only ghost of flowers,
  Sailed slowly by—passed noiselessly out of sight.

Amid all this, in this most dreary air,
  And where the woodbine sheds upon the porch
Its crimson leaves, as if the year stood there,
  Firing the moor with its inverted torch.

Amid all this, the center of the scene,
  The white-haired matron with monotonous tread,
Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyous mien
  Sat like fate, and watched the flying thread.

She had known sorrow. He had walked with her,
  Oft supped and broke with her the ashen crust,
And in the dead leaves still heard the stir
  Of his thick mantle trailing in the dust.

While yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom
  Her country summoned, and she gave all;
And twice was bowed to her his sable plume—
  Regave the sword to rust upon the wall.

Regave the sword, but not the hand that drew
  And struck for liberty the dying blow,
Nor him who, to his sire the country true,
  Fell 'mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the droning wheel went on,
  Like the low murmur of a hive at noon;
Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone
  Breathed through her lips a sad and tremulous tone.

At last the thread was snapped, her head was bowed;
  Life dropped the distaff through her hands serene;
And loving neighbors smooth her careful shroud,
  While death and winter closed the autumn scene.

BUCK FANSHAW'S FUNERAL.

BY MARK TWAIN.

There was a grand time over Buck Fanshaw when he died. He was a representative citizen of Virginia City, Nevada. He had "killed his man"—not in his own quarrel, it is true, but in defense of a stranger unfairly beset by numbers. He had kept a sumptuous saloon. He had been the proprietor of a dashing helpmeet whom he could have discarded without the formality of a divorce. He had held a high position in the fire department and been a very Warwick in politics. When he died there were great lamentations throughout the town, but especially in the vast bottom stratum of society.

After Buck Fanshaw's inquest, a meeting of the short-haired brotherhood was held, for nothing can be done on the Pacific coast without a public meeting and an expression of sentiment. Regretful resolutions were passed, and various committees appointed; among others, a committee of one was deputed to call on the minister, a fragile, genteel, spiritual new fledgeling from an Eastern theological seminary, and as yet unacquainted with the way of the mines. The committeeman, "Scotty" Briggs, made his visit; and in after days it was worth something to hear the minister tell about it. Scotty was a stalwart rough, whose customary suit, when on weighty official business, like committee work, was a fire helmet, flaming red flannel shirt, patent leather belt with spanner and revolver attached, coat hung over arm, and pants stuffed into boot tops. He formed something of a contrast to the pale theological student. It is fair to say of Scotty, however, in passing, that he had a warm heart, and a strong love for his friends, and never entered into a quarrel when he could reasonably get out of it. Indeed, it was commonly said that when one of Scotty's fights was investigated, it always turned out that it had originally been no affair of his, but that out of native goodheartedness he had dropped in of his own accord to help the man who was getting the worst of it. He and Buck Fanshaw were bosom friends for years, and had often taken adventurous "pot-luck" together. On one occasion they had thrown off their coats and taken the weaker side in a fight among strangers, and after gaining a hard-earned victory, turned and found that the men they were helping had deserted early, and not only that, but had stolen their coats and made off with them! But to return to Scotty's visit to the minister. He was on a sorrowful mission now, and his face was the picture of woe. Being admitted to the presence he sat down before the clergyman, placed his fire-hat on an unfinished manuscript sermon under the minister's nose, took from it a red handkerchief, wiped his brow and heaved a sigh of dismal impressiveness, explanatory of his business. He choked, and even shed tears; but with an effort he mastered his voice and said in lugubrious tones:

"Are you the duck that runs the gospel-mill next door?"

"Am I the—pardon me, I believe I do not understand?"

With another sigh and a half-sob, Scotty rejoined:

"Why you see we are in a bit of trouble, and the boys thought maybe you would give us a lift, if we'd tackle you—that is, if I've got the rights of it and you are the head clerk of the doxology works next door."

"I am the shepherd in charge of the flock whose fold is next door,"

"The which?"

"The spiritual adviser of the little company of believers whose sanctuary adjoins these premises."

Scotty scratched his head, reflected a moment, and then said:

"You ruther hold over me, pard. I reckon I can't call that hand. Ante and pass the buck."

"How? I beg pardon. What did I understand you to say?"

"Well, you've ruther got the bulge on me. Or maybe we've both got the bulge, somehow. You don't smoke me and I don't smoke you. You see one of the boys has passed in his checks, and we want to give him a good send off, and so the thing I'm on now is to get somebody to jerk a little chin music for us and waltz him through handsomely."

"My friend, I seem to grow more and more bewildered. Your observations are incomprehensible to me. Cannot you simplify them in some way? At first I thought I understood you, but I grope now. Would it not expedite matters if you restricted yourself to categorical statements of fact, unencumbered with obstructing accumulations of metaphor and allegory?"

Another pause, and more reflection. Then said Scotty:

"I'll have to pass, I judge."

"How?"

"You've raised me out, pard."

"I still fail to catch your meaning."

"Why, that last lead of yourn is too many for me—that's the idea. I can't neither trump nor follow suit."

The clergyman sank back in his chair perplexed. Scotty leaned his head on his hand and gave himself up to thought. Presently his face came up, sorrowful, but confident.

"I've got it now, so's you can savvy," he said. "What we want is a gospel-sharp. See?"

"A what?"

"Gospel-sharp. Parson."

"Oh!" Why did you not say so before? I am a clergyman—a parson."

"Now you talk! You see my blind and straddle it like a man. Put it there!"—extending a brawny paw, which closed over the minister's small hand and gave it a shake indicative of fraternal sympathy and fervent gratification.

"Now we're all right, pard. Let's start fresh. Don't you mind my snuffling a little—becuz we're in a power of trouble. You see, one of the boys has gone up the flume—"

"Gone where?"

"Up the flume—throwed up the sponge. You understand."

"Thrown up the sponge?"

"Yes—kicked the bucket—"

"Ah—has departed to that mysterious country from whose bourne no traveler returns."

"Return! I reckon not. Why, pard, he's dead!"

"Yes, I understand."

"Oh, you do? Well, I thought maybe you might be getting tangled some more. Yes, you see he's dead again—"

"Again? Why, has he ever been dead before?"

"Dead before? No! Do you reckon a man has as many lives as a cat? But you bet he's awful dead now, poor old boy, and I wish I'd never seen this day. I don't want no better friend than Buck Fanshaw. I knowed him by the back; and when I know a man like him, I freeze to him—you hear me. Take him all round, pard, there never was a bullier man in the mines. No man ever knowed Buck Fanshaw to go back on a friend. But it's all up, you know, it's all up. It ain't no use. They've scooped him."

"Scooped him?"

"Yes—death has. Well, well, well, we've got to give him up. Yes, indeed. It's a kind of a hard world, after all, ain't it? But, pard, he was a rustler! You ought to see him get started once. He was a bully boy with a glass eye! Just spit in his face and give him room according to his strength, and it was just beautiful to see him peel and go in. He was the worst son of a thief that ever drawed breath. Pard, he was on it! He was on it bigger than an Injun!"

"On it? On what?"

"On the shoot. On the shoulder. On the fight, you understand. He didn't give a continental for *any*body. Beg your pardon, friend, for coming so near saying a cuss-word—but you see I'm on an awful strain in this palaver, on account of having to cramp down and draw everything so mild. But we've got to give him up. There ain't any getting around that, I don't reckon. Now if we can get you to help plant him—"

"Preach the funeral discourse? Assist at the obsequies?"

"Obs'quies is good. Yes. That's it—that's our little game. We are going to get the thing up regardless, you know. He was always nifty himself, and so you bet you his funeral ain't going to be no slouch solid-silver door plate on his coffin, six plumes on the hearse, and a nigger on the box in a bild shirt and a plug hat—how's that for high? And we'll take care of you, pard. We'll fix you all right. There'll be a kerridge for you; and whatever you want, you just 'scape out and we'll tend to it. We've got a shebang fixed up for you to stand behind in No. 1's house, and don't you be afraid. Just go in and toot your horn, if you don't sell a clam. Put Buck through as bully as you can, pard, for anybody that knowed him will tell you that he was one of the whitest men that was ever in the mines. You can't draw it too strong. He never could stand it to see things going wrong. He has done more to make this town quiet and peaceable than any man in it. I've seen him lick four Greasers in eleven minutes, myself. If a thing wanted regulating, he warn't a man to go browsing around after somebody to do it, but he would prance in and regulate it himself. He warn't a Catholic. Scasely. He was down on 'em. His word was, "No Irish need apply!" But it didn't make no difference about that when it come down to what a man's rights was—and so, when some roughs jumped the Catholic bone-yard and started in to stake out town-lots in it, he went for em! And he cleaned 'em, too! I was there, pard, and I seen it myself."

"That was very well indeed—at least the impulse was—whether the act was strictly defensible or not. Had deceased any religious convictions? That is to say, did he feel a dependence upon, or acknowledge allegiance to a higher power?"

More reflection.

"I reckon you've stumped me again, pard. Could you say it over once more, and say it slow?"

"Well, to simplify it, somewhat, was he or rather had he ever been connected with any organization sequestered from secular concerns and devoted to self-sacrifice in the interests of morality?"

"All down but nine—set 'em up on the other ally, pard."

"What did I understand you to say?"

"Why, you're most too many for me, you know. When you get in with your left I hunt grass every time. Every time you draw, you fill; but I don't seem to have any luck. Let's have a new deal."

"How? Begin again?"

"That's it."

"Very well. Was he a good man and—"

"There, I see that; don't put up another chip till I look at my hand. A good man, says you? Pard, it ain't no name for it. He was the best man that ever—pard, you'd have doted on that man. He could lam any galoot of his inches in America. It was him that put down the riot last election before it got a start; and everybody said he was the only man that could have done it. He waltzed in with a spanner in one hand and a trumpet in the other, and sent fourteen men home on a shutter in less than three minutes. He had that riot all broke up and prevented nice before anybody ever got a chance to strike a blow. He was always for peace, and he would have peace—he could not stand disturbances. Pard, he was a great loss to this town. It would please the boys if you could chip in something like that and do him justice. Here once when the Micks got to throwing stones through the Methodis' Sunday school windows, Buck Fanshaw, all of his own notion, shut up his saloon and took a couple of six-shooters and mounted guard over the Sunday school. Says he, 'No Irish need apply!' And they didn't. He was the bulliest man in the mountains, pard! He could run faster, jump higher, hit harder, and hold more tangle-foot whisky without spilling it than any man in seventeen counties. Put that in, pard—it'll please the boys more than anything you could say. And you can say, pard, that he never shook his mother."

"Never shook his mother?"

"That's it—any of the boys will tell you so."

"Well, but why should he shake her?"

"That's what I say—but some people does."

"Not people of any repute?"

"Well, some that averages pretty so-so."

"In my opinion the man that would offer personal violence to his own mother, ought to—"

"Cheese it, pard; you've banked your ball clean outside the string. What I was drivin' at, was, that he never throwed off on his mother—don't you see? No indeedy. He give her a house to live in; and town lots, and plenty of money; and he looked after her and took care of her all the time; and when she was down with the small-pox I'm d—d if he didn't set up nights and nuss her himself! Beg your pardon for saying it, but it hopped out too quick for yours truly. You've treated me like a gentleman, pard, and I ain't the man to hurt your feelings intentional. I think you're a square man, pard. I like you, and I'll lick any man that don't. I'll lick him till he can't tell himself from a last year's corpse! Put it there! [Another fraternal handshake—and exit.]

The obsequies were all that "the boys" could desire. Such a marvel of funeral pomp had never been seen in Virginia. The plumed hearse, the dirge-breathing brass bands, the closed marts of business, the flags drooping at half mast, the long, plodding procession of uniformed secret societies, draped engines, carriages of officials, and citizens in vehicles and on foot, attracted multitudes of spectators to the sidewalks, roofs and windows; and for years afterward, the degree of grandeur attained by any civic display in Virginia was determined by comparison with Buck Fanshaw's funeral.

Scotty Briggs, as a pall-bearer and a mourner, occupied a prominent place at the funeral, and when the sermon was finished, and the last sentence of the prayer for the dead man's soul ascended, he responded, in a low voice, but with feeling:

"Amen. No Irish need apply."

As the bulk of the response was without apparent relevancy, it was probably nothing more than an humble tribute to the memory of the friend that was gone; for, as Scotty had once said, that was "his word."

Scotty Briggs, in after days, achieved the distinction of becoming the only convert to religion that was ever gathered from the Virginia roughs; and it transpired that the man who had it in him to espouse the quarrel of the weak out of inborn nobility of spirit was no mean timber whereof to construct a Christian. The making him one did not warp his generosity or diminish his courage; on the contrary, it gave intelligent direction to the one and a broader field to the other. If his Sunday-school class progress faster than the other classes, was it a matter of wonder? I think not. He talked to his pioneer smallfry in a language they understood! It was my privilege, a month before he died, to hear him tell the beautiful story of Joseph and his brethren to his class "without looking at the book." I leave it to the reader to fancy what it was like, as it fell, riddled with slang, from the lips of that grave, earnest teacher, and was listened to by his little learners with a consuming interest that showed that they were unconscious as he that any violence was being done to the sacred properties.

Cure for Hydrophobia.

Chinese physicians treat hydrophobia in a highly original manner. Two sandstone bottles half filled with wine or spirits are placed upon a fire until the liquid boils. The contents are then emptied and the red-hot mouth of the bottle is applied to the bite and held there until it is filled with blood, when the same course is pursued with the other bottle. A decoction of rice, in which cantharides have been boiled for an hour and then removed, is also given the patient, who is required to keep perfectly quiet for eight or ten days.

MOLINE, Ill., is pleased to call itself "the Lowell of the West."

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The Annual Appropriations for the West.

The River and Harbor Appropriation bill, as passed by the House of Representatives, appropriates a grand total of $5,872,850, of which $481,000 is appropriated for the New England States, $657,000 for the Middle States, including Ohio, $1,627,000 for the Western States, including all the Territories and California, and $3,113,850 for the Southern States. Among the appropriations in which Western men are most directly interested are those for the following rivers and harbors:

The Great English Landowners.

Compiled from lists taken from the new Domesday Book just issued in England the following roll of the great landholders of England and Wales who derive from lands alone in these countries incomes of more than £80,000 sterling a year. It should be understood that this roll in many cases gives no accurate account of the total incomes of the persons mentioned in it, since it in no case includes incomes derived from any other source than lands in England and Wales, excluding London. The Duke of Sutherland, for example, has an income roughly estimated at £200,000 from his property in London, Scotland and Ireland over and above the £72,728 derived from his English estates. The Dukes of Porland and Bedford have at least an equal income from their London property; and the Duke of Westminster, whose income from his London property is estimated at £400,000, does not appear at all in the front rank of rural English proprietors. The Marquis of Bute has a very large Scottish income which does not appear in this roll, and many of the wealthiest proprietors of Great Britain, titled and untitled, do not figure in it at all. But taken as it stands, it furnishes a very striking picture of the immense development of the territorial wealth of England since the repeal of the corn laws:

Life in Sponge.

Recent investigations have shown this curious fact about sponges: that no matter how long it may have been used kept dry, its life is apparently restored when it is wet. The sponge being wet with warm water and placed in a warm room, the extremities of the sponge, after a little while, appear to be alive, and reach out like so many snakes—the longer they are the greater the motion. Nearly half of all the slender points seem to come to life, but after they become dry the motion ceases. All sorts of dust may be put upon the sponge, so that they should be under the same circumstances as the pores of the sponge, but nothing but the pores show any motion. These moving parts, when caught with pliers, would pull out a portion of the sponge. When there is much water in the sponge they seem satisfied; but it is as the sponge is drying gradually that evidences of life are exhibited—this fact being discovered with an instrument which magnifies only forty-two diameters.

Dispatches in the Air.

An ocean homing bird of great docility, intelligence and spirit, has been found in Iceland, which flies at a speed of 150 miles an hour, and is able to find its home over sea and land from any part of the habitable world. A pair of these birds, a few days ago, brought dispatches from Paris to a lonely spot in a wild and rocky part of Kent, within ten miles of London, in one and a half hours. Press carrier-pigeons took the dispatches on to the city, the whole distance from Paris to London, by actual parcel mode of conveyance, being done in one and a half hours. If the experiments at present being made in training and educating them continue successful, it is hoped by next summer to establish a daily miniature ocean mail between America and Europe, the whole distance to be traversed between sunrise in one hemisphere and sunset in the other.

Centennial Items.

UNITED STATES troops are to guard the Government building.

COL. SANFORD, the English Commissioner, predicts a grand success for the National Exhibition.

THERE are a great many applicants for positions on the police force. Many are called, but few are chosen.

PROMENADE concerts will be given every morning and afternoon, and, according to the song, everybody will be expected to feel "awfully jolly" when the band begins to play.

ORANGE and lemon trees in full bloom will be seen in Horticultural hall, likewise cocoanut trees and those upon which bananas grow. No plucking or sampling will be permitted.

ALL sorts of curious things will be exhibited in the Women's pavilion. Although there will be no special department to spinsters, their handiwork will be given conspicuous position where it can be admired.

A FAC-SIMILE of the Strasbourg clock will be exhibited. It was made in Brussels, and is said to be complete in every particular. One of the English Commissioners has offered $5,000 for it. He is on time.

AN American soda-water fountain will be ten feet wide and twenty feet high, built of the finest marble, and mounted with silver in great elaboration. There will be a dozen or more bright colored hair oils for syrups!

WORTH, who makes the woman and not the man in Paris, has graciously consented to come, and to many people he will be one of the greatest curiosities. He will bring his wife, and she will wear her best clothes.

THE display of fireworks arranged for the Fourth of July will probably illuminate the whole State of Pennsylvania and a portion of New Jersey. It is likely to rain hard July 4, 1876, according to the almanac. If so the fireworks will be given in-doors.

PARIS in miniature will be shown. The work covers a platform forty feet square, and every important building, bridge and monument in the French capital is seen. Those who can't afford to go to Europe ought to see this fac simile of one of the most attractive cities in the world.

A Trying Scene.

The New Castle people some time ago got a new steam fire engine, the first they ever had, and of course the entire population of the village turned out to witness the trial of the machine. Mr. Bob Parker secured the post of honor as holder of the service-pipe, and he was mighty proud of it. The engine was down at the wharf getting ready to pump water from the river, and Parker stood almost 400 yards off, at the end of a line of hose, waiting for the stream to come, so that he could squirt it over the court-house steeple. There was a great deal of delay while the men were fixing the engine, and Parker incautiously held the muzzle of the pipe toward his waistcoat while he discussed the question of a third term for Grant with Rev. Dr. Hopkins. At the most interesting moment of the debate the engine suddenly began to work, and the next instant a two-inch stream struck Parker in the stomach with terrific force and rolled him over in the gutter. He felt as if the gulf stream had been shot through him from front to back. Then the pipe gave a couple of eccentric jerks, smashed Dr. Hopkins' hat into black silk chaos, and emptied a hogshead of water into his open mouth. It concluded the exercises by getting into such a position that it could play 1,000,000 gallons a minute up the left trowsers leg of the prostrate Mr. Parker. Parker seemed to lose all interest in the capacity of that engine. He went home for his Sunday clothes, and he has since intimated to his confidential friends that if Grant should spend the whole of his third term squirting a stream 50,000 feet high with that diabolical fire-extinguisher, he, Parker, would not go round the corner to witness the spectacle.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Lamentable Carelessness.

The Des Moines (Iowa) Register says: "Yesterday morning two women in the west part of town gave birth to children in the same room and at the same time. The circumstances transpired sooner than had been expected, and as a consequence preparations for the new arrivals had not been made. Intelligence of the event was conveyed to a neighboring house, and a woman living there hastened to them in order to render necessary aid. She cared for the little strangers, bathed and clothed them, and in due season started to present them to their waiting mammas. Then she made the startling discovery that she had succeeded in inextricably mixing the infants so that she was unable to decide which was the mother of either. The case was anxiously considered by all parties, but no decision could be reached, and finally the two mothers cast lots for choice, agreeing that if the children should, when grown, develop family traits sufficiently to identify them they should be exchanged if the present selection should prove to be incorrect."

Counterfeit Nickles.

The smallest and meanest of all counterfeits is now circulating in great numbers throughout the country. It is a counterfeit five-cent piece, and it is worthless only because the counterfeit, although it is identical in weight and fineness with the genuine coin, and worth just as much, is not made at the Government mint. Some of the counterfeits were recently sent to the Superintendent of the Mint in Philadelphia by the Treasurer, for the purpose of making inquiries, and to test their value. The Superintendent says the counterfeits have been assayed and found to contain copper and nickel in the legal proportion; that the coins are of proper weight, size and finish, and just as valuble as the good coin. The only way to detect the spurious is by the imperfect impression of the legend, "In God we trust."

THE SEAMSTRESS' STORY.

Idly she sat in her rocking chair,
  A woman of forty, pale and plain,
There were streaks of gray in her scant, light hair
  On her brow deep furrows of care and pain.

Needle and thread from her hands had dropped,
  The hands that nervously clasped and clung,
As with voice that faltered and often stopped
  She spoke of the days when she was young.

"Yes, it's twenty years since I saw him last—
  Twenty years since we said 'good-bye.'
I've heard folks say time goes so fast—
  They couldn't have known such years as I.

"Twenty years! I remember yet
  Just how he spoke and looked and stood
When he said, 'Now, Mary, you mustn't forget
  All you have promised'—as if I could!

"'There'll be many to tempt you away from me,
  Never heed them, whatever they say;
Wait for me, Mary, wait patiently,—
  And think of me always, by night and by day.

"'Never mind if the years are long,
  I shall write when I've time to spend;
I shall be true, and you must be strong,
  And look to the end, Mary, look to the end!

"'One thing more, Mary, give it due heed,
  Bear your joys and your sorrows alone;
Then when I come I shall feel indeed
  You have been always and truly my own.'

"So he left me—'twas hard to bear
  My lonely life with never a friend,
But he wrote, as he said, when he'd time to spare,
  And I treasured his words and looked to the end.

"I thought of him always, by night or by day,
  Just as he bade me—his will was my law;
And I asked no help on my weary way,
  Though often my heart was sad and sore.

"Waiting thus for the years to pass
  I never counted them as they rolled;
Perhaps if I'd cared to look in the glass
  I might have seen I was growing old.

"And so, when fifteen years had gone,
  He sent for my picture from over the sea;
Ah! when I sent it, I might have known,
  If I had been wise, what the end would be.

"By the very next mail a letter came—
  Not his—he couldn't be so unkind,
But his sister wrote and he signed his name,
  To tell me that 'John had changed his mind!'

"'You see,' she said, 'you are old and plain,
  Too old for John's wife, to tell the truth'—
I laid down the letter and cried with pain,
  For hadn't I given him all my youth?

"Well, there was nothing to do or to say;
  John had a right to change his mind;
I just went on in the same old way,
  Only—I left my hopes behind.

"There were some that tried to comfort me then,
  Saying, 'Best be rid of a fickle heart,'
And 'John was no better than other men,'
  But that never seemed to ease the smart."

So she ended her simple tale,
  'Twas an old, old story, told oft before,
For one heart will trust and one will fail
  Until time and change shall be no more.

AN INTERESTING REMINISCENCE.

The Struggle Over Edward Everett's Nomination as Minister to Great Britain.

The contest in the Senate of the United States over the confirmation of Mr. Dana as Minister to Great Britain recalls the very bitter struggle in 1841, when Edward Everett had been nominated for the same place. Harrison had been elected President, receiving 234 electoral votes against sixty for Van Buren, and he was inaugurated on the 4th of March. But he died on the 4th of April following, and John Tyler became President, retaining Daniel Webster as Secretary of State, and nominating, when Congress met in extra session, Mr. Everett as Minister to England, as had been agreed upon before the death of Gen. Harrison. Mr. Everett had always been very "conservative," but he had, when a candidate for the gubernatorial chair of Massachusetts, expressed the opinion, in answer to a letter, that Congress had the power to abolish slavery in this district. This was made the pretext by the Democrats to defeat the nomination, and thus retain Andrew Stevenson (father of the present Senator from Kentucky) at the Court of St. James. The Whig party had a majority, but the Democrats thought that, if they could brand Mr. Everett as an abolitionist, no Southern Whig would dare to vote for him.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations—a majority of which were Whigs—reported in favor of Mr. Everett's confirmation, but Senator William R. King, who was a member of the committee, made a minority report, in which he took the ground that it would be dangerous to the "peculiar institution" to have the country represented by an abolitionist, when there was already a strong anti-slavery feeling. The nomination was placed on the calendar with the adverse minority report. That night Senator Morehead, of Kentucky, confidentially informed Thurlow Weed, of the Albany Journal, then here as a correspondent for his paper, what was going on in executive session, and said that even Mr. Clay, while he advocated the confirmation, would only give a silent vote for it. Mr. Weed declared that this would never do, and at once set about checkmating the opposition to Mr. Everett by communications in the Baltimore Patriot, which came back here in season, and by personal appeals to Mr. Clay. Rufus Choate, then a Senator from Massachusetts, was also very active among the Whig Senators, and before the nomination was reached for action, the Southern Whigs saw that it would be suicidal for them to be made tools of by the Democrats. Archer of Virginia and Preston of South Carolina alone persisted in their opposition.

When the nomination came up in the Senate, James Buchanan took the lead in opposing Mr. Everett, and was followed by Mr. King, who repeated the arguments used in his minority report, and concluded his bitter remarks by saying that, if a gentleman holding views so opposite to the interests of the South, and so destructive to its institutions was confirmed, for this important position, the Union must and would be dissolved! Henry Clay, who had walked up and down the space behind the chair of the presiding officer, listened attentively to Mr. King's phillippic, sprang to his desk at its conclusion, and added, pointing his index-finger at Mr. King: "And I tell you, Mr. President, that if a gentleman, so pre-eminently qualified for the post of Minister, should be rejected by this Senate, and for the reasons given by the Senator from Alabama, that this Union is dissolved already!" A somewhat heated debate ensued, which was closed by Mr. Clay, who, after having reviewed the arguments against Mr. Everett, said, in his imperial way: "These arguments, Mr. President, all verge to one center, which is that Mr. Everett is opposed to the system of negro slavery on principle. So are all the best men of New England. So are many of the best men at the South. So am I, Mr. President, although I am an owner of slaves!"

When a vote was reached, the nomination of Mr. Everett was confirmed by a vote of twenty-three yeas against nineteen nays. Messrs. Clayton of Delaware, and Merrick of Maryland, Rives of Virginia, Mangum and Graham of North Carolina, Berrien of Georgia, and Clay and Moorhead of Kentucky, all Southern Whigs, voted aye with the Northern Whigs; Archer of Virginia, and Preston of South Carolina, Southern Whigs, voted nay, while Bayard of Delaware, Kerr of Maryland, Barrow of Louisiana, and Henderson of Mississippi, also Southern Whigs, dodged in deference to Southern opinion. Not a Democratic vote was cast for Mr. Everett, and there were six Democratic absentees, one of them Franklin Pierce of New Hampshire, and another Judge Nicholson of Tennessee, who died last week. There cannot be over three or four who were then in the Senate still alive. One of these is ex-Gov. William Allen of Ohio, and another Robert J. Walker of Mississippi.—Washington Cor. Boston Journal.

Chinese Immigration.

The telegraph almost daily brings news of the great excitement on the Pacific slope over the decision of the United States Supreme court to the effect that the California law against the importation of Chinese is unconstitutional. A late dispatch says that the lower classes are talking of the most desperate resorts, fire and steel and extermination, while all classes are united against John. Public meetings are being held in all parts of the State. A citizen's committee of twelve members has been appointed in San Francisco to issue an address and prepare for a public building to send a delegation to Congress to petition for redress, and a bill has passed the Legislature of California granting $5,000 for the expenses of such delegation.

Chinese emigration to this country only began about 1853, but it has increased with great rapidity during the last few years. Up to the first of January, 1872, 144,328 Chinese had arrived, most of whom have remained in California. By the census of 1870 there were 63,199 in the United States, of whom 49,310 were in California. There are now undoubtedly more Chinamen in that State, thinly settled though it is, than there are Irishmen in any of the States save Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania, or Germans in any States save Illinois, New York, Ohio or Wisconsin. The Chinese question, as stated by the journals of the Western slope, may be summarized to this effect: The emigrants of the Mongolian race do not come into the country as free men and women. The males are for the most part bound over to the six companies under contracts which render them in effect slaves—not crossing to our shores moved by the spirit of individual enterprise or adventure, as emigrants, but imported as clothes. The females are brought in under the same contract system, solely for purposes of prostitution. Unlike Europeans, the Chinese do not come to make their homes here or to become citizens of the country. Those of them that die here leave it, as their dying request, that their bodies shall be sent back to China, and those that are fortunate enough to become wealthy, in good time return to spend there what they have gathered here. Coming from a country teeming with population—where the struggle for existence is so desperate that children are sometimes murdered to get rid of the cost of bringing them up—the Chinese, schooled to exist with few wants and no luxuries, enter into competition with American mechanics and laborers, and push them from their places. The progress of importation is so rapid that the whole Pacific slope is threatened, as it were, with an inundation of the new race.

Suspended Animation.

The well-known case of Col. Townsend, recorded by an old physician, Dr. George Cheyne, in his work entitled "The English Malady, or a Treatise of Nervous Diseases of all Kinds" (London, 1733), exemplifies the voluntary assumption of the death-state. Col. Townsend having suffered for many years from a distressing internal complaint, came, Dr. Cheyne tells us, "from Bristol to Bath in a litter in autumn, and lay at the Bell Inn." He was there attended by a Dr. Baynard, by Mr. Skrine (an apothecary), and by Dr. Cheyne himself. The Colonel sent for all three one morning; the physicians, on their arrival, finding his senses clear, and his mind calm, while his nurse and several servants were about him. He had further, the doctor takes care to inform us, made his will and settled his affairs. But the Colonel had sent for his medical attendants that they might "give him some account of an odd sensation he had for some time observed and felt in himself; which was, that composing himself, he could die or expire when he pleased, and yet by an effort, or somehow, he could come to life again; which, it seems, he had sometimes tried before he had sent for us. We heard this," continues Dr. Cheyne, "with surprise; but as it was not to be accounted for from now common principles, we could hardly believe the fact as it was related to us, much less give any account of it." The Colonel then offered to make the experiment before the doctors; they with a proper feeling for the welfare of their patient, at first protesting against the proceeding. At length they were forced to comply, and the proceedings commenced by all three feeling the pulse of the patient. The pulse "was distinct," says Cheyne, "though small and thereby feeling thready (sic); and his heart had its usual beating. He composed himself on his back, and lay in a still posture some time; while I held his right hand Dr. Baynard laid his hand on his (Col. Townsend's) heart, and Mr. Skrine held a clean looking-glass to his mouth. I found his pulse sink gradually, till at last I could not feel any, by the most exact and nice touch. Dr. Baynard could not feel the least motion in his heart, nor Mr. Skrine the least soil of breath on the bright mirror he held to his mouth; then each of us by turns examined his arm, heart and breath, but could not by the nicest scrutiny discover the least symptoms of life in him." The medical men then reasoned about the state before them, and after half an hour's pause, the Colonel lying in the same motionless state, they were just ready to leave him for dead, when some motion about the body was observed. Then the pulse and heart gradually began to beat, and their patient slowly returned to consciousness. But a curious fact remains to be told. The Colonel called that same day for his attorney, added a codicil to his will, and, after receiving the sacrament, expired, really and truly, about 5 or 6 o'clock on the same evening. A post-mortem examination of his body revealed a healthy frame, with the exception of a lesion of the right kidney—for the relief of which, indeed, he had come to Bath.—Chambers' Journal.

Trade With Cuba.

How many persons in the United States appreciate the real relation Cuba bears to the revenue by which this nation is sustained, and to the few ships which bear our flag upon the sea.

For the fiscal year ending in 1875, the total value of our imports from Cuba was $66,745,527, and our exports to Cuba, $16,581,658.

In respect to our imports and the money we get therefrom to pay the interest on our debt and keep our noses above water, Cuba is second, and second only, to Great Britain. Here are the figures:

Great Britain	$157,047,827
Cuba	66,745,527
France	63,342,631
Brazil	42,033,046
Germany	40,893,386

In the matter of maintaining our flag afloat, the possessions of Spain furnish nearly forty per cent. of all the import carrying done under our national ensign.—New York World.

Strange Murder Trial.

A most extraordinary murder trial has just come to an end in Germany in which a young woman was acquitted in spite of her confession of her guilt. The girl broke off an engagement with a young man on account of his poverty, to her great distress, and married an elderly banker. She still kept up communication with her former lover, and upon the death of her husband she confessed that she poisoned him with morphine in order to marry her first love. But the body of the deceased showed no signs of poison, and after a long trial, in which she was ably defended in spite of herself, the jury decided, as the doctors had already, that the banker died a natural death. The girl was not insane, according to the medical experts, but influenced by morbid sentiments or impulses.

Entertaining the Parson.

The preacher was stopping over-night at their house. This was quite an uncommon event for their household, and Mrs. Swipes was on her good behavior. While she was so precise and prim that butter would hardly melt in her mouth in the presence of his "riverance," she had to keep a vigilant watch over her husband and boy, else they would kick over the traces and "show their breeding." It was while she was in this frame of mind that a "tramp" presented himself to the door and asked for something to eat. Now it is proverbial with her that she always turns a cold shoulder to such applicants; but she was on her good behavior, and, consequently, spread a good breakfast before him. After everybody had left the house and she was washing dishes she found herself minus two napkin-rings. On the return of her husband from work she said to him:

"Two of my silver napkin-rings have been stolen."

"You don't say so!"

"Yes; my two best ones."

"Well, well, you ought to know better than to leave things around loose, Mrs. Swipes, after reading all of that Beecher business."

"It wasn't the preacher. It was that dirty tramp."

"Serves you right, Mrs. Swipes, for trying to show off your kindness before that preacher. Why didn't you make the lazy loafer saw wood for his breakfast? You know well enough all tramps will steal."

"I don't know any such thing. I'd let you know that I wasn't raised a tramp, if you was, old Swipes."

"You needn't put on airs over me if my parents were poor, Mrs. Swipes. My parents didn't have to go to the foundling asylum to pick out a baby."—San Francisco Chronicle.

ENGLAND has queer jurymen, too. In a murder trial in London a verdict of acquittal was rendered contrary to the evidence. "That is your verdict," said Justice Mellor to the jury, "but it is not mine. There is not the slightest doubt that the prisoner is guilty. You are masters of the situation, however, and if you choose to find the prisoner not guilty I cannot help it."

CHRONIC DISEASES CURED.—In communities remote from larger towns there seems to be but two alternatives for the sick; either to employ the family physician or to patronize the patent medicine venders. Those who are driven to this extremity, if suffering with chronic disease, we would advise to write to Dr. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 Lexington avenue, N. Y. Dr. F. is the noted author of "Plain Home Talk," "Medical Common Sense," "Science in Story," and other popular medical works which have had a wide circulation all over the globe. In Dr. F. we have a physician who has had extensive experience in treating the sick at a distance from his office, and, moreover, his consultations are free. Any one of our readers is at liberty to consult him with the mere outlay of a postage stamp. He is said to have patients at this moment in Germany, Great Britain, Liberia, Chinese Empire, and the West Indies. If patent medicines can now and then hit successfully when adopted by people who have little knowledge of their own organizations or of their diseases, how much more successfully can a physician, after instituting all necessary inquiries, prepare remedies precisely suited to the organization and diseases of the invalid; just as a tailor cuts and fits a coat to the back. In this more important matter relating to the health and life of people, there is all the difference which exists between Chatham street clothing and that made by a first-class tailor, after taking the most minute measurements. DR. FOOTE is a recognized success in his specialty.

THE huge, drastic, griping, sickening pills, constructed of crude, coarse and bulky ingredients, are fast being superseded by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Sugar-Coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules—The "Little Giant" Cathartic, or Multum in Parvo Physic. Modern Chemical Science enables Dr. Pierce to extract from the juices of the most valuable roots and herbs their most active medicinal principles, which, when worked into little Pellets or Granules, scarcely larger than mustard seed, renders each little Pellet as active and powerful as a large pill, while they are much more palatable and pleasant in effect.

DR. IRA A. THAYER, of Baconsburg, Ohio, writes: "I regard your Pellets as the best remedy for the conditions for which you prescribe them of anything I have ever used, so mild and certain in effect, and leaving the bowels in an excellent condition. It seems to me they must take the place of all other cathartic pills and medicines."

LYON & MACOMBER, druggists, Vermillion, D. T., say: "We think they are going to sell like hot cakes as soon as people get acquainted with them and will spoil the pill trade, as those that have used them like them much better than large pills."

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.—The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]
Andrews' Bazar.
* * * * * * * *
To sum the excellence of the BAZAR up in a word, it is without exception one of the best—if not the best—illustrated fashion journals published in this country, and how the publisher can afford to circulate so choice, so elegant, so useful and so entertaining a paper at one dollar per annum is a mystery to us—but the fact stands that he does. The publication is a credit to Cincinnati and the West, and should receive right hearty recognition and general support from our "teeming millions," for it is essentially a paper of the people and for the people, as its low subscription price indicates. We indorse it cordially, and bid the BAZAR and its energetic and enterprising publisher "God speed."

[Cincinnati Commercial.]
ANDREWS' BAZAR for April is a capital number, full of the fashions and of gossip. The enterprise of establishing such a periodical here is a novelty, and seems to meet an extensive public demand. The BAZAR is conducted with taste and energy, and warrants the favor with which the ladies receive it.

[Cincinnati Gazette.]
Andrews' Bazar.
Every woman, young or old, is interested in the fashions. Those who deem themselves superior to any aspirations after adornment must study the modes in order intelligently to criticise them, or to avoid selecting what is undesirable. Just the kind of information that all members of the gentler sex require is to be found in ANDREWS' BAZAR. It is no mere advertising sheet, though it bears the name of a leading dry goods house, but a veritable newspaper, published monthly on a sheet of the softest rose tint, and folded so as to contain sixteen large pages. It is handsomely and copiously illustrated, as far as fashions go, and contains much excellent reading matter. It contains not only fashion gossip, but a story, a children's department, correspondence from Paris and New York, Cincinnati society personals, amusement and society notes, and, in short, as much matter as can be found in periodicals of thrice its cost, which is only a dollar a year.

To stimulate Subscriptions, from now until July 1st, 1876, we offer the following EXTRAORDINARY INDUCEMENTS!! to wit: To every person forwarding ONE DOLLAR, we will mail the BAZAR post-paid for One Year, and in addition will mail free to their address, or any address they shall name,
AN ELEGANT PHOTO-LITHOGRAPH,

"MAIN BUILDING," "MACHINERY HALL," "AGRICULTURAL HALL," "MEMORIAL BUILDING," "ART GALLERY," "HORTICULTURAL HALL," or a Bird's Eye View of all the Buildings, giving an accurate and detailed sketch of Fairmount Park and its approaches. These Lithographs are very fine—closely resembling Steel Engravings—and should be in the possession of every family to be handed down to future generations as mementoes of our Great Centennial Exposition. Or, if preferred, we will give subscribers a choice of one of two BEAUTIFUL CHROMOS
(in Oil), in sixteen Colors, entitled, respectively, "OUR LITTLE DARLING," and "THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET," the retail value of which is Two Dollars.

The BAZAR should be taken by every family in America, for it is a paper that cannot but prove attractive to all persons, be they rich or poor, of all conditions, of every shade of political belief and of every creed, reside where they may, in city, village, or hamlet, throughout the length and breadth of our wide domain.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.
Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.
Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of
DR. RADWAY'S
Sarsaparillian
Resolvent,
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awake fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changed from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment, no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure, "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in diseases that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; in dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercles of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

Democratic County Convention.

A delegate Convention of the Democracy, of DeKalb county, will be held at Auburn, on Saturday, June 10th, 1876, at 10 o'clock A. M., to nominate for Treasurer, Sheriff, Recorder, Representative, three Commissioners, Coroner Assessor and Surveyor.

It is, therefore, requested that the Democratic voters of the county and all others opposed to the present administration of national affairs, meet at the voting places in the several townships on SATURDAY, June, 3rd, 1876, at 3 o'clock, P. M., to select delegates in accordance with the following basis of appointment to represent said townships in the county convention:

Butler township, 14; Jackson, 15; Concord, 16; Newville, 7; Stafford, 6; Wilmington, 20; Auburn, 30; Waterloo 17; South Richland, 12; North Richland 11; Fairfield, 20; Smithfield, 17; Franklin, 14; Troy, 4.

By order of the Democratic Central Committee.
T. C. MAYS,
Chairman.

DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION

Hon. J. D. Williams Nominated for Governor.

The largest political convention ever convened in this State assembled at Indianapolis, last week, Wednesday morning, in the cause of Democracy and nominated a splendid ticket There was considerable noise and confusion at the outset, caused by the nomination of Judge Holman and Gen'l. Landers for Governor. The friends of each were firm and unyielding, and it seemed at one time as if harmony would not prevail. Finally that old whul-horse of Democracy, Hon. J. D. Williams was taken up by the Holman faction, and before the call of the committees was made he was nominated by acclamation and nineteen hundred voices sent up a cheer that was perfectly deafening. We never saw such splendid harmony come out of what at one time threatened considerable discord.

Mr. Williams has been connected with the legislation of this State for nearly forty years, being a member of either the House or Senate, many terms during that time. He has also been connected with the several of our State organizations either as President or Director.—He is a gentleman of fine executive ability, and unimpeachable integrity. He is a plain, practical man, and makes no claims to brilliant oratory or fine spun theories. In fact he is such an one as the honest, practical and hard working people want. He is a resident of Vincennes, Knox County, and is now a member of Congress.

The nomination for Lieutenant Gov. Col. J. P. Gray, of Randolph, is regarded as an excellent one, and from the way he expresses himself we know he will make a brilliant canvass.

The present officers, Auditor, Treasurer, Secretary and Judges of Supreme Court were all renominated. Gabriel Schmuck a scholarly German and fine speaker was nominated unanimously for Clerk of the Supreme Court.

Hon. A. N. Martin, of Wells Co., is the nominee for Reporter of the Supreme Court, a most excellent selection

Mr. Smart, of Fort Wayne, was also re-nominated for Supt. of Public Instruction.

Democratic Platform.

The Democracy of Indiana declare their fidelity to all the provisions of the federal constitution, to a perpetual union of the States; to local self-government in every section; to all public trusts and obligations; to the honest payment of the public debt; to the preservation of the public faith; to the maintenance of free schools, and to the pure and economical administration of the federal State, and municipal government. They contemplate with alarm the distress that prevails, the wide-spread financial ruin that impends over the people, and the corruption that pervades the public service, and they charge that these evils are the direct result of the personal government, unwise legislation, vicious financial policy the great contraction of the currency, and the extravagance and selfishness of the party and its officials who have so long held unchecked control. Inviting all who believe in and earnestly desire official purity and fidelity, the adjustment of financial questions upon a sound basis having a regard for the interests and welfare of the whole people and not a class, and the recognition of the final settlement of all questions submitted to the arbitrament of the sword to unite with them they declare.

1. That the civil service of the government has become corrupt and is made an object of personal gain and that it is the first duty of the people themselves and the government to restore tests of honesty, capacity, and fidelity in the selection of persons to fill all public positions.

2. The reported exposure of corruption in the administration of every branch of public affairs call for a continued and thorough investigation, not only that the corrupt practices may be brought to light and the guilty parties to punishment but also that it may be made clear to the people that their only remedy for reform is by making a general and thorough change.

3. That retrenchment and economy are indispensable in Federal State, and municipal administration as an essential means toward lessening the burdens of the people and we commend the efforts of the majority of the House of Representatives for the reduction of the expenses of the federal government to a just standard, and their determination to lessen the number of useless officers.

4. We believe in our ancient doctrine that gold and silver are the true and safe basis of the currency and we are in favor of measures and policies that will produce uniformity in value in coin and paper money of the country without destroying or embarrasing the business interests of the people.

5. We oppose the contraction of the volume of our paper currency and declare in favor of the adoption of measures looking to the gradual retirement of the circulation of the national banks and the substitution therefor of the circulating notes issued by the authority of the government.

6. We recognize with patriotic satisfaction the best recuperative energies with which our country is endowed and observe that in spite of the interference with the laws of commerce which has been practiced our currency has improved in proportion as our wealth has increased and the sense of national and local security has been confirmed. We are therefore of the opinion that a natural return to specie payments will be promoted by the increase of national wealth and industries, by the assurance of harmony at home and peace abroad, and by strengthening our public credit under a wise and economical administration of our national affairs.

7. That legal-tender notes constitute a safe currency, and one especially valuable to the debtor classes because of its legal tender quality and we demand the repeal of the legislation enacted by the Republican party providing for its withdrawal from circulation and the substitution therefor of national bank paper.

8. The act of Congress for the resumption of specie payments on Jan. 1, '76 was a party measure devised in secret caucus for party ends, and forced thro' the House of Representatives without the allowance of an amendment or debate under party discipline. It paralyzes industry, creates distrust of the future, turns the laborer and producer out of employment is a standing threat upon business men, and should at once be repealed without any condition whatever.

9. As Democrats we may indulge in laudable pride at the great success of our common school system which hab its origin in the Democratic policy and its development in Democratic measures. We will stand by and forever maintain our constitutional provision which guarantee our common school from diminution and misapporpriation, and its use only to support non-sect-arian common schools and we denounce as enemies of the schools the Republicans, who for party-ends have sought to bring them into politcal and sectarian controversy.

10. We believe that a license law properly guarded is the true principle in legislation upon the liquor traffic.

11. It is not right for any political party to make the just claims of the union soldier, their wives and children, the subject of partisan controversy for such right are most secure when protected by all the people and are endangered only when thrown into the political arena by demagogues.—We will stand by and maintain their rights to honors to pensions and to equal bounties not as partisans but because it is our pleasure and duty as citizens.

12. That the jurisdiction of the federal courts in civil causes has been so extended as to become burdensome to the people in increased expense and compelling them to try their causes at places remote from their homes.

13. We approve the bill which recently passed the House of Representatives prohibiting members of Congress and all officers and employees of the United States from contributing money to influence elections.

14. We are opposed to the assumption by congress of the debts of the District of Columbia which were contracted by the late corrupting and we believe the government should pay over equal just proportions for local improvement, the same as other owners of property and no more.

15. That the people of Indiana recognize with pride and pleasure the eminent public services of Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks; that in all public trusts he has been faithful to his duty, and in his public and private life pure and without blemish. We therefore declare that he is our unanimous choice for the presidency of the United States.

16. That the delegates to the Democratic national convention this day appointed are hereby instructed to cast the vote of this state in said convention as a unit, in such manner as the majority of the delegates may determine.

17. We are opposed to the payment of any part of the rebel debt; to any payment whatever for emancipated slaves, or the property of rebels detroyed in the war.

Election Notice.

Notice is hereby given that an election will be held at the Clerk's office, Auburn, DeKalb Co. Ind., May 1st, 1876, for the purpose of electing the following town offices to-wit:

All Goods Retailed at Wholesale Prices

This is the Only Secret of Our Immense Trade.

we purchase at first hands and sell direct to the consumer, so there is no middlemen to eat up profits. Some goods—take teas for instance—pass through four different hands before they reach consumers, and each one has to have his profit, so that 40 to 50 per cent. is added to price. The importer has his profit of 10 per cent., the jobbing merchant his profit of 10 per cent., the speculator and wholesale merchants, 10 to 20 per cent. and the retailer all he can get. So Sugars, Coffees, Spices, Prune Fruits, Tobaccos, Liquors, or anything we deal in. Our customers get the benefit of all these intermediate profits, No middlemen with us. Monday was pay day on the B. & O.

The creek banks are lined with fishers.

Jno Britton has put a new dray on the road.

Everyone is now satisfied that spring is here.

The green grass grows all 'round, al 'round.

The wheat fields look green and promising.

Mr. Wm. Rodahefer has been sick with a billious attact.

Yesterday was the anniversary of Odd Fellowship in this state.

Joe. Rainier is selling lots on his new addition very rapidly.

A. Harriss and wife have moved to our city, from Waterloo.

A large number of our citizens visited Fort Wayne yesterday.

Spades are trump, but it is the laboring men that "rake 'em in."

J. R. Lanning has erected a neat awning in front of his store room.

Mr. Williamson has moved his restaurant in A. J. Little's room.

We received a pleasant call from Mr. & Mrs. D. Martin on Monday last.

Geo Steele has located his paint shop over Anderson's blacksmith shop.

The time of soap making is at hand. Cleanliness is next to Godliness.

We would like to have about 500 more subscribers during the campaign.

Each candidate should send in their announcement as soon as possible.

Al. Dawson is filling up and otherwise improving his lot on north Main-st.

J. E. Woodford and Jno. Otto have built front fences to their residences.

Lessig has some beautiful styles of Hats, Caps and Gent's furnishing goods.

Lauferty will be at home to night with his new stock of summer clothing.

Now, as the farmers are busy plowing and planting, business seems a little dull.

Ford & Parent have erected two nice signs for the benefit of their livery barn.

Billy Edgerton has moved his barber shop over Mr. Woodfords boot & shoe store.

Kahn is everlastingly getting new goods. You had better call and learn his prices.

We notice a German band of corporation fiddlers making things lively around wood-piles.

Go and see Frank Culbertson, at Lessig's Hat and Cap store, when you want bargains.

Several of our citizens got beautifully "whipped" last Monday, by a traveling nuisance.

Frank Barney, and a friend of his, of Spencerville, gave our city a short visit last Saturday,

Mr. Bender wishes to sell tubs, kettles pumps, &c., to be used for brewing purposes, very cheap.

Virgil Dewitt, formerly of this city, has started a saloon at Moorsville, Ind., called The Red Line.

Don't fail to wait until Mr. Lauferty returns from Chicago, if you want a neat and tasty summer suit.

Geo. Picker is alive to his summer's work. Geo has the job of laying a large amount of brick this season.

Mrs. Little and Fair have recieved their new styles of blocks, and are now ready to do all kinds of reparing.

We notice a tasty and showy sign up stairs, on Woodfords building, which reads, W. H. Dills, Law office.

"Harry, hand me that rag," is the latest joke. We don't know what it means, but the boys enjoy it highly.

Mr. Charley Klotz' little boy was taken to Detroit, this week, to have an operation performed on his hip.

Mr. Goodman, on Seventh-st., is prepared to do all kinds of tin roofing and spouting, either in or out of the county.

By a letter from A. K. Rex, of Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, we learn he is very much pleased with his new location.

When parties announce their names as candidates before the convention, we wish they would "announce here's $3. also.",

The Fair at Waterloo is to be held the first week in October. Still greater inducements are to be offered in pre miums.

We would like to see our excellent band well organized for the campaign. We hope the boys will go to work and get in good shape.

Jas. Henry, Esq., will soon commence soliciting our farmer friends, representing the Defiance Insurance Co., of Defiance, O.

Work has commenced on the bank building, Wm. McIntyre as "boss," and our citizens can look for a nice building when completed.

Everybody is going to Lauferty's for clothing, on account of him having the largest, finest and nobbiest summer suits in the county.

The COURIER office is prepared to do all kinds and sizes of horse bills. Bring up your horse and we will have our special artist draw him off."

John B. Stall, of Ligonier, and Dan'l McDonald, of Plymouth are the chosen delegates for this district to the national convention at St. Louis.

D. D. Snyder is pushing things in the agricultural business. Watch the COURIER for full particulars.

It was suggested at a caucus meeting of the Democrats of this district, at Indianapolis, that we hold our congressional convention on July 15th.

Joe. Beugnot has some tasty lettering on his saloon windows. Marion Hollinger has quit, and Nelson Hall, of Waterloo will fill the vacancy.

According to a Fort Wayne paper Myers, of the Kendallville Standard, wants to sell out and go west. Perhaps the "Press" has made it too hot for him.

If the people west refuse to go to the Centennial, until the railroads issue half fare tickets, either the railroads will have to accede, or the people will stay at home.

Jas. Brubecker is prepared to take all kinds of jobs in the plastering line, at reasonable prices. His reputation as a workman is of the best, and parties wanting work done, should see Jim first.

Our fellow citizen, Freeman Kelly, at the rally at the Bates House, after the adjournment of the Committee, was called out and made a spendid speech, and was most heartily applauded.

The farming fraternity have now an opportunity to vote for a man of their own cloth, with brains enough to make a good Governor. "Blue Jeans Jimmy" is his name.

The Presbyterion social will be entertained by Mrs. J. E. Rose next Wednesday afternoon and evening. All are cardially invited.

Mrs. R. ELSON Secy.

In the disolution notice of Headly & Woodcox, of St Joe station, it should have stated that Woodcox would, after the first of Jan. be responsible for all debts of the firm.

LOST—On last Saturday evening a "baby cape," between the residences of A. Dawson and F. Buchanan. The finder will confer a favor by leaving the same at this office.

Elder A. C. Babcock will preach at the residence of Chas. Eckhart ½ mile east of Auburn next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock; also in the evening at the Methodist church. All are invited.

A young lady, supposed to have shuffled off this mortal coil, at Logansport, the other day, sat up in her coffin and asked for a cup of tea. A few of those who were present havn't stopped running yet.

Mr. I. A. Matson, of Waterloo, has been compelled to sell out, the hard times and dull business operating against his success. E. H. Taylor, John and L. J. Matson are his successors.

We fear Auburn is overstocked with saloons. Six dispensers of stimulents, is a large load in comparison with other business, and even now some are staggering under it.

If a certain delegate from a certain county, would keep a little more within his sphere, at conventions, he would certainly develope more modesty than he is generally credited with having on hand.

The probability is that party tickets will be presented for the ratification of voters next Monday. We hope the Dem. crats will nominate a good ticket, in favor of rigid economy, and elect it.

The editor left last Monday for Washington, but expects to be back again in a few weeks to stay. He is very anxious to shape things so that he can put in a power press this summer, and this is why he is absent.

Judge Holman was the first choice of this county for Governor, but when the Landers function showed a disposition to bolt his nomination, DeKalb gallantly voted for Williams and now all is peace and harmony.

The boys along Ensley's block say, that Joe Beckhoffer has the ague. If this is true we are sorry, as about nine cases out of every ten the victim is taken to the "bone-yard."

A young man from the country brought a juvenile fox to town on Monday, and asked $1.25 for the pet, but there were no takers. A runner from Detroit came along and forked over two dollars, in blissful ignorance of the sum demanded. And thus was patience rewarded.

The building of the new school edifice was let to J. W. Case, of this city, at a bid of 9,677 dollars. The building will be a handsome one and all will be glad that the cost of erecting it has been put down at so low a figure.

The one o'clock train on the Saginaw road going south, jumped the track near Reading, last Tuesday, and was delayed until late the next day. There was no mails received during the day. No one was injured by the accident.

If you want to get a bird's eye view of the avenue in Washington, get a position where you can take in that street lamp that illuminates Dr. Ford's barn. But you must keep your eye close upon the lamp or the illusion will prove deceptive.

Dr. Hammond and Mr. Bently are conducting meetings in Washington, something similar to Sanky and Moody. From two to three thousand have been gathered in so far. Lawyers, doctors, drunkards and gamblers are among this number, but official sinners are not enumerated in the last class.

Parties are moving out of the old wooden row, to give place for the new brick buildings to be erected this summer If each one, who owns buildings in this old block would take hold of the enterprise in the improvement of the town, as their neighbors do, Main street would look very differently.

Conover, of the Fort Wayne News, had a soft snap. Two female walkists stepping off a match there last week, and this genial reporter called quite frequently for items, and between the two he spent most of his time. That was all he had to dispose of. Happy Conover.

We are glad to know that Enos. Weaver, Esq., who has been suffering from consumption for several years, is improving in health. He has spent a large sum of money in traveling and paying doctor bills. His trip to the old country did him but little good.

Jo. McKay is enjoying the special delight of a catarrh on the hand. By the way there is not so much difference between a catarrh and a guitar as people suffer especially when the latter is manipulated by the skillful Kahn. There is something excruciating about both of them.

Next to Peter Kiser, we have the vertable hatchet that cut the cherry tree. It was presented to us by our accomplished friend, Hon. E. L. Chittenden, member from the third ward, and chairman of the Committee on Police. It is in miniature form, yet elegant and therefore in keeping with the genial donor.

If a fellow goes to play eucher with a young lady, and finds an other fellow there, what comes next? For a rough guess, we would think that he'd right about face and go home and tell his ma "that something can be found out every day, if one can just go out to look for it.

It now turns out that A. T. Stewert, the wealthy New Yorker, who died a short time ago, was a cold, heartless miser, and there is very little in his life to commend to the rising generation. We had rather be poor, with a warm heart for our fellow creatures, than to be like Stewart.

We have received from P. T. Barnum an outline of his great Centennial show, which embraces the largest menagerie that has ever traveled the country, a grand museum, a patriotic musical jubilee, and the finest circus in existence. Each evening's entertainment is concluded with a grand display of fireworks. He will come west in a few weeks.

The base ball season has commenced in all of our surrounding towns, and the question arises, "shall Auburn indulge?" We can add one more good player to our nine this summer. Nelson Hall, who is now with Jos. Beugnot and contemplates remaining for several months. Someone take hold of the matter.

Our capital friend, Geo. J. E. Mayer, of Fort Wayne, has just invented a new kind of coffin. It is called the fire-alarm double back-action burglar-proof receptacle for damny clay. It is made of case-hardened iron, and when once closed, fastenings come together that holds it firm as a rock, so that friends or enemies cannot open it. An explosive torpedo is placed on the top, and the least fooling around them diggings will discharge the fact that a small cannon has been buried with the corpse.

Our friend, Tony Palmer, tackled a ladder the other day, leaning against the Ensley block, and for a long time it was not known which would come out ahead The ladder being a little the longest, had the advantage, but it didn't have splendid bottom, and this made things equal. At last they both landed at the same time, Tony receiving a bad cut on the chin. We always avoid a ladder and a wheelborrow.

When James D. Williams was nominated for Governor, by the Democracy, and the first furore of noise had subsided a red-whiskered man in the rear of the hall swung his dilapidated felt hat and roared, "Hoo-raw-every man in Indiana that shelters his back behind a stump will vote for Williams." This produced a roar of laughter among that class of delegates.

"Shelters his back," is good. Now Mr. Gazette man please give the remark correctly. If you want to state it at all don't go 'round the bush, but say it out in plain English.

Mr. P. L. Clark, while preparing for a buggy ride, on Sunday last, met with a sad misfortune. His wife had entered the buggy and as he was about to hand her their baby, the horses started and in a moment of excitement, he dropped the baby to catch the team, from which it received such injuries that it died the next evening.

Is Your Life Worth 10 Cents.

COMSUMPTION CURED.

AN old physician, retired from active practice having had placed in his hands by and East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints. after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering he will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper.

DR. W. C. STEVENS,
Munroe Block. Syracuse, N. Y

We regret the necessity of saying anything about our court yard, but its present appearance is rather demoralizing. It looks more like a cow pasture than what it ought to be. More trees should be planted and the ground clensed from the rubbish that is more abundant than grass. We notice the Sheriff has shaped his side up with good taste. We would like to see some of our enterprising farmers bring in and plant a centennial tree to bloom a hundred years hence. Let it be dressed up and kept in shape by all means.

The mud-bound condition of things which has been realized in this section for the last six months has created a desire for a system of roads that will overcome this difficulty. The present arrangement for the repairing of public highways is certainly a miserable one. Each voter should be required to pay his road tax in money into the township Treasury, and a proper officer should be authorized to expend it in the construction of macademized or general roads. This would bring about a perfect system of roads in a short time.

We have been shown plans of the new Presbyterion Church, to be erected this summer, and think it will be, when completed, one of the finest churches in Northern Indiana. The enterprising members of the church and several citizens who attends regularly met last night ascertain what could be done, and how much money could be raised to start the enterprise. Nine of the members present subscribed $1,800, and we hope our citizens generally will look at this in the same direction and do likewise. This congregation needs a church very bad.

Yesterday morning the attention of our citizens was called to a young lady standing on the eve of a building on Main Street, apparently with all the dignity of a queen. About fifteen of our young men were sitting on the opposite side of the street, resting their hands on their cheeks and elbows on their knees, waiting, oh wating—we won't say. There was one fellow deserved pity. He walked around the block five times to see her face, but alas, he succeeded not—she had nary a face. It was a "wooden woman" used by H. H Stamets as a sign. Harry is yet anxious to know, "whose been here since I've been gone?"

Catching a Sucker.

The other day old man Smithers went down to the creek to fish. He placed one end of a plank on the bank and the other on a log which was in the middle of the creek. He baited his hook with a minnow, crawled out on the plank in the warm sunshine and waited about an hour for a bite, but the fish wouldn't bite, so the old man went to sleep. He was dreaming that he was catching a sucker weighing about 24 pounds, when some little boy happened along and slid the plank off into the water. The old man floundered around in the water like a whale struck with a harpoon. All the time yelling for someone to pull on the line or the fish would get away. It wasn't long before he was fairly awakened. Seeing the boys on the bank rolling and laughing, he began to see who was the author of his ducking. Then began the race for life, he chased them boys up and down the creek bank about twenty times, when one little fellow juked down and Smithers went flying over him into a mud-puddle. This ended the fishing for that day, and he struck out for home, mad as a wet hen, threatening to thrash every boy in Auburn, if any of them bothered him again, when he goes a fishing.

THE EAST.

The will of the late Alexander T. Stewart bequeaths all his property and estate to his wife, Cornelia M. Stewart, and her heirs forever, and appoints Judge Henry Hilton to act in behalf of the estate and in managing his affairs. As a mark of regard, Mr. Stewart bequeathed to Judge Hilton the sum of $1,000,000. He appoints his wife, Judge Hilton and William Libby his executors. The business affairs of the deceased millionaire will go on the same as before his death, and the various plans of public beneficence initiated by him will be faithfully carried out.

Horace Greeley's old homestead in the woods of Chappaqua, N. Y., was recently destroyed by fire....Moody and Sankey have brought their revival meetings in New York to a close.

Louis J. Jennings, formerly editor of the New York Times, was arrested in that city the other day, in the suit of the Graphic Company and held for bail in $10,000 each in six suits for libel, which have been pending against him in the civil courts. Detectives had been hunting for Jennings nearly a month. He had been keeping extremely quiet, with the intention of sailing for Europe with his family so as to avoid arrest.

An offer has been made by Garvey, the plasterer, and Keyser, the plumber of the Tweed ring, to restore to the city of New York their respective shares of the stealing in which they were instrumental as soon as the amounts can be ascertained. They wish to be let out of the civil suits for recovery of the plunder on the terms.

THE WEST.

In the United States District court, at Jefferson City, Mo., last week, the following sentences were passed by Judge Krekel upon persons convicted in that court of connection with the whisky frauds: John L. Bittenger, ex-ganger, of St. Joseph, two years in the penitentiary and $2,300 fine; Samuel Adler and Abraham Furst, distillers and rectifiers, St. Joseph, each one year in the county jail, and $10,000 fine; John C. Sheehan, distiller, St. Joseph, eight months in the county jail from September last and $1,000 fine; Henry R. Harting and Ernst F. Harting, brothers, St Joseph, each three months in the county jail and $2,500 fine; James E. Marsh, ex-ganger, Kansas City, six months in jail and $1,000 fine.

Mention has heretofore been made in this column of the excitement in Chicago over the frauds perpetrated at the recent election for town officers in that city, and of the public meetings held for the purpose of devising measures to prevent the fraudulently elected officers from exercising the functions of the positions to which they laid claim. The city was excited as it probably never was before about an election, and threats of lynching the ballot-box stuffers were freely indulged in. Happily such a summary mode of dealing with the rascals has been obviated, as we learn from the Chicago papers that the obnoxious crew have been gotten rid of by legal means. At a meeting of the town board last week, called to canvass the returns of the election, evidence of the glaring frauds was placed before them, whereupon they declared the late election a nullity, decided that the offices of town assessor, collector and clerk were vacant, and proceeded to fill them by the appointment of reputable citizens, who were immediately sworn in.

The steamer Dictator was wrecked at Hannibal, Mo., one day last week, while attempting to pass through the draw of the railroad bridge, accross the Mississippi at that point. The boat sunk immediately, and with it ten of the crew. The bridge was badly damaged....During the past year over $26,000,000 of United States taxes have been collected in the Internal Revenue District managed at present by Supervisor Matthews, and comprehending the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan.

The municipal election in Chicago, last week, resulted in the choice of the entire Republican ticket, with the exception of City Treasurer, by about 5,000 majority. Clinton Briggs, the Democratic nominee, was elected Treasurer by 5,263 majority. The City Council is largely Republican and anti-Colvin. Thomas Hoyne was united upon by all parties for Mayor, and was elected without opposition. But as no election for Mayor had been legally authorized, and the present incumbent, Colvin, has expressed his determination not to yield up the office, it is not likely that Mr. Hoyne will be inducted into the office. Over 50,000 votes were polled, an unusually large number for a local contest....Chicago elevators, as per official figures, contain 2,892,390 bushels of wheat, 1,688,376 bushels of corn, 663,977 bushels of oats, 104,639 bushels of rye, and 223,496 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 5,572,878 bushels, against 6,055,733 bushels at this period last year....The Toledo Blade publishes comprehensive crop reports from over two hundred points in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois, which indicate that the prospects of wheat in the principal wheat-producing regions in these States are unusually good. Fruit everywhere is reported as looking unusually well.

Dom Pedro paid a flying visit to Chicago the other day, merely passing through the city on his way to San Francisco.

A man named Milligan, who arrived at Fort Laramie from the Black Hills last week, reports that his party was attacked by Indians in Red Canon, near Cheyenne river ranche, about fifty miles from Custer. A few of the party escaped to the ranche. Mr. and Mrs. Metz, of Laramie City, were killed. A colored woman was taken prisoner. A man named Simpson was also killed. Three men were wounded, it is thought mortally.

SOUTH.

Internal Revenue Collector Patterson, of the Memphis (Tenn.) district, recently made a raid on the whisky crooks in Henry county, Tenn., and Calloway county, Ky. Eight illicit distilleries and several thousand gallons of mash were destroyed, and five of the guilty parties arrested.

The annual flood in the Mississippi river is unusually disastrous this season. Many breaks have occurred in the levees, and much valuable country inundated by the escaping waters. The damage, it is estimated, will each several millions of dollars.

WASHINGTON.

Representatives of the whisky interest are in Washington, working for a reduction of the tax to half a dollar a gallon. It is not likely they will succeed....The anniversary of the assassination of President Lincoln, April 14, was observed as a pubic holiday at the capital.

Gen. Babcock has been indicted by the Washington Grand Jury for alleged complicity in the famous safe-burglary affair. Indicted with him, as alleged co-conspirators, are Richard Harrington, Hiram C. Whitely, Ichabod Nettleship, Thomas P. Somerville, Geo. E. Miles, alias Bliss, alias Williams, and Walter Brown, alias William Benton. Miles is undergoing a sentence of fourteen years in the Vermont penitentiary for robbing the Barre bank, and the whereabouts of Benton, one of the burglars who broke the safe, are unknown. It is reported that Harrington has fled the country.

It is said ex-Secretary Belknap and his friends are collecting material to make out a case against Gen. Custer with a view to having him tried by court-martial before Gen. Terry at St. Paul....Washington dispatches say there is no truth in the report that Gen. Schenck will return to London as our Minister. It is also stated that the committee investigating the Emma mine business will absolve him from any fraudulent intention in the transaction.

The President has appointed Michael Schaeffer, of Illinois, Chief-justice of Utah; Elisha P. Ferry, Governor of Washington Territory; and Joseph C. Wilson, Collector of Internal Revenue for Colorado....It seems that Tom Scott has encountered some formidable rivals before the Congressional committee. It is stated that responsible parties have made a proposition to the committee to complete the Southern Pacific road for the amount of the land grant, to commence without delay, and continue operations until it is finished, and to make a deposit of $3,000,000 as a pledge to the Government of the good faith of the proposition.

The Secretary of War has directed the military commanders along the Rio Grande to grant protection to American citizens against the lawless outrages of the Mexican greasers, and to enforce this order—if it is necessary—to cross the river and protect them by force....A Washington dispatch says: "The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury department, in examining the accounts of the bureau of captured and abandoned property, has discovered that property of immense value is unaccounted for. The responsibility for much of this is directly traceable to Simon Draper, of New York, former Government agent, now dead."

GENERAL.

Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, arrived in New York last week. Secretaries Fish, Taft, Robeson, Gen. Sherman, Mayor Wickham and other officials steamed down the bay and boarded the steamer bearing the distinguished visitor, for the purpose of escorting him to the city. The Emperor positively declined a public reception, and the committee left the vessel shortly after boarding it. In the evening the Emperor and Empress visited Booth's Theater, and the following day visited Moody and Sankey at the Hippodrome.

It is stated, as understood at Washington, that charges have been filed against Gen. Custer by a prominent army officer, and that action will be taken in the case by Gen. Terry, Custer's department commander, as soon as the information on which they are based reaches his hands....Gen. John A. Sutter, the original California pioneer upon whose estate gold was discovered, is in very reduced circumstances. Gen. Sherman and several hundred other forty-niners are petitioning Congress to give him a pension, or rather to repay him for supplies and medicines furnished sick and destitute miners. Sutter resides at present in Washington.

The ship Victory, from Shields, England, for San Francisco, was recently lost at sea. All the people on board, twenty-six in number, perished....The Irish rifle team will sail for this country in August.

Great distress prevails among the people of that remote and in the winter inaccessible corner of the Dominion, the Gaspe district, at the mouth of the river St. Lawrence. Feed for animals and food for men are about exhausted, and the horrors of actual starvation can only be averted by a speedy opening of navigation.

POLITICAL.

The "Liberals" have issued a call for a consultation to be held next month in Philadelphia. It bears the names of Chas. Francis Adams, Carl Schurz, David A. Wells and others....Lincoln statue, paid for exclusively by contributions from colored people, was unveiled on Capitol hill in the presence of a vast audience. The oration was delivered by Fred Douglass, and a poem was read by Miss Ray, colored....A Washington dispatch says representatives of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroads will present to the House Committee for consideration a proposition for the settlement of their affairs with the Government very similar to that already before the Senate. Their proposition is to give a certain number of acres of land back to the Government at $2.50 an acre, this land lying west of the 100th meridian. To the amount arising from this retrocession of land they propose to add that the Government now owes the company on account of transportation, and then pay into the treasury a sufficient sum annually to provide a sinking fund to meet the bonds and interest at maturity, this sum to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Illinois Democratic Convention will convene at Springfield on the 22d of June....Nebraska sends an uninstructed delegation to St. Louis.

The Indiana Democratic State Convention, which met at Indianapolis on the 19th of April, placed in nomination the following ticket: Governor, James D. Williams; Lieutenant-governor, Isaac P. Gray; Judges of the Supreme court, First district, S. H. Buskirk; Second district, A. G. Downey; Third district, John Pettit; Fourth district, James L. Worden; Secretary of State, John Neff; Auditor of State, E. Henderson; Treasurer, Benjamin C. Shaw; Attorney-general, C. A. Buskirk; Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. H. Smart; Clerk of the Supreme court, Gabriel Schmick; Reporter of the Supreme court, Augustus N. Martin. A platform was adopted commending the National House of Representatives for its measures of retrenchment; calling for the withdrawal of the National bank notes, and the substitution of notes issued by the Government; declaring that the legal-tender notes constitute a safe currency, and demanding the immediate repeal or the Resumption act of 1879; declaring pride in and an intention to stand by the common-school system, and preserve it from sectarianism; favoring the additional pensioning of the widows and children of Federal soldiers; pledging the delegates to St. Louis to vote as a unit; opposing the payment of the rebel debt; and closing with a tribute to Gov. Hendricks as a suitable Presidential candidate.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Saturday, April 15.—Senate.—Not in session. House.—The case of Hallett Kilbourn, the real estate pool recusant witness, formed the subject of a lively debate in the House. The Judiciary Committee, to whom the question of the habeas corpus had been referred, reported unfavorably on the application, directing the Sergeant-at-arms to make a respectful return to Judge Cartter, of the District court, setting forth the cause of Kilbourn's detention, but to retain the custody of the prisoner. Hurd, Lawrence and Hoar considered the House justified in holding the prisoner in defiance of the court, while Garfield, Lynde, Kelley and Kasson claimed that the House should obey the mandate of the court and deliver up the prisoner. The question was not decided....A resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Rules to inquire into the charge that Smith, the journal clerk of the House, had offered to prosecute additional bounty claims for a commission....The bill to provide for the administration of oaths in impeachment trials was passed....The Senate amendments to the Consular and Diplomatic bill were reported from the Appropriations Committee and ordered printed.

Monday, April 17.—Senate.—After the journal of Thursday's proceedings had been read, various petitions and memorials were presented, and at half-past 12 o'clock the legislative business was suspended and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the articles of impeachment. After a proclamation by the Sergeant-at-arms, Chief Justice Waite administered the oath to such of the Senators as were absent on the day the Senate was organized as a court of impeachment. Shortly after Belknap, accompanied by his counsel, ex-Senator Carpenter, Judge Black and Montgomery Blair, entered and proceeded to the table provided for them. The return on the writ served upon the ex-Secretary having been read, and the Sergeant-at-Arms having called upon him to answer, Mr. Carpenter read, and had filed a plea denying the jurisdiction of the Senate to try Mr. Belknap on the articles of impeachment, as he was not an officer of the United States at the time such articles were found and presented to the Senate; that he has not since been nor is not now an officer of the United States, but was and is a private citizen of the United States and of the State of Iowa. The court then adjourned until Wednesday.

House.—The House devoted another day to the case of Kilbourn, the recusant witness, and, at the conclusion of a long and animated debate, adopted a resolution proposed by Lynde, of Wisconsin, that the Sergeant-at-arms make return to the writ of habeas corpus, and that he take with him before the court the body of Kilbourn.

Tuesday, April 18.—Senate.—A bill was passed authorizing the Congressional printer to furnish copies of the Record, and extracts therefrom, to the members of Congress at cost, and other public documents, etc., with ten per cent. additional thereon, and to collect the money after delivery....A bill was also passed authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue....The House Deficiency bill was called up, amended, and finally passed....A message was received from President Grant vetoing the bill reducing the salary of the President of the United States from $50,000 to $25,000. He takes the ground that the salary of $25,000, fixed when the population of the United States was but 3,000,000, is insufficient now that the population is 40,000,000. When the President's salary was $25,000 per annum the salary of members of Congress was fixed at $6 per day, averaging about $750 per annum. Congress has increased it from time to time, and now it is $5,000 per annum. The President says that no one who has lived in Washington can regard $25,000 as a sufficient salary for the Chief Magistrate, and, while it will make but little difference to him, justice toward his successor demands that he should veto the bill.

House.—In the House to-day the formal argument in the long list of contested election cases was begun. The first reached was that of Bromberg (white Democrat) vs. Haralson (colored Republican). It was decided in favor of the latter, the committee having unanimously reported that he was entitled to the seat. The case of Finlay vs. Walls (colored) was begun next, but not concluded.

Wednesday, April 19.—Senate.—There was a large and brilliant audiance present to witness the second day's proceedings of the impeachment trial. Belknap, accompanied by his counsel, appeared at half-past 12 o'clock, and took their seats. Five minutes before 1 o'clock, the House managers came in, and the prodeedings were at once begun. After reading the minutes, the replication of the House was presented by Manager Lord and read by the Secretary. After the reading was concluded, Carpenter said that Belknap desired a copy of the replication, and time until Monday, the 24th, to consider the same. Manager Lord said that the House managers desired to have the trial hastened as much as possible, for reasons not necessary to be stated, and therefore he asked that time be given until Friday, the 21st. Edmunds submitted an order giving the defense until next Monday, and that the House Managers file their answer thereto by Tuesday, the 25th, and that the trial proceed on Thursday, the 27th. This was agreed to, and the court then adjourned until the 27th....After the impeachment proceedings, the House bill to define the tax on fermented and malt liquors was passed....On motion of Thurman, the vote by which the bill in regard to the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President was passed was reconsidered, and the bill placed on the calendar.

House.—The Sergeant-at-arms reported that he had obeyed the writ of habeas corpus in the Hallett Kilbourn case, and that Kilbourn was ordered by the Judge into the custody of the Marshal....Baker, of Indiana, offered a resolution instructing the select committee on the real estate pool to investigate whether any members of the former Congress were connected with that pool while such members. Adopted....Whitthorne introduced a bill for refunding the interest-bearing debt of the United States in United States consols bearing four per cent. gold interest, and having forty years to run....O'Brien introduced a bill to provide for the coinage of Centennial coins. It provides for silver dollars and half-dollars, one side of the coins to give a corresponding value in coins of other principal commercial nations..... The contested election case from Florida, Walls vs. Finlay, was decided in favor of the latter....The Speaker laid before the House various executive documents, including an immense mass of paper done up in half a dozen huge packages, containing responses to calls for information as to shareholders in National banks....The executive session was devoted to the discussion of the bill to transfer the Indian bureau to the War department.

Thursday, April 20.—Senate.—A bill was passed to admit the Egyptian wedding present of diamonds to Mrs. Sherman-Fitch free of duty....Sargent submitted the following resolution: "That the Senate recommend to the President that he cause negotiations to be entered upon with the Chinese Government to effect such change in the existing treaty between the United States and China as will lawfully permit the application of restrictions upon the great influx of Chinese subjects to this country." Ordered printed and to lie on the table....The bill to amend the law relating to the legal tender of silver coin was discussed without action.

House.—The House indulged in another long debate on the bill to transfer the Indian bureau to the War department....Lawrence introduced a bill to limit the power of courts to punish for contempt, also to enlarge the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus....Singleton, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the Senate amendments to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, and moved that they be non-concurred in. Agreed to....Young offered a resolution requesting the President to order a military force to the Rio Grande for the protection of the frontier, and also requesting that he direct the General of the army to proceed in person to the scene of the threatened outbreak ...Cox, from the Committee on Rules, made a report on the case of Charles H. Smith, the journal clerk who issued a circular seeking business in the collection of additional bounty claims. The report reprehends severely the action of Smith, but, as he had resigned, no action was recommended....Cate offered a resolution directing an investigation into the charges affecting the official conduct of Secretary Bristow, in regard to the remission of a forfeiture in the case of the bark Mary Merritt, which was seized in Milwaukee, Wis., in June, 1869, for a violation of the customs laws. Adopted.

An Ancient Town.

San Antonio is the oldest city in Texas. Its history dates back two hundred years before the country was settled by Americans. The old Alamo, about two hundred years old, stands on the military plaza, and is still in a good state of preservation, being now occupied as a Government store-house. It was here the gallant Crocket and Bowie fell. San Antonio is the military headquarters for the southwest and perhaps the best business place in Texas.

Tremont A. Haines, twenty-six years old, a Providence medical student, committed suicide recently, by taking morphine, the effect of which he had noted every five minutes as long as he could write. He was originally from Maine. He had sung in different churches in Boston, and was once a member of the Parepa-Rosa opera company.

ALEXANDER T. STEWART.

Life and Character of the Deceased Merchant Prince—His Remarkable Mercantile Success—Reminiscences of his Career and Personal Habits.

[From the New York Tribune.]

The secret of his extraordinary success must be told in his own words: "My business has been a matter of principal from the start. That is all there is about it. If the golden rule can be incorporated into purely mercantile affairs, it has been done in this establishment, and you must have noticed, if you have observed closely, that the customers are treated precisely as the seller himself would like to be treated were he in their place. That is to say, nothing is misrepresented, the price is fixed, once and for all, at the lowest possible figure, and the circumstances of the buyer are not suffered to influence the salesman in his conduct in the smallest particular. What we cannot afford is violation of principle."

The hard, practical Scotch sense which these words indicate, and which was the strongest trait of his character, was in his blood. He was of Irish parentage, but more remotely of Scotch ancestry. His father was a prosperous and highly respected farmer, descended from a race of Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, whose industry, frugality, and precision the boy inherited in full measure. Alexander Turney Stewart was born in 1803, in the suburbs of Lisburn, an extensive manufacturing town about six miles from Belfast. Before he was eight years old his parents and older sister died, and he was left with only one near relative—his grandfather—who in his old age cherished the hope that he would live to hear his grandson preach from a Methodist pulpit. The boy had natural ability and methodical habits, and easily led his classes, finally taking a degree at Trinity College. His grandfather died, however, before the course of study was completed, and the young student was left without a relative. The grandfather had a worthy successor in a pious Quaker, who was appointed the young man's guardian. Under his guardian's advice he finished his course at the university, one of his tutors being the famous Sheridan Knowles. He was not one of the boisterous revelers of the university whose portraits Charles Lever has drawn with a bold hand. With a frame not robust, but lithe and active, he was a serious, painstaking student, who was always to be found reading in his room while his fellows were entertaining roysterers in their chambers.

He had graduated with honors, and was about 20 years of age, when he decided to emigrate to America. A trivial circumstance at the turning point of his life made him a merchant. A young man with whom he had become intimate applied to him for money wherewith to open a small dry goods store. He advanced the greater part of the small patrimony which he had brought to America; a small store was rented and stocked, but through an unforseen circumstance his friend, after all the preparations had been made, was unable to begin business. The pluck and energy which were the heritage of his Scotch-Irish ancestry came to the surface. In order that the money which he had already invested might not be lost, he resolved to carry on the business himself. He went back to Ireland, converted into money the moderate fortune which his father had left him, bought a stock of Belfast laces and returned to New York to open his store. The capital invested amounted to about $3,000, and in the Daily Advertiser of Sept. 2, 1825, appeared a modest advertisement announcing that A. T. Stewart offered for sale, at No. 283 Broadway, "a general assortment of fresh and seasonable dry goods." He had rented one-half of a store, with a frontage of twenty-five feet, exactly opposite the northern entrance of the present wholesale store of the firm, then the site of Washington Hall. In the rear of his shop, the rental of which was very low, the young merchant had a sleeping-room. Under these humble conditions was formed the germ of the most extensive dry goods business in the world.

Mr. Stewart's first customer was not only a lady but also a friend. On the day before the little shop was opened, in accordance with his modest announcement, a lady whose acquaintance he had made in the city said to him: "You must not sell anything on the morrow till I come and make the first purchase; for it will bring luck." The next morning she drove up in her carriage and purchased Irish laces and other goods worth nearly two hundred dollars. It was a good omen for the young merchant, and in the end it was a lucky investment for herself. The lady subsequently removed to a city on the continent, where Mr. Stewart found her in reduced circumstances, her husband having died after wasting her whole fortune. The merchant settled an annuity upon her, and during the rest of her life she lived in comfort.

Another incident, quite as interesting, is related of the first day's business. A woman came in to buy calico, and a clerk told her that the colors were fast and would not wash out. Mr. Stewart indignantly remonstrated with the salesman. "What do you mean by saying what you know to be untrue? The calico will fade; she will demand her money back, and she will be right. I don't want goods represented for what they are not." "Look here, Mr. Stewart," said the clerk, "if those are going to be your principles in trade, I'm going to look for another situation, You won't last long."

But Mr. Stewart did last. His favorite business principle was—one price for all. From this fixed price no salesman was allowed to depart; and no deceit or misrepresentation as to the quality of the goods was tolerated. He was led by instinct and early training to accept "Honesty is the best policy" as a sound business principle. There never was a merchant who put more conscience into his business than Mr. Stewart, and yet with him it was not so much conscience as it was common sense.

The two stores which Mr. Stewart built are among the proudest monuments of commercial enterprise in this country. The trade transacted in them is almost fabulous. The sales in the two establishments are said to have amounted to $203,000,000 in three years, and the income of Mr. Stewart has been the largest in the mercantile world. In 1863 his income was $1,900,000; in 1864, $4,000,000; in 1865, $1,600,000; in 1866, $600,000—an average of about $2,000,000 a year. When he was nominated for Secretary of the Treasury, he estimated his annual income at $1,000,000. The business of the house is world-wide. A foreign bureau has been established at Manchester, where English goods are collected, examined, and packed. At Belfast the firm has a factory where linens are bleached. At Glasgow the firm have a house for Scotch goods. In a magasin at Paris are collected East India, French, and German goods. The woolen house is in Berlin, and the silk warehouses are at Lyons. Payments are made at the Paris bureau, and all the continental business centers there. Then there are mills in Europe and the United States which manufacture goods exclusively for this firm, and there are buyers and agents who are constantly traveling from Hong Kong to Paris, from Thibet to Peru.

Mr. Stewart's benefactions were on the same large scale as his business. He gave as a prairie yields crops. Although he was American in all his instincts, his heart was warm toward his native island. When there was a famine in Ireland he sought for a ship. A British vessel was offered; he would have nothing but an American vessel. One was found with an American captain and an American crew, and was at once chartered. The vessel was loaded with provisions, and under the American flag entered the harbor of Belfast. The agent at Belfast was directed to advertise for young men and women who desired to go to America, and a free passage was given to as many as the vessel could carry, the only requirement being that each applicant should be of good moral character and able to read and write. A circular was issued by Mr. Stewart himself and sent to his numerous friends, stating the fact that he expected a large number of young people and asking employment for them. When the vessel reached the harbor of New York, places had been found for almost every one of the new emigrants.

After the Franco-German war, Mr. Stewart chartered a steamer and dispatched her to Havre with 3,800 barrels of flour for the relief of sufferers in manufacturing districts. One of the Paris newspapers, in commenting upon this gift at the time, said: "It is from a republic that such examples of generosity and true grandeur come to us. Can we show ourselves worthy of the sympathy of a people represented by such men?"

When Chicago was desolated by fire in 1871, Mr. Stewart gave $50,000 for the relief of the sufferers. A princely charity was his proposed home for working women on Fourth avenue, which is still unfinished. The building has cost $1,000,000. The main object was to furnish a building wherein lodging, food and warmth could be furnished at the lowest possible rates. Each working girl was to pay a fixed rate for lodging, the benevolence of the plan consisting in the fact that every one would secure more comfort than in a common hotel for less money than a squalid lodging in a tenement-house. Although Mr. Stewart was not considered generous to local charities, he gave in his own way. He had a Scotchman's hatred of professional beggars.

The public events in Mr. Stewart's life have been few in number. In 1867 he went to the Paris Exhibition as United States Commissioner. This was the only public office which he ever held. He was President Grant's first nominee for Secretary of the Treasury. A few days previous to the inauguration of the President, Mr. Stewart and his family, accompanied by Judge Henry Hilton and Gen. Daniel Butterfield, visited Washington and occupied apartments at the Ebbitt House, a private entrance on Fourteenth street, near Newspaper-row, being arranged for his personal convenience. It was understood at the time that only the objection made by Senator Sumner prevented his confirmation by the Senate. Late in the afternoon of the day on which the nominations were sent in, a rumor got abroad that there was a law, understood to have been really written by Alexander Hamilton while Secretary of the Treasury, prohibiting an importer in active business from holding the position of Secretary of the Treasury. A newspaper correspondent obtained the law bearing on the case and carried it to Gen. Butterfield, who conveyed it to Mr. Stewart and his legal adviser, Judge Henry Hilton, who was then with him at Washington. They immediately consulted Chief Justice Chase, and he confirmed the view which had been taken of the law by those who first brought it to Mr. Stewart's attention. It was understood at the time in Washington that Mr. Stewart proposed to retire from business and devote the entire profits that might accrue during the time that he should hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury to any charitable object which might be named. But this was decided to be a means which would not be proper either for him to carry out or for the Government to accept. Immediately after seeing Chief Justice Chase, Mr. Stewart and Judge Hilton drove to the White-house and laid the facts and the opinions before the President, who on the next day wrote a message to the Senate asking that the law of 1788 be set aside so as to enable the candidate to hold the office. This the Senate declined to do. It was a very natural ambition for a man of Mr. Stewart's tastes and training to desire to be at the head of the Treasury, and it is not unlikely that the disappointment was a very severe one.

Mr. Stewart has long been regarded as one of the richest men in the United States. Next to Cornelius Vanderbilt and the late William B. Astor, he was probably the richest. Mr. Vanderbilt invested in railroads from their first introduction in this country, and has amassed what is popularly supposed to be the largest private fortune in America, almost wholly in these productive stocks. Mr. Astor's great fortune of $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 was made, as is well known, almost wholly in real estate operations, in a city where such investments proved to be exceptionally and marvelously profitable. Mr. Stewart's fortune was made almost wholly in trade—his real estate transactions being subsidiary to his mercantile projects—and he took no interest in railway or other speculative stocks or operations. His fortune grew less rapidly than that of the others, being subjected to reverses of trade which that of the others did not feel; but it is generally estimated that he has left property to the amount of $50,000,000, and possibly more.

Revolution in European Turkey.

The news from European Turkey looks more like a general uprising of the Christian provinces against Mohammedan rule. Already the Governor of Bosnia is said to have advised the proclamation of a holy war against the Mohammedans. Such a suggestion, in spite of every effort to suppress it, will spread like wildfire throughout all the provinces, and will excite men to action who could not be reached in any other way. Herzegovina has already the active sympathy of those provinces which once suffered the same wrongs and attained quasi independence by revolt, as well as those that themselves need the relief for which Herzegovina is now struggling. Ever since the insurrection shaped itself, Herzegovina has had the moral support, and such surreptitious aid as could be given, from the adjoining provinces of Croatia, Montenegro, Bosnia and Servia. But now there are advices, which seem to be authoritative, that Bosnia and Servia will furnish troops, and really join in the revolution, if Austria will hold her hands off. This is the direct result of the encouragement that the provinces have received of late from Russia, conveyed through the inspired utterances of the Russian newspapers, the purport of which is that Russia will guarantee that there shall be no interference in the effort of the provinces for their own independence. If this assurance has been made in good faith, it may be reasonably expected that the revolt will speedily extend to all the provinces that are still ruled by Turkey, and that it will receive the active support of all those which have already achieved their independence. A war against Turkey prosecuted with the combined resources of Herzegovina, Croatia, Montenegro, Bosnia, Servia, Bulgaria, Wallachia and Moldavia, with Russia guarding the neutrality of other nations, there can be no question of its ultimate success, and the complete separation of all the territory known as European Turkey from the dominion of the Porte.

Such a war would likely have the result, in event of success, of the formation of a great Sclavonic empire, of which Hungary would naturally form a part. This is what Austria apprehends. Hungary is the main strength of the Austrian empire already, and a loss of its territory and resources would subject Austria proper to the serious danger of being absorbed by the German empire and losing its individuality and dignity altogether. In fact there are indications that Bismarck is looking forward to something of this kind, and that he will sustain the position taken by Russia, that there shall be no interference to assist Turkey in putting down the Christian revolt. In this case poor Austria would be helpless. The very danger of it may prevent her from any attempt at interference, and confine her partizanship to a refusal to permit the passage of supplies for the insurrectionists across her border. If this shall be the course of events (and the late dispatches certainly have such an appearance), Turkey will be forced to withdraw from all her jurisdiction in European territory, and lose the superior advantages she has had of squeezing a large part of her extravagant and riotous living out of her Christian dependencies, which has been a double satisfaction on account of the hatred the Turks cherish for the "Christian dogs." For the rest, a new and powerful empire in Eastern Europe would help wonderfully to preserve the balance of power.—Chicago Tribune.

A good deal has been said against chewing-gum by the press at large, but it holds its own evenly with the despised hand-organs. Certain Detroit boys now peddle the stick from house to house, and are allowed to go from parlor to basement and back, and sell to all. When he has been gone about fifteen minutes the lady of the house remarks: "'Manda, yum gum um tell Bessum whum to get for um dinner." "Yoh, u go," Amanda replies. "Bessum, yave chickum fum dinner," remarks the mother as she reaches the kitchen. "Yaus um, bileum yor roasum?" she asks, rolling her cud around.—Free Press.

T. C. MAIS, PUBLISHER.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

After Five Years.

Going? What, my friend, did it touch you so near,
This word of a woman?—let fall on an ear
Too eager forsooth,
By the gathered wood-laurel you flung at my feet,
Your swift look of anger was truly unmeet
For your playfellow Ruth.

In the years that are distant we played, it is true,
The winters away, in the snow, making, too,
The most of June's graces;
And mingled our voices in laughter and song,
And strayed with soft tread through the woods and among
The rocky hill passes.

But for bloom of the May buds one scarcely should seek
When the red heat of summer is on the year's cheek,
And her flowers are strong;
For the faint blush of dawning one lifts not his eyes
When the sun in its shining is high in the skies
And the days have grown long.

And the years have been many since the day that you passed
From the maples of Hampshire to climb the ship's mast
In the Indian Sea;
Yes, the years have been many since I rose in the morn
To bid you farewell in the yellowing corn
At the foot of the lea.

And now you return, and remembrance with you;
Outrunning discretion, you plunge a hand through
All the mists of the years, vainly groping to pick
The bud that you left on the bush. Ah! a prick
Has revealed you the truth,
That blossoms, and maidens may grow, sir, may grow
Into roses with thorns in their keeping, and lo!
Such growth is in Ruth.

Around the Farm.

A correspondent says no bird, rat or mouse will eat any vegetable substance that is well coated with red lead. He says he just damps the seeds, and then stirs a little of the lead among them until they get quite red.

Then we determined to try what virtue there was in cats. We intended to get one dozen, but before we had the first three for two months there was not a rat to be seen or heard on the place. Now, if your friend still has rats, let him try three cats, and if that don't do let him try six, etc.—Our Home Journal.

Mr. John C. Wise, one of the grasshopper commissioners of Minnesota, is confident that the blackbirds and prairie chickens do eat grasshopper eggs with great avidity. He claims that in some counties in that State they have destroyed the whole crop, and that they scratch for them as hens do for insects and the like.

The recent storm on the Pacific coast is said to have been very disastrous in California and Nevada. In the former State a great extent of young grain has been destroyed by floods, and in the latter the heavy snow-fall caused the death of thousands of cattle, the generally open winter leading the stockmen to neglect to provide shelter for them.

Here's a cow in a narrow stall—legs doubled under quite comfortably you might think. But look this way. Here's another cow with a seven-foot stall to stretch in. She lays with her hind legs sprawled out like a dog, and comfort expressed in every line of her face and form. A rabbit at ease will not lie in readiness to spring, and a cow likes to spread and stretch over her bed as well as we do.—Connecticut Courant.

A successful breeder of poultry says that he feeds Indian meal to his young chicks four times a day, and has not had a case of gapes for the last six years. He thinks that impure water is the principal cause of that disease. Corn meal dampened with water, or corn, cracked as for hominy, and fed dry, is excellent food for chickens. Sulphur will destroy hen lice proper, but not what are called "jiggers." The latter look very like small spiders.

Quinces can be raised as easily as apples or pears in the way we shall describe. There is no secret about it. Get the "Orange" variety; see that they are entirely free of the borer before planting. Set six or eight feet apart in rich soil. Bandage the stem with two or three wrappings of old muslin, or any kind of cloth, as far down in the ground as possible, as the roots start from near the surface. Let the bandages run six or eight inches above the ground, then pack the soil compactly a couple of inches around the bandage, and renew this every spring. Fine, large, golden quinces, rivaling the largest oranges, will bless you annually.

"A milch cow," writes an American dairyman, "should be quiet and contented. She will have to be petted and made much of. This influences her domesticity, and that, in the milch cow, seems to be allied to the maternal feeling which prompts to lacteal secretion. But whether this is so or not, certain it is that where a single cow is petted and taken care of there is a great increase in the milk over her former yield when kept in the herd. I have known quite a number of such cases. I never knew one that did not show this improvement. Treat each of the members of the herd like the one taken from it and kept as a single cow, and the whole herd would be improved. It would be improved to such an extent as could not well be done by mere selection. My experience has revealed to me the fact that our native cows, which form the staple of our dairies, are capable of great improvement, probably because they came of good blood originally when brought over, but have been abused or permitted to run down. It needs only good treatment to bring them up to a good point."

About the House.

Rice Omelet.—One teacup boiled sweet milk, three eggs well beaten, tablespoonful butter; bake to a light brown. Too much cooking spoils it.

Hair Restorative.—A tea, made by pouring one pint of boiling water on two table-spoonfulls of dried rosemary leaves, with a wine-glassful of rum added, is excellent.

To Soften the Hands.—Before retiring, take a large pair of old gloves and spread mutton tallow inside, also all over the hands. Wear the gloves al night and wash the hands with olive oil and white castile soap the next morning.

Potato Soup.—Eight potatoes, two turnips, four large onions, boiled (together, in beef, mutton, or poultry water) to a jam; then strained through a colander, then add butter rubbed in flour (a little) with cream or sweet milk, pepper and salt; chopped parsley in the bottom of the tureen; let soup boil up well, then pour over the parsley.

If the globes on a gas fixture are much stained on the outside by smoke, soak them in tolerably hot water in which a little washing soda has been dissolved. Then put a teaspoonful of powdered ammonia in a pan of lukewarm water and with a hard brush scrub the globes until the smoke stains disappears. Rinse in clean cold water. They will be as white as if new.

Cup Cake.—For cup cake, use three eggs, two cups of sugar, two and one-half cups of flour, three-fourths of a cup of butter, one cup of water, and two teaspoonfuls of baking-powder. Flavor with one teaspoonful of extract of lemon or vanilla. For frosting the cake, use nine heaping teaspoonfuls of pulverized white sugar to the white of one egg, half a teaspoonful of extract of lemon. The whites of two eggs will be sufficient for one large cake. Beat the whites to a fine stiff broth, and stir in the sugar slowly; beat all together well, and spread over the cake with a knife. Set the cake in a warm place to dry.

Ground stoppers sometimes stick fast in bottles or decanters. The heat of the fingers in working them renders them still more fast. If the neck of the bottle is warmed by a cloth wrung out of hot water, the stopper will loosen immediately. Nuts on large screws are sometimes in a similar fix, and may be removed in the same way. A nut required to keep its place firmly, if first heated, may be fastened on more securely, and with less injury to the thread, than by the most forcible screwing.

Johnson's Revenge.

John Prince Johnson had an object in getting drunk. John Prince Johnson's wife is not more than nine-tenths angel, according to his story, and he wanted revenge on her. The other day she said to him:

"Get up and dust and go out and work and earn some cash and help me pay the rent and buy wood and keep something in the cupboard."

That was a nice way for a loving wife to talk to a fat husband with a bald spot on his crown. He wanted to sit around and get his breath for the spring campaign, but she didn't seem to care if he worked himself to death. He looked at her across the stove and replied:

"Florinda Jane, I'll make you feel bad for saying them words," and he put on his boots and went out into the cold world. When his Honor asked the prisoner if he had any excuse for being drunk, John Prince Johnson looked greatly pleased and replied:

"None at all. Fine me $5 and she'll have to pay it out of her own money!"

That was his plan to secure revenge. His Honor also seemed tickled when he heard it, and he made the sentence for six months or $50 fine. When John Prince Johnson heard the words his legs gave out and his teeth chattered. He said he had a lame leg, the asthma, a touch of consumption and a taste of dyspepsia, but nevertheless he would go right out and tear up ground and throw bricks around and strike a job if the court would let him off. The court wouldn't do it, and Mrs. Johnson, who was in the audience, went out doors, saying:

"He may howl, and rave, and perspire and expire, but right up there is where he'll roost till his time is out!"—Free Press.

A Slight Mistake.

A slim gentlemen of rather seedy appearance, with a bag in his hand, called at a Danbury bank on Saturday, and asked to see the cashier. The boy took a good look at the party, whom he saw to be a traveling agent of some kind, and then went into the back room with information. He returned and said the cashier was very busy just now. The stranger set his bag down, and, leaning against the wall, prepared to wait.

"He'll have a good time if he waits till Mr. C—— comes out here," whispered the boy to the teller.

"You bet," replied the teller with a jocular wink.

But the man waited. Years of experience, perhaps, had taught him the wonderful sublimity of waiting. Once the cashier appeared in the door, but seeing the bore still there he precipitately retreated. Shortly after he fled over to the other bank to tell the cashier of the way he had outwitted the book fiend. He had been there but a minute or two when the slim man appeared and asked for the cashier. The official of that bank was obliged to admit his presence.

"I want to make a deposit of $5,000," said the slim man. "I was going to take it to the other bank, but I got tired waiting for the cashier to come in."

The cashier for whom he had waited shot back to his own institution, and when he got hold of that boy he gave him a clearer idea of singing sounds than he ever had before or will, perhaps, ever have again.—Danbury News.

Death of an Unfortunate Sovereign.

Leo XIII., ex-King of Armenia, has just died in a state of wretched poverty in a hospital at Milan. This king was stripped of his earthly possessions and banished from his kingdom by the Czar of Russia, who was, at first, charitable enough to pay him a small pension. For some time past, however, the pension was cut off, the Czar having reached the conclusion that it was best to let his majesty shift for himself in the struggle of existence. Of course, the only shifting the poor, unacclimated outcast could do was to pawn all the little trinkets of past royalty remaining to him, and this he did in behalf of bread. Finally, he had nothing more to pawn, and died, leaving a widow and several very interesting young Armenian ex-subjects. A collection has been taken up for them by the hospital authorities. Yet this poor sovereign was of very high and noble lineage, having numbered among his ancestors no less than twenty-five kings who wore crowns; five were emperors of the East, three kings of Jerusalem, and seventeen kings of Cyprus.

A Georgia exchange recently headed a marriage announcement! "Cramp Kollock." He was the cramp, and she—the other party.

THE OSAGE LANDS.

An Important Decision by the Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme court has recently rendered a decision in the Osage land case, affirming the settlers in their right to lands pre-empted in Kansas. Great exertions have been made by the railroad lobbies to carry this case. The decision, which releases 960,000 acres to settlers, involves the largest land interest ever adjudicated in an American court. Under certain acts of Congress passed in March, 1863, and July, 1866, grants of land in Kansas were made in the usual form in aid of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas and the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston railroad companies. At the time these grants were made the Osage Indians held a large tract of rich and valuable land in Kansas known as the Osage reservation. The Osages deeded their land to the United States by a treaty proclaimed on January 1, 1867, the Government undertaking to sell that portion known as the Osage treaty land, about 960,000 acres, the proceeds to be applied to the general civilization of the Indians. Another portion of the land was called the Osage trust land, and this was to be sold for the benefit of the Osages themselves, and the third portion was called the diminished reservation, which remained in possession of the Osages until recently when by an arrangement with the tribe this diminished portion was also sold and the Osages went to the Indian territory. On April 10, 1869, Congress passed a law authorizing the sale of the Osage ceded lands to actual settlers at $1.25 per acre, and under this act settlers entered the ceded lands. The railroads then set up a claim that these lands belonged to them by virtue of the acts of March, 1863, and July, 1866. They claim that, although when the acts were passed, these lands did not pass under the grant, that the grant attached when the Indian title was extinguished. Atty. Gen. Williams, at the instance of Congressman Lawrence, of Ohio, authorized a suit to be brought in the name of the United States vs. the railroad companies to adjudge that they were not entitled to the lands. The case was decided by Justice Miller, of the Supreme court, and Judge Dillon, of the Kansas District court in January, 1874, the decision being against the railroads and in favor of the settlers, to protect whom the suit was brought by the Government. The railroads appealed the case to the Supreme court before which it was argued last October by Judge Black and Mr. Lawrence for the settlers, and Col. Philips and Senator Edmunds for the railroad companies. There are now on these ceded lands a population of at least 150,000 people, possessing schools, churches, and various industrial establishments. A decision in favor of the railroad companies would have abrogated the title of these to their property, which was regularly purchased from the United States.

On the Battlefield.

A recent writer truly says: I believe no two good soldiers will widely disagree as to their sensations during a battle. I take it to be a piece of bravado in any man to assert that he had no fear during the progress of a long and severe engagement. A battle is a veritable hell upon earth; not to be in serious apprehension while it lasts is to be either drunk, crazy or insensible. The highest type of bravery is that of the man who realizes the full extent of the peril, but sticks resolutely to his duty. It was my experience, and that of all those about me, repeated a dozen times, that shell firing is not ordinarily nearly so demoralizing as that of musketry. It is not often that shell are thrown so that their fragments scatter death and wounds, and their loud humming overhead does not cause that nervous tingling which always follows the sharp zip of the rifle bullet. The peculiar cutting of the air made by half a dozen of these at once is apt to give the soldier the idea that the whole air is filled with them, and that he is certain to be struck by one of them.

On Contract.

A long, slim colored man rested on his snow-shovel in front of a house on Miami avenue and mused:

"James, you is a fool! What fur? Why, for contractin' to keep dis walk cl'ar of snow for de season for $5.00."

He threw up a few more loads, warmed his fingers, and went on:

"You thought you had a soft thing on de contract business when all de snow what fell in 'Cember, January and February didn't take three hours' work to cl'ar off. Oh! you is mighty peart, you is! Here's half a day's work and snow comin' down by de cart-load!"

He dug about three feet further, and then suddenly uttered a yell and called out:

"James, you is all right—your head am de levelest kind o' level! It was five dollars for de winter season, while heah de sun has crossed de line a whole week ago, and dis snow haint your business at all! You isn't no fool, James—you shoulder dat snow-plow and walk right home!"—Detroit Free Press.

Shamed Him.

A woman, who apparently hailed from the rural districts, followed her liege lord into a bar-room yesterday. She wanted to shame him from taking a smile by first ordering one for herself. She laid down a $1 bill, and said that she would "take sugar in hers." Her husband said that he would take some of the same, and she drained her glass like a toper and called for another, and that seemed to tickle her palate so that she continued to call for drinks. Her husband seemed to be shocked, but took a glass every time the wife did, saying that he would not be outdone by any woman, much less his own frau. After drinking several glasses they staggered out on the sidewalk. She popped herself on the top of a barrel, but he chose the pavement for a seat, as that required no exertion to reach. And there they sat, both perfectly under the influence of too much fire-water, a lovely, free-and-easy pair.—Austin (Tex.) Gazette.

It is said that corn loses one-fifth and wheat one-fourteenth by drying. From this estimate it seems that it would be more profitable to the farmer to sell unshelled corn in the fall, at seventy-five cents per bushel, than to keep it until spring and sell at $1, and that wheat at $1.25, in December, is equal to $1.50 the succeeding June. In case of potatoes, taking those that rot and are otherwise lost, together with the shrinkage, there is little doubt that between October and June, the loss to the owner that holds them is not less than thirty-three per cent.

Gen. Santa Anna in his Old Age.

He lives in the city of Mexico, in a third rate house of two stories, with courts of not more than twenty feet square, the pavement out of repair, the whole telling the story of poverty. He was seated on a much-worn sofa, attended by a smart-appearing Mexican of middle age, and rose, with some difficulty, in receiving us. He complained considerably of his wooden leg, and also of blindness.

He is an old man of eighty years, very decrepit, yet in full command of his faculties; has a good head and face, not unlike the pictures of Humboldt in old age, with broad temples, and an abrupt, square nose, and, at one time, good eyes. He had little to say, but appeared pleased at our visit; and, as we told him of the four or five general officers of the Mexican war still living, he listened with interest, but showed no special recognition until the name of Pillow was mentioned, whom he remembered perfectly.

Over the sofa where Santa Anna sat was the picture of a beautiful woman in her fullness of youth and loveliness. This was his wife when both led the fortunes of Mexico. As we passed out the court our attention was called to the figure of a woman of fifty in the window opposite, in plain dress, and devoid of any interesting attribute. This was she whose picture had so interested us, Mrs. Gen. Santa Anna.—Correspondence of the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Chicago Falls Heir to Several Million Dollars.

The Chicago Tribune says: "The news has been received of the death in Rome of Miss Julia B. Newberry, daughter of the late Walter L. Newberry. Through this event the North division will some time be honored with a magnificent library. The late Mr. Newberry left an estate clear of all incumbrance, consisting chiefly of real estate, and valued even at the present depreciated prices at $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. A large portion of it is unproductive, but the income is upward of $100,000 a year. One-third of this goes to Mrs. Newberry, the widow, as her dower, and the remainder, now that the heirs are dead, is to accumulate until after Mrs. Newberry's death, when one-half of the whole estate will be devoted to founding a free public library in the North Division.

A Fool and His Gun.

There is a familiar strain running through this incident, related by the Barnwell (S. C.) Sentinel: "On Wednesday morning last Willie Kelly, son of Mr. James Kelly, of Blackville, went out gunning. Upon his return he met young Jack O'Neil, who was a clerk in the store of P. W. Farrell, Esq., and who asked him if he had killed anything. Young Kelly drew his gun and remarked good-naturedly, 'No, but I'll kill you,' and to the lad's horrible surprise his gun went off half-cocked, the load taking effect in young O'Neil's side, causing instant death."

Newspaper Blankets.

A very cheap blanket can be made by stitching two or three thicknesses of newspapers between two sheets. Such a blanket will be as warm as a much thicker one, as paper is an excellent non-conductor. A large newspaper placed between the folds of a thin shawl will make it as warm as a thick shawl or cloak. Paper wrapped around the feet outside of the stockings will add much to comfort on a cold day by retaining the natural heat. A paper or two spread between the covers of a bed in an emergency will serve the purpose of an additional blanket.

The Timber Supply.

The forests of Europe are estimated as being 500,000,000 acres in extent. In North America 1,460,000,000 acres are covered with trees, of which are 900,000,000 are in British North America. In South America forests occupy 700,000,000 acres. The proportion of forest land to the whole area of Europe is computed at twenty per cent.; in America twenty-one. Supposing, therefore, twenty per cent. to be the proportion in Asia, Africa and Australia, the grand total of the forests of the world cover a space of 7,784,000 geographical miles.

A River of Ink.

In Algeria there is a river of genuine ink. It is formed by the union of two streams, one coming from a region of ferruginous soil, the other draining a peat swamp. The water of the former is strongly impregnated with iron, that of the latter with gallic acid. When the two waters mingle the acid of the one unites with the iron of the other, forming a true ink. We are familiar with a stream called Black brook in the northern part of this State, the inky color of whose water is evidently due to a like condition.—Scientific American.

George Beedle shot at Sheriff Newton, in Afton, N. Y., the other day, but a law book in the Sheriff's hands stopped the bullet after it had gone through fifty leaves. Law books are good for something, after all.

INDIANA ITEMS.

Mr. C. A. Reineking, one of the prominent dry goods dealers in New Albany, has failed.

Track-laying has commenced at Bedford, on the Bedford and Bloomfield narrow-gauge railroad.

The residence of S. E. Knapp, a printer, at Rockville, was totally destroyed by fire one night last week. The loss was $1,500.

Work has commenced on the Second German Lutheran church, at Michigan City, an imposing structure, which will cost about $12,000.

A wife in Delaware county has filed a complaint against a Muncie saloon-keeper under the present liquor law, claiming damages to the amount of $5,000.

Frank Brewster, a drug clerk of Fortville, was dangerously shot in the shoulder, the ball ranging downward, while taking part in a senseless charivari of a newly married couple the other night. The shot was carelessly fired by one of the party.

At Terre Haute, one day last week, Thos. Grace, who was arrested the previous night with delirium tremens, and released, inflicted fatal injuries upon himself with a hammer.

Linton Brown, of Bradford, about twenty years of age, shot himself in the left breast one night last week. He is not expected to live. No cause is known why he committed the deed.

A man named F. Calkins, stopping at the Lake house, in Michigan City, attempted suicide a few nights since by taking strychnine, but was pumped out by the medical men. He was "tired of life," he said.

A case of suicide is believed to have transpired at Westville, a short time since, when a middle-aged man, supposed to be John Newan, was found dead, lying in a pool of water. He had on his person a pawn-ticket from A. Cohen's pawn-shop, Indianapolis, for a trunk and satchel.

Milford had a fire, one night last week, that destroyed property valued at $30,000. The insurance will not cover one-tenth of the loss. The principal sufferers are Wellbaum, store-rooms; Jones Miller, shoe-store; Mrs Mullin and Gilkinson, millinery; and Mr. Wellbaum, dwelling. The cause is believed to have been incendiary.

Two little boys of Mr. Broaduss, of Kent, aged eight and ten years, were playing with a gun supposed to be empty, the elder capping one barrel and pretending to shoot the younger. The younger then attempted to perform the same on him with the other barrel, which proved to be loaded. The gun was fired, the charges taking effect in the side of the elder, badly wounding him. It is impossible for him to live.

A late letter from Logansport says: "C. B. Porter, of Marion, Ind., arrived here to-day, searching for his brother, W. H. Porter, who left home at Marion a few day's since, came to this city, and communicated by letter to his relations his unalterable intention to commit suicide. All trace of him is lost here, and it is supposed he has drowned himself in Wabash river. Three hundred dollars is offered for the recovery of his body."

Murder will out. Two colored men had an altercation at Patoka, one morning last week, and in the heat of it one implicated the other in the murder of William Hughes, whose body was found terribly mangled and torn along the track near the bridge there about eighteen months ago, having been run over by a night train. The circumstances at the time led to the belief that a murder had been committed, but no evidence was found until now.

A horrible accident occurred on the farm of Fletcher Brooks, near Rainsville, Warren county, eight miles north of Attica, on Thursday of last week, by which two men lost their lives. One man named Burch went down into a well and was overcome by choke-damp. Brooks went to his rescue, and both perished. Brooks was a brother of the Rev. Charles Brooks, the presiding elder of the Greencastle district, and leaves a wife and one child.

An inquest was held at Plymouth, a few days since, on the body of a man found floating in the river about a mile south of that city. From a memorandum found in his pocket he is supposed to be Jacob Bardon. He was evidently a German. Weight probably 180 pounds; height, five feet, nine inches; dark hair, heavy sandy beard, and probably 30 years of age. The body was buried immediately after the inquest. No marks of violence were perceptible.

The Silver Bill.

The following is the text of the bill for the issue of silver coin in place of fractional currency, which recently passed both houses of Congress:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated out of the money in the treasury, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $163,000 to provide for engraving, printing, and other expenses of making and issuing United States notes, and the further sum of $48,000 to provide for the engraving and printing of National bank notes, to be disbursed under the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue silver coins of the United States of the denominations of ten, twenty, twenty-five, and fifty cents of standard value, in redemption of an equal amount of fractional currency, whether the same be now in the treasury awaiting redemption, or whenever it may be presented for redemption, and the Secretary of the Treasury may, under the regulations of the Treasury department, provide for such redemption, and issue by substitution at the regular sub-treasuries and depositories of the United States until the whole amount of fractional currency outstanding shall be redeemed; and the fractional currency redeemed under this act shall be held to be a part of the sinking fund provided for by the existing law, the interest to be computed thereon as in case of bonds redeemed under the acts relating to the sinking fund.

The Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme court has decided to adjourn on the second Monday in May, and no arguments will be heard after Friday, April 28. The court is still running largely behind, being unable to dispose of the business already on hand. This will be larger at the adjournment than ever before. The McCreery bill to relieve the court by increasing the money limit involved, and by establishing a court of appeals, which passed the House several months ago, is still in the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, where it seems likely to remain.

Reminiscences for the Centennial.

The following facts respecting the personality of the illustrious men who imperilled their [illegible], their liberty, and their lives by [illegible] their signatures to that instrument which established our national independence will be read with interest as the Centennial anniversary of the day which witnessed the act draws near:

The thirteen States then comprising the American colonies were represented in the assemblage that passed the measure by fifty-one members. Thirty-seven enjoyed the benefits of collegiate training, twenty were lawyers, four were physicians, five were clergymen, three were farmers, and the remainder were engaged in various mercantile pursuits, except Roger Sherman, the shoemaker, and Benjamin Franklin, who boasted of being a printer, yet was a statesman and a philosopher. Benjamin Franklin was the oldest among the members and Edward Rutledge the youngest. Robert Morris was the most opulent, and was the financier of the administration, negotiating extensive loans for the use of the Government upon his personal credit. He died in prison, having been incarcerated for debt; a beautiful commentary on those laws that made no discrimination between the honest but unfortunate debtor and the convicted felon. Daniel Adams was the most needy, his impoverished condition being well known. The management of his pecuniary affairs made it necessary for him to seek a burial at the public expense. Josiah Bartlett was the first to vote for the measure, and first after President Hancock to sign the document. Two of the number, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, were subsequently Presidents. It is a remarkable fact that these two men, having been Presidents, associated on the committee that framed the Declaration of Independence, and the first recognized leaders of two great political factions of our country, died on the same day, the 4th of July, 1826—the fiftieth anniversary of the day upon which they had contributed so much to the welfare of their countrymen. Charles Carroll was the only member that added his place of residence, and the reason of its being done in this instance is somewhat peculiar. The patriots that formed that convention knew full well that by their action on that day they hazarded their lives. When Carroll was signing some one near him remarked, "He will get off; there are so many Carrolls they will not know which to take." "Not so," replied he, and immediately added "of Carrollton." He lived to see all the memorable men with whom he acted on that eventful day pass away, and enjoyed the prosperity of his country until 1832, when he died in his ninety-fifth year.—Boston Journal.

It Was "Porous."

While a clerk in a Detroit hardware store was one morning setting things to rights for the business of the day, a citizen with gray locks and self-satisfied look dropped in and kindly asked:

"Have you any four-quart porous kettles?"

"Porous kettles?" mused the clerk. "I never heard of them."

"What do you call these?" demanded the citizen as he nosed around and held up a kettle.

"That's a porcelain kettle, sir," was the reply; "that's what you want, is it?"

"That's what I want if it is a porous kettle," said the citizen.

"We call 'em porcelain," replied the clerk.

"What right have to call them so? Why don't you call a dog a cat?"

"But how can iron be porous?" humbly inquired the clerk.

"How can a young man be a fool!" shouted the citizen. "It has come to a pretty pass when a boy of your age attempts to teach a man of my years anything! Don't you suppose I know the difference between porcelain and porous?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, then, here's your seventy-five cents for this porous kettle, and I'd like to have it sent around to the house right away."

The clerk had to submit. He says that a rich man can do anything, while a poor clerk is kept down.—Detroit Free Press.

A Frenchman's English.

Our readers have doubtless heard of the Frenchman who so sadly misused shall and will. Falling in a river, he cried out, "I will drown; nobody shall help me." But it is hard work for many to whom English "comes by nature," to use these words correctly.

Another Frenchman was sorely puzzled by the usual English salutations. In French the ordinary salutation is "Comment vous portez-vous?" literally, "How do you carry yourself?" It is significant of national character, for deportment, or one's physical carriage, is very important in France. A friend one day asked this Frenchman, who had begun to speak English:

"How do you do?"

"Do vat?"

"I mean how do you find yourself?"

"Saire, I never loses myself."

"But how do you feel?"

"Smooth; you just feel me."

Exportation of American Prints.

The export of American prints to Europe is increasing. The trade which has grown up with Liverpool and Manchester is only the beginning. It has attracted the attention of merchants in other countries, and already representatives of Russian and Turkish houses are visiting our markets to purchase goods. It is well known that some kinds of prints are cheaper here than in Manchester, and the possibility of developing a considerable trade in these with Eastern merchants is certainly promising. The East Indian trade in goods of certain grades is also increasing, warranting the hope that at no distant day we shall be able to furnish our quota of manufactures to the markets of the world.—New York Graphic.

At the Exeter (Eng.) Assizes a schoolmaster named Starbridge has been sentenced to five years' penal servitude for brutally flogging a youth who failed to complete his exercise in arithmetic. In consequence of the punishment inflicted the boy has lost the sight of one eye.

Sensible Advice.

You are asked every day through the columns of newspapers and by your Druggist to use something for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint that you know nothing about, you get discouraged spending money with but little success. Now to give you satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will cure you of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint with all effects, such as Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, Heart-burn, Water-brash, coming up of food after eating, low spirits &c., we ask you to go to your Druggist and get a Sample bottle of Green's August Flower for 10 cents and try it, or a Regular Size for 75 cents two doses will relieve you.

The Sun gives the following letter, supposed to have been sent to Dom Pedro by Blane:

YOUR MAJESTY: I take advantage of the occasion of your visit to this country to explain my disposal of the $64,000 about which there is at this time some impertinent curiosity.

One-half of the sum which came into my hands was given by me in charity to a constituent of mine, a poor widowver, with seven grown-up sons.

The other moiety I unfortunately left at home upon the piano.

Your Majesty will therefore see that the transaction had no political significance. I trust you will be able to give me your support for the Cincinnati namination.

Yours truly, JAMES G. BLAINE.

Jim

Wha-at—Jim?
Jim Blaine!
Got him?—
Great Cain!
Jim Blaine
Of the State of Maine,
Smartest cuss in or out of the rain—
Got him?
Our Jim,
Cheeky Jim,
Full to the brim
Of brass and sass, and pluck and vim—
Got him?
Why he's the festive little pill
That went through catawampous Hill
And made the chivalry so ill;
He stole Ulysses's little squirt,
And put on Morton's bloody shirt;
Hammered Conkling's bump of gumption
Walloped Hayes out of resumption,
Whitened Butler's gory lock,
And put a black eye on Sam Cox,
Got him!
Our Jim—
Jim Blaine
Of the State of Maine;
Will somebody please explain?

The Republican papers have uniforly derided the efforts of the Democratic House of Representatives to make a wholesome retrenchment in the public expenditures. They have decried all economical measures introduced, as parsimonious and impolitic. They have not stopped at this, but have maliciously lied about the work of the Democrats in the field of reform. Lately on account of the exhaustion in nine months of the appropriation made by the last Republican Congress for twelve months supplies there are several custom houses and post-offices without a fund to draw upon for fuel and lights. The Republican press has misrepresented this as a result of Democratic economy, while the responsibility should rest upon Republican shoulders. The appropriation for lighting and heating public buildings was estimated and allowed by the Republicans. The year will not end until June 30, and if the funds intended to last until that time have been already used up it is easy to see where the blame should rest.

A Serious Joke.

There is a young gentleman in this town who is looked upon as a sort of a woman-hater and who, it is believed, positively would not marry any [illegible] every [illegible] dismissed. On account of this, some young ladies concluded to put a job on this young man, and arranged it for one of their number to propose marriage to him, while the others watched the fun through some [illegible]. The gentleman was invited to call at the house of the young lady who was to do the proposing, and on the designated evening, he was there, seated in the parlor, while the accessories to the plot were stationed in their spy-holes. After some desultory conversation about the weather and [illegible] party, the young lady suddenly dropped on her knees before the gentleman and in endearing terms declared her passion.

"Darling," she said, "I long have loved thee, but the cruel conventionalities of society have forced me to conceal my passion. Leap year, which gives to oppressed woman [illegible] privilege, is now here, and I take advantage of it to tell thee I adore thee. Look not thus coldly on [illegible] not from your presence [illegible] my bended knees imploring [illegible] will not say me nay. [illegible] from those ruby lips; fold me in those arms and say that thou [illegible] mine, only mine, forever and for aye."

Contrary to expectation the gentleman displayed not the least embarrassment during the foregoing recital, and when it was concluded he went over to the stove, and folding his hands under his coattail, thus replied:

"I'm told your dad owns 100 shares of North Carson, and that you've got two brindle bull-dogs in your own right, and without encumbrance. [illegible] I am informed that you are a good hand at making slapjacks and biscuit, that you don't chaw gum, which, by the way, is powerful expensive these hard times. In view of these facts I consent, and leave it to you to name the day."

Horrified beyond expression, the lady tried to explain that it was but a joke, but the gentleman would not accept any such explanation, and threatens a breach of promise suit unless she fulfills her promise, in which event he will summon the peepers as witnesses.

The Candidates.

Mr. J. D. Williams, who has been nominated for Governor by the Democratic State Convention, has been prominently identified with Indiana politics for the past twenty-five years, during the most of which time he has served in the State Legislature having been sevearl times re-elected to both houses. He is by occupation a farmer, and owns a large farm near Wheatland Knox county where he has resided during the greater part of his life. In 1874 he was elected to Congress from the Second District, and has made a very useful member. His personal appearance is very striking and in form and features he bears a wonderful resemblance to President Lincoln. He is much the same stamp of a man as ex-Governor Allen of Ohio, and by the way, the two are just of the same age—sixty-eight years. He was born in Ohio in 1808. Mr. Williams is familiarly called "Blue-jeans Jimmy on account of his always wearing clothes made of that domestic material. He is strong and vigorous despite his year, and will make an excellent canvass, especially in the rural districts. His long experience in State legislation well qualifies him for the position which he will undoubtedly be elected to fill.

Col. Isaac P. Gray,

Who has received the nomination for Lieutenant Governor is a prominent lawyer of Union City Randolph county and represented that county in the State Senate in 1871. He was formely a Republican but joined the Greely movement in 1872, and finally became a pronounced Democrat. He is forty-six years of age and is in every way fitted to make an excellent President of the Senate. He is an eloquent and effective speaker and will do good work in the canvass.—Logansport Pharos.

Democratic Platform.

The Democracy of Indiana declare their fidelity to all the provisions of the federal constitution, to a perpetual union of the States; to local self-government in every section; to all public trusts and obligations; to the honest payment of the public debt; to the preservation of the public faith; to the maintenance of free schools, and to the pure and economical administration of the federal State, and municipal government. They contemplate with alarm the distress that prevails, the widespread financial ruin that impends over the people, and the corruption that pervades the public service, and they charge that these evils are the direct result of the personal government, unwise legislation, vicious financial policy the great contraction of the currency, and the extravagance and selfishness of the party and its officials who have so long held unchecked control. Inviting all who believe in and earnestly desire official purity and fidelity, the adjustment of financial questions upon a sound basis having a regard for the interests and welfare of the whole people and not a class, and the recognition of the final settlement of all questions submitted to the arbitrament of the sword to unite with them they declare:

1. That the civil service of the government has become corrupt and it is made an object of personal gain and that it is the first duty of the people themselves and the government to require tests of honesty, capacity, and fidelity in the selection of persons to fill all public positions.

2. The reported exposure of corruption in the administration of every branch of public affairs call for a continued and thorough investigation, not only that the corrupt practices may be brought to light and the guilty parties to punishment but also that it may be made clear to the people that their only remedy for reform is by making a general and thorough change.

3. That retrenchment and economy are indispensable in Federal State, and municipal administration as an essential means toward lessening the burdens of the people and we commend the efforts of the majority of the House of Representatives for the reduction of the expenses of the federal government to a just standard, and their determination to lessen the number of useless officers.

4. We believe in our ancient doctrine that gold and silver are the true and safe basis of the currency and we are in favor of measures and policies that will produce uniformity in value in coin and paper money of the country without destroying or embarrassing the business interests of the people.

5. We oppose the contraction of the volume of our paper currency and declare in favor of the adoption of measures looking to the gradual retirement of the circulation of the national banks and the substitution therefor of the circulating notes issued by the authority of the government.

6. We recognize with patriotic satisfaction the boundless recuperative energies with which our country is endowed and observe that in spite of the interference with the laws of commerce which has been practiced our currency has improved in proportion as our wealth has increased and the sense of national and local security has been confirmed. We are therefore of the opinion that a natural return to specie payments will be promoted by the increase of national wealth and industries, by the assurance of harmony at home and peace abroad, and by strengthening our public credit under a wise and economical administration of our national affairs.

7. That legal-tender notes constitute a safe currency, and one especially valuable to the debtor classes because of its legal tender quality and we demand the repeal of the legislation enacted by the Republican party providing for its withdrawal from circulation and the substitution therefor of national bank paper.

8. The act of Congress for the resumption of specie payments on Jan. 1, '79 was a party measure devised in secret caucus for party ends, and forced thro' the House of Representatives without the allowance of an amendment or debate under party discipline. It paralyzes industry, creates distrust of the future, turns the laborer and producer out of employment is a standing threat upon business men, and should at once be repealed without any condition whatever.

9. As Democrats we may indulge in laudable pride at the great success of our common school system which has its origin in the Democratic policy and its development in Democratic measures. We will stand by and forever maintain our constitutional provision which guarantee our common school from diminution and misappropriation, and its use only to support non-sect-arian common schools and we denounce as enemies of the schools the Republicans, who for party-ends have sought to bring them into political and sectarian controversy.

10. We believe that a license law properly guarded is the true principle in legislation upon the liquor traffic.

11. It is not right for any political party to make the just claims of the union soldier, their wives and children, the subject of partisan controversy for such right are most secure when protected by all the people and are endangered only when thrown into the political arena by demagogues.—We will stand by and maintain their rights to honors to pensions and to equal bounties not as partisans but because it is our pleasure and duty as citizens.

12. That the jurisdiction of the federal courts in civil causes has been so extended as to become burdensome to the people in increased expense and compelling them to try their causes at places remote from their homes.

13 We approve the bill which recently passed the House of Representatives prohibiting members of Congress and all officers and employees of the United States from contributing money to influence elections.

14. We are opposed to the assumption by congress of the debts of the District of Columbia which were contracted by the late corrupting and we believe the government should pay over equal just proportions for local improvement, the same as other owners of property and no more.

15. That the people of Indiana recognise with pride and pleasure the eminent public services of Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks; that in all public trusts he has been faithful to his duty, and in his public and private life pure and without blemish. We therefore declare that he is our unanimous choice for the presidency of the United States.

16. That the delegates to the Democratic national convention this day appointed are hereby instructed to cast the vote of this state in said convention as a unit, in such manner as the majority of the delegates may determine.

17. We are opposed to the payment of any part of the rebel debt; to any payment whatever for emancipated slaves, or the property of rebels destroyed in the war.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

DOLAN, the murderer of Mr. James H. Noe, a New York merchant, was hanged in that city last week.... Thomas W. Piper, under sentence of death in Boston for the murder of the little girl Mabel Young, in the belfry of a church, has made a statement to the effect that the girl was killed by a trap-door falling upon her, and that he professed ignorance of the tragedy on account of a fear that he would be charged with murdering her. His story is not credited.

PRESIDENT GRANT visited Philadelphia last week for the purpose of seeing the present condition of the Centennial grounds.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH has decided to have the Beecher scandal again investigated.

BARNEY WILLIAMS, the well-known comedian, died in New York, last week. He was a native of Ireland, and was fifty-three years of age.... The widow of Mosher, who kidnaped Charley Ross, has called on Westervelt, an accomplice in the crime, now serving out a sentence in the Pennsylvania penitentiary, and asked him to give some clue as to the fate of the child. Westervelt protested his inability to do so, declaring that he engaged in the conspiracy merely in the hope of sharing the reward, but had no knowledge of the whereabouts of the stolen boy at the time of Mosher's death.

ARTICLES for exhibition at the National Centennial Exposition are arriving in great profusion, by car-loads and ship-loads, and the utmost exertions are being made to get everything in order by the opening day.

THE WEST.

A MAN, his wife and three children were recently murdered by Indians at a place 100 miles from Custer City. Great trouble from the Indians is apprehended in the Black Hills country. The Cheyennes have broken up into small bands for marauding purposes. A party of miners had a fight with one of these roving bands recently, in which one Indian was killed and two miners wounded. The miners held their ground and drove the Indians off.... While five persons were descending a coal shaft at Brown's Station on the Columbia branch of the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern railroad one day last week, the rope broke, and all fell to the bottom, over 100 feet. Two men and a boy were instantly killed, and the other two fatally injured.

THE City National Bank of Chicago has suspended, and will go into voluntary bankruptcy. The assets more than cover the liabilities.... Two railroad projects find adherents in Northern Wisconsin. The Wisconsin Midland road is to run southwest, through Marquette, Portage and Mineral Point to Dubuque; the Wisconsin and Lake Superior, from Oshkosh northward to the shores of Lake Superior. Aid in large amounts has already been pledged to both roads.

THE Leavenworth (Kansas) Times says: "The crops in this State look fine. Unless some very unusual event happens the wheat crop will be both the largest and the best ever known in Kansas. In every direction broad fields of wheat, green and luxuriant, meet the eye, and the farmers are jubilant."

THE professional base-ball season in the West was opened on the 25th of April by games at Louisville between the Chicago and Louisville clubs—score, 4 to 0 in favor of Chicago—and at Cincinnati between the St. Louis and Cincinnati, the Porkopolitans winning a ball from the Mound City chaps by a score of 2 to 1.

WILLIAM MCKEE, one of the proprietors of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, recently convicted of conspiracy to defraud the revenue in connection with the whisky ring, was last week sentenced to two years' imprisonment in jail, and to pay a fine of $10,000. All the convicted whisky-thieves at St. Louis have now been sentenced.

THE representative base-ball clubs of Chicago and Louisville had a second meeting in the latter city on the 27th ult., and resulted in another severe defeat of the Southerners by a score of 10 to 0. On the same day St. Louis again succumbed to the superior ball powers of Cincinnati, her pet club coming out at the little end of the horn. Score, 5 to 2. There is wailing and gnashing of teeth in Louisville and St. Louis, and a corresponding degree of rejoicing in Chicago and Cincinnati.

SOUTH.

BELIEVING he has no power to appoint a Senator where the vacancy arises from failure of the Legislature to elect, Gov. Kellogg, of Louisiana, will not designate a man to fill the place that Pinchback did not get in the Senate at this session. The vacancy will be left for the Louisiana Legislature to fill next winter.

WASHINGTON.

A VALUABLE horse and buggy was stolen from President Grant a few nights ago.... The appropriations for the postal service for the next fiscal year, as agreed upon in committee, are $3,500,000 less than last year, but foots up in spite of this reduction the large aggregate of $33,000,000.

THERE is serious danger of a dead-lock between the two houses of Congress on the appropriation bill.... The Joint Congressional Committee on the Library has decided to recommend the immediate beginning of a new building for the Library of Congress. The question of location which has delayed action from year to year, was compromised, and the site of the botanical garden, just at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue, was chosen.... The House Committee on the Freedman's Savings bank has succeeded in finding evidence to sustain criminal charges against several officers of the bank.

GEN. BELKNAP has written a letter to a friend, denying in positive terms that he has made any confession whatever concerning the charges against him relative to the Fort Sill post-tradership.... A final decision of the Supreme court of the United States, rendered a few days ago, declares all individual claims to the Arkansas Hot Springs untenable, and fixes the title in the United States.... Bids were opened at the treasury last week for the sale of five per cent. coupon or registered bonds of the loan of 1881, authorized by the acts of July 14, 1870, and Jan. 20, 1871, bearing interest payable quarterly from May 1, 1876, in lots of not less than $500,000, to a total amount of $5,883,000. The total bids aggregated $62,447,000, at prices ranging between $102.25 and $103.78 inclusive.

IN response to a note from the Chairman of the House Committee on Expenditures in the War Department to produce certain papers needed in the pending inquiry, Secretary Bristow informs the committee that an executive order has been issued prohibiting the removal of original papers from the files of his department, and hence he declines to comply with the committee's request. Postmaster-general Jewell has made a similar response to the committee's demand for papers in the Postoffice department. ....The House Committee on Territories has agreed to report favorably on two of the most important measures that have been submitted to it: The establishment of a Territorial Government in the Indian country, and an enabling act for the admission into the Union as a State of New Mexico.

THE President, in conversation with a gentleman the other day, told the true story of the madman who has recently given such romantic testimony before the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department. The President says he was conscious for many weeks that he was being shadowed; that he could never leave the White-house without finding the maniac turn upon him at some street corner and glower upon him with his rocking eye. [illegible] the [illegible] one day [illegible] the [illegible] and told him [illegible] he [illegible]. It did [illegible] and the [illegible] The madman still continued to haunt the White-house grounds and the streets, and was finally taken to the asylum. He was subsequently released and sent to Ireland, and it was not known that he had returned until he appeared before the committee.... The House Pacific Railroad Committee have agreed to report favorably on the Senate bill extending for ten years the time for the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad.... With a view to an honest collection of the tax upon distilled spirits, and the prompt punishment of persons engaged in defrauding the Government, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue asks the co-operation of honest distillers, rectifiers and liquor-dealers. Distillers and dealers in liquors having knowledge of fraud, or good reason to suspect its existence, are requested to communicate the fact by [illegible] to the Bureau at Washington. They may do so with assurance that their communications shall be treated as strictly confidential. The information thus given will be made the basis of an immediate investigation by some officer of Internal Revenue.

PRESIDENT GRANT, Secretaries Bristow and Jewell, and several other distinguished officials visited Baltimore one day last week, for the purpose of attending the wedding of Miss Shoemaker, daughter of S. M. Shoemaker, manager of the Adams Express Company, to William C. Boylston. It was a very brilliant affair. The bride received a vast number of beautiful and costly presents, the total value of which is placed at $300,000.

GENERAL.

ALL the available naval force now at Hampton Roads has been ordered to rendezvous at Tampico, for the purpose of watching the Rio Grande, and protecting American residents in the border towns.

THE reply of Belknap's lawyers to the pleadings of the impeachment managers sets up, after the customary general denials, that Clymer's committee had no authority from the House to investigate the matters on which the impeachment has been based; and relates how Belknap proposed to admit the receipt of all the sums mentioned by Marsh, on condition that Clymer would suppress Mrs. Belknap's connection with the case; how Clymer rejected this proposition, and notified the Secretary that impeachment would be moved, unless he resigned before noon of the 2d of March, and how Belknap, to avoid the scandal of such a trial, and to protect his wife, acted upon Clymer's demand and did resign before noon of that day. Upon this curious statement the ex-Secretary claims that the subsequent proceedings were a breach of faith on Clymer's part, and that, therefore, Belknap should be acquitted, or jurisdiction of the case be declined by the Senate.

POLITICAL.

THE Connecticut delegation to the National Republican convention favor the nomination of Postmaster General Jewell, and will present his name to the convention.

THE Democrats of the Third Indiana district have been notified by letter from Speaker Kerr that the condition of his health renders it impossible for him to accept a renomination to Congress.... The chief question which will govern the nominating convention of the two political parties in the coming Presidential campaign, the New York World says, is the availability of the candidates. This, it claims, "gives Tilden an advantage, as the State of New York is looked upon as the fighting ground of the next election—both parties supposing that it may turn the election to one or the other of the candidates, and the most available man for New York will be the most available man for the Democratic convention."

HON. E. B. WASHBURNE, United States Minister to Paris, whose name has been prominently mentioned in connection with the governorship of Illinois, telegraphs to his friends in Chicago that he would be compelled to decline absolutely the nomination.

THE Massachusetts Republicans held their State convention at Boston last week. Resolutions approving the energy and courage of Secretary Bristow and associating the name of Mr. Blaine with the office of President were tabled. A resolution was unanimously adopted that the delegates to the National convention be unpledged, but requiring them to work and vote for those candidates whose character give unquestionable assurance that they will be faithful and zealous to maintain the equal rights of all; to bring about the resumption of specie payments at a date not later than that already fixed by law, and to effect a thorough and radical reform of the civil service, to the end that the administration of public affairs may be characterized by efficiency, economy, and purity. It is claimed that a large majority of the delegation to Cincinnati, which is headed by R. H. Dana, Jr., will support Bristow first, last and all the time.... The California delegates to the Cincinnati Convention are uninstructed, but are said to be favorable to Blaine. The Democrats of Oregon have renominated L. F. Lane for Congress.

THE Chicago Journal says: "An old political stager, who is pretty good at guessing, wishes us to place on record the prediction that the Republican candidate for President will be either Bristow or Washburne, and that the Democrats will nominate either Tilden or Judge David Davis. We will see.".... The New York Democratic State convention pronounced for Tilden for President. Senator Kernan, Lieut-Gov. Dorsheimer, Congressman Hewitt, and Henry C. Murphy were appointed delegates at large to St. Louis.... The Arkansas Republicans expressed a warm preference for Morton for President, but left their delegates to Cincinnati untrammeled.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, April 21.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—Knott introduced a bill to regulate the privilege of a writ of habeas corpus in certain cases. Referred. It provides that the Supreme court shall have the original and exclusive jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus in all cases where the party shall be detained or restrained of liberty by [illegible] ....The bill transferring the Indian bureau from the Interior to the War Department was passed by [illegible] yeas to [illegible] nays. ...A motion was offered by Kasson that the investigation of the charges against Secretary Bristow called for by the resolution of [illegible] be conducted openly. Adopted—170 to 26.

SATURDAY, April 22.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—No business was transacted [illegible] the [illegible] of Frelinghuysen's bill to define the status of American [illegible] in foreign countries.

MONDAY, April 24.—Senate.—The bill to abolish the office of Supervisor of Internal Revenue was discussed until the expiration of the morning hour, when consideration of the bill to amend the laws relating to the legal tender of silver coin was resumed, and Jones, of Nevada, made a very long argument in favor of the double standard of gold and silver money. When about half through his speech the Senate adjourned.

House.—Several bills were introduced, including the following: By Campbell, to increase the circulation of National Bank notes; to relieve the National banks from the tax on their circulation; to liquidate the national debt, and to strengthen the public credit; by O'Brien, to reorganize the navy; by Hayward, to permit national banks to issue circulating notes equal in amount to 100 per cent. of the current market value of the bonds deposited by them. ....Faulkner, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a joint resolution, requesting the President to take such steps as may result in the early release of Edward O'M. Condon from his imprisonment in England. Passed.... Sayler presented the petition of the tobacco manufacturers of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., for a reduction of the tax on tobacco to sixteen cents per pound. Referred....Gibson offered a resolution for the appointment of a select committee of nine to make examination into the management of the New Orleans Custom-house and other Federal offices in that city, with power to sit in New Orleans during the recess. Adopted.... Late in the afternoon Blaine obtained the floor and spoke at some length in denial of the stories concerning his alleged connection with certain transactions in Pacific railroad bonds.

TUESDAY, April 25.—Senate.—The Senate almost unanimously refused to recede from its amendments to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, and asked for a committee of conference. Sargent, Frelinghuysen and Withers were appointed as such committee.... The Senate insisted on its amendments to the Deficiency Appropriation bill, and agreed to the conference asked for by the House.... The Chair announced McMillan as a member of the special committee to inquire into the circumstances attending the late election in Mississippi, in place of Oglesby, excused.... The Senate then resumed consideration of the bill to amend the law relating to the legal tender of silver coin, and Jones (Nev.) concluded his argument.

House.—The District of Columbia Tax bill, as amended by Neal's substitute, providing a tax of one and one-half per cent. on all property, real and personal, was passed....Lawrence, from the Judiciary Committee, submitted a report in relation to the Pacific railroads, proposing a bill to require them to create a sinking fund, and to pay at maturity the principal and interest of the subsidy bonds issued to them by the Government. Ordered printed. ....The House then went into committee of the whole, with Mr. Cox in the chair, on the Legislative and Executive Appropriation bill.... Lord, chairman of the impeachment managers, presented a rejoinder to the demurrer filed by W. W. Belknap. The paper was read and adopted, and the Clerk ordered to file it with the Secretary of the Senate.... The House then resumed consideration of the General Appropriation bill.

WEDNESDAY, April 26.—Senate.—Morrill (Vt.) addressed the Senate in support of the bill to establish an educational fund.... A resolution was offered by Sargent, and adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of the number of revenue agents, their compensation and expenses; whether any of them have received any compensation in the nature of special awards, and if so, by what authority of law, and whether any of them are under the direction of any officer not a subordinate of the Treasury department.

House.—The Speaker appointed the following conference committees: On the Deficiency bill, Wells, Atkins and Hale; on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, Singleton, Randall and Waldron.... An inquiry was directed into the charges that the Clerk of the House and his subordinates were lobbying against reduction in the Legislative Appropriation bill.... A resolution was adopted authorizing the appointment of a select committee to investigate the conduct and management of the Custom-house and other Government offices at New Orleans.... Wells, from the Conference Committee on the Deficiency bill, made a report recommending that the Senate recede from three of its amendments, and that the House concur in three others of its amendments. Adopted.... Resolutions were offered by Banning and Randall, calling for information as to the sale of commissary articles, and as to the amount of post funds at the Military Academy at West Point. Adopted. ....The Legislative Appropriation bill was debated. ....Lapham introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, providing that whenever an appropriation bill is passed by Congress, and is presented to the President for his signature, he may withhold his approval from any particular item in the bill, stating his reason for so doing.

THURSDAY, April 27.—Senate.—A large audience was present in the galleries to witness the impeachment proceedings. The managers appeared shortly before 1 o'clock, and the proceedings were at once begun by reading the minutes of the last session. This was followed by the reading of the answers filed by the managers and counsel for the defense during the interim, as to the question of jurisdiction. Mr. Lord submitted a motion that the evidence relating to the question of jurisdiction of the Senate be given before the argument relating thereto, and if such plea is overruled, that the defendant be required to answer the articles of impeachment within two days, and the House's reply, if they deem it necessary, within two days, and that the trial proceed the next day after the joining of the issue. Mr. Carpenter, of the counsel for the accused, moved that the trial be postponed till the first Monday of December next, and asked that the time for discussing this motion be fixed at two hours for each side. The request was granted, forty-eight to thirteen, and Mr. Blair addressed the Senate in favor of the motion. The Senate then at 3 o'clock retired for consultation, and returned to the Senate Chamber at half-past 4, when the presiding officer announced that the motion on the part of the defendant was denied. The managers then submitted a proposition to go on with the hearing, take all the testimony and then decide both the questions of jurisdiction and guilt at the close.

House.—Morrison reported back the Senate amendment to the House bill defining the tax on fermented or malt liquors. This amendment adds a proviso that nothing in the act shall change the present rules of the law respecting the evidence in any prosecution or suit. The amendment was concurred in.... Turney made a conference report on the bill excluding Missouri from provisions of the act of the 10th of May, 1872, to promote the development of mining resources.... The Legislative Appropriation bill was debated.

Centennial Boat Racing.

The coming boat races at the Centennial promise to be the most brilliant ever seen in the United States. England is going to send her best professionals; Cambridge, flushed with victory, agrees to send the pick of its crew; Canada will be represented by its best muscle and training. Our own oarsmen will have their hands full, and the prospect of beating the great champions of the English universities will spur them on to renewed efforts in the way of training. One crew has been in Florida, hunting, fishing, and generally hardening its constitution. Others are taking to their boats with all the heartiness that is in them. The Ward brothers promise a benefit. Pittsburgh proposes to send a batch of stalwart professionals to support her renown on smooth waters. Trainers in the United States will have to guard against climatic disadvantages, which, while they may increase their dash and spirit, may lessen their powers of endurance. This contest will certainly bring out all the pluck and pride of our colleges, and prove one of the most attractive features of the centennial year.

EXTRADITION.

An International Dispute in the Case of Winslow the Forger—Great Britain Abandons Her Treaty Obligations.

The last interchange of dispatches between the British Government and the State department, says a Washington telegram, shows that extradition between the two countries is a dead-letter, that Winslow and Gray and other Americans in England who are under arrest there will be released, and that to all intents and purposes the treaty of 1842 may be considered as abrogated. Official information to that effect has been communicated to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, that it may take such steps as a co-ordinate branch of the treaty-making power as it may deem proper, either in the way of suggesting to the President the terms of a new or supplemental treaty or to provide for such legislation as will meet the extraordinary demand of the British Government. This demand is for an assurance in the case of Winslow, the Boston forger, from this Government, that he shall not be tried for any crime other than for which he was extradited. His extradition is asked for on an indictment for forgery. The English authorities declare that they will surrender him if the United States will agree not to try him for any other offense. The Secretary of State replies that the tenth article of the Extradition treaty requires no such exaction and shows that both countries have tried persons for crimes for which they were not extradited. To this the other side make answer that an act of Parliament of 1870 prohibits the surrender of any criminal to a foreign country until assurance is received, by law or otherwise, that he shall not be put on trial for any other crime than that for which he is given up. This Government, in its reply, stands on the treaty of 1842, and protests that it is no party to the act of Parliament of 1870, though it insists that the twenty-seventh section of that act in effect sustains the extradition clause of the treaty. Aside from all these facts this Government in the Winslow case has no authority whatever to pledge the conduct of criminal justice in Massachusetts to Great Britain. Winslow is to be tried, if tried at all, in the courts of that State, and not in the courts of the United States. No Federal officer can dictate to a district-attorney nor a grand jury in Massachusetts the nature of the crime for which Winslow shall be tried. The position of the Secretary of State is sustained by the leading men in both parties at Washington who are acquainted with the facts, while on the other hand that of Great Britain is regarded as singular as it is untenable.

Fish Culture in the West.

Prof. Spencer F. Baird, Commissioner of Fisheries, has sent a communication to Congress asking an appropriation of $17,500 for the purpose of continuing the introduction and propagation of useful food fishes into the United States the coming season. Prof. Baird has a table attached to his communication, in which he shows the distribution of fish by the commission in the different States. The distribution of shad in the Northwestern States for the last year was as follows:

	No. of fish.		No. of fish.

About Sleep.

Prof. Ferrier, of King's college, London, who has made the phenomena of sleep a special study, recently said in a lecture thereon that anything which has a tendency to abstract blood from the brain favors sleep. Exercise does this, because the moment the weary muscles are at rest the blood rushes to them to repair their loss, and is absorbed by them. Digestion and hot drinks produce the same result by drawing the blood supply from the brain to the stomach. Conversely, anything that stimulates the brain, such as sights, sounds, thought or anxiety, will keep a man awake. If we, therefore, wish for a refreshing slumber, we must begin by avoiding care and anxiety and take sufficient bodily exercise to induce the necessary muscular exhaustion. With regard to the length of sleep, Dr. Ferrier holds that the heart is not in a state of constant but of rhythmical activity, a term of action being followed by a pause of rest, during which the heart is to all intents and purposes asleep. In fact, if the pauses of the heart are all summed up, it will be found that it rests or sleeps eight hours out of the twenty-four, the sleep being in the proportion of one-third as compared with the hours of action or work. Eight hours are consequently sufficient for the [illegible].

PASSING EVENTS.

DOM PEDRO says he intends to visit every State in our Union. He goes to the Pacific coast to get a good start, and will work his way eastward.

THERE are in operation in Canada [illegible] miles of railway, which have been constructed at a cost of $299,782,557.64. The profit on this large amount of capital is only about 1½ per cent.

MANY silly stories are going the rounds of the papers about the superstitious notions of the late A. T. Stewart, his belief in signs and omens. But it is a very singular fact that at the last Sunday dinner held in his house thirteen guests sat down to the table.

THE editor of the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph can snuff a candle at fifty paces and carries a cane like a weaver's beam, and so when he says that there is an Indian couple residing in Graham county whose respective ages are 175 and 130, every man earnestly declares that he knows them.

TRUSTEN POLK, at one time Governor of and United States Senator from Missouri, and in ante-war times a conspicuous figure in the politics of that State, died recently in St. Louis. Polk espoused the cause of the South and was expelled from the Senate in 1862.

ABOUT a month since Daniel McCruly, of Tiffin, O., moved to Kansas, 900 miles distant, taking a shepherd dog with him. The day after his arrival the dog disappeared. The other day he turned up at Tiffin, well though footsore, having evidently walked the whole distance.

THERE died in Detroit, Mich., recently, that widely-known and somewhat curious character, Dr. Orestes A. Brownson. A man of continual mental research, he was ever changing his views, especially upon matters pertaining to the soul, having been in his life over and through the fields of nearly every religious creed, from Unitarianism to Roman Catholicism. His writings are numerous, and his death at seventy-three years of age closed a life as restless as it has been long.

MR. ROBERT C. WINTHROP, President of the Washington Monument Association, has prepared a plan for the completion of the monument, which has been adopted by the association. The design is to abandon that part of the original plan which calls for a temple or pantheon and to erect a simple shaft 300 feet high. The purpose of surrendering the charter or allowing the monument to remain unfinished or be taken down, is to be abandoned, and subscriptions are to be solicited from time to time until the monument is completed.

THERE recently arrived at Leavenworth, Kan., a buffalo-hunter from the Pan-Handle of Texas, whose experience has never had a parallel in this country. Previous to the terrible storm of March 15 he was lost between Cantonment and Red Deer creek, 100 miles away from any habitation, with no clothing or arms. For ten days the poor fellow lived on roots dug from the frozen ground. One day he found the leg of a buffalo that had been killed months before, and ate the rotten marrow. This and the roots were his only subsistence. Both feet have been amputated.

THE wife of George I. Amsdell, a wealthy Albany brewer, obtained a divorce from him in 1870. She was granted $50,000 alimony, of which $20,000 was paid in cash and the rest in a mortgage. In 1874 they were remarried, and the wife gave back the mortgage. In 1875 they were ready to part again. The wife began a suit to recover the mortgage. Mr. John T. Hoffman was made a referee in the case, and he has decided that the second marriage was null and void, as Mr. Amsdell had no right to marry again while his divorced wife lived. Therefore a new mortgage must be given to her and the arrearage of interest paid.

PRESIDENT GRANT has signed the silver resumption bill. It is now a law. No more money is to be spent by the Government in printing fractional currency. As fast as it becomes too worn for use it will be retired in favor of silver pieces of the denominations of ten, twenty, twenty-five and fifty cents. The law is peremptory and immediate in its direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver coins, although he is allowed some latitude in the details of the work. It is probable that a good deal of the fractional currency will be redeemed and retired before it becomes too mutilated for use.

CHINA is apparently becoming the "sick man" of the farther east. She has two distinct and prosperous rebellions on hand at present, many interior towns being already in the hands of the insurgents. And worse than that, even, is the fact that the Government finds itself compelled to submit to the bullying of so insignificant a power as Portugal, whose usurped position at Macao, having been an incurable nuisance to the Chinese for a long time, is now extended by the occupation of an island in the neighborhood which China wanted to use for a customs station. There is obviously not much hope for a nation of hundreds of millions of people that tamely submits to snubbing from a state whose whole population might be housed in a single Chinese town.

Bogus Scalps.

The large sums of money which were paid by the authorities of Blair and other counties in the mountainous parts of Pennsylvania, as bounties for scalps of wild animals, during the last year, prompted an investigation, which revealed a well-devised and carefully-executed scheme for defrauding the county treasuries. In one instance the skin of a colt which had died was deftly cut up and made into ears and palmed off as those of a fox. Warrants have been issued against numerous persons suspected of the frauds.

CAMELS thrive remarkably well without any care at Elgin, about twenty miles from Austin, Texas, where they were introduced at the time of the threatened Mormon war, in the expectation of a contract for transportation. Five of them were sold last week to a circus manager for $1,250.

Royal Visitors.

The visit to this country of the Emperor of Brazil recalls the visits of the other royal personages to the United States. William, fourth son of George III., came in 1782 as midshipman. An attempt aimed at his capture failed. A little while after, the Duke of Kent, Victoria's father, was the guest of Boston for a short time, passing through it on the way to join his regiment. In 1796 Louis Philippe, accompanied by his two brothers, Duke de Montpensier and Count de Beaujolais, landed at Philadelphia. Louis traveled extensively throughout the country. He returned to the United States in 1800. Jerome Bonaparte, nineteen years of age, arrived in New York in 1803, and, visiting Baltimore, fell in love with a Miss Patterson, whom he married. In less than two years he started for France, leaving his wife to follow. Readers are acquainted with the fact of the Emperor's order prohibiting her entering France at any point, and the subsequent annulling of the marriage. Lucien Bonaparte, Prince of Camiros, several years younger than the Emperor, came to the United States a young man, and began life as a farmer out West. Two sons of Joachim Murat, who was proclaimed King of the two Sicilies in 1808, settled in Florida a few years after their father was shot by the Neapolitans. Napoleon married a grand niece of Washington, and died at Tallahassee in 1847. His brother, Napoleon Lucien Charles, came here in 1825, and married a Yankee school mistress. In 1848 he was created a prince of the Imperial family. In 1836 the late Emperor was banished to the United States. He landed at Norfolk in March, 1837, and then came to New York, where he remained until May, when he sailed for Switzerland, to see his dying mother. Two visits were made us by the Prince de Joinville (who, by the way, is brother-in-law of the present Emperor of Brazil), once in 1842 and again in 1861, accompanied by his son, Duc de Penthievre, and his nephews, Count de Paris and Duc de Chartres. He placed his son in the naval academy and accepted for himself and nephews positions on McClellan's staff. In September, 1860, the Prince of Wales, traveling as the Baron Renfrew, with his tutor, the Duke of Newcastle, arrived at Detroit, and was generally received throughout the country. Shortly after came Crown Prince Napoleon and bride, Princess Clothilde, daughter of the King of Italy. Then Queen Emma, of the Sandwich Islands, leaving New York for England. On January 21, 1870, Prince Arthur, third son of Victoria, arrived in New York from Montreal. On November 20, 1871, the Grand Duke Alexis reached here. He was treated to a buffalo hunt by Phil. Sheridan. King Kalakaua, of the Hawaiian islands, reached San Francisco in November, 1875, and his trip is still fresh in the minds of readers.

An Accomplished Umpire.

Half-a-dozen small boys congregated in an alley off Fourth street this morning to witness a Græco-Roman wrestling match of some importance about to come off. The athletes in the case were a couple of boys about evenly matched in size, who had never engaged in a Græco-Roman wrestling before, but who thought they could manage it easily enough because, as one of them remarked, "It's only a kind o' rough an' tumble rastle, anyhow." The stakes were a couple of bananas, purchased by subscription among the boys, and placed in the hands of an umpire.

Promptly at the word the two champions took off their coats and pitched in vigorously. They grabbed each other by the collar and tugged and pulled, and finally one got hold of a handful of hair, and in return took a crusher in the eye, when they clinched again and fell. The contest at once became a Græco-Roman fight of elegant dimensions, and lasted about ten minutes, when one of the contestants, with a bloody nose and one eye closed, yelled "enough," and the other got up and claimed the bananas. They were not to be found, and the umpire was indignant that they should be demanded. He explained the situation in forcible terms:

"Yer show more cheek nor a mule! Yer can't claim the stakes cos yer didn't stick to no rules. I know a Greeker-Rummun hold when I see it, but ther wan't no Greeker-Rummun rastle about that! That was a fight, an' when yer got to fightin' I put down them bananas. That's an umpire's biz!"—St. Louis Republican.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Farmer's Daughter.

She lives within a quiet home,
No model of the graces,
Unknown to culture's higher walks,
Or fashion's giddy places;
A thoughtful girl, so sweet, so wise,
With earnest face and loving eyes—
The farmer's gentle daughter.

From morn till eve the little maid
Is busy at her labor—
She sweeps and dusts the old farm-house
And helps a poorer neighbor;
No gossip will she listen to,
(A merit rare, I own to you),
So lives the farmer's daughter.

On baking days her tiny hands
Are busy at the making;
No bread more light and sweet than hers
Was ever made by baking.
She churns the butter golden, sweet,
And keeps the dairy white and neat—
The farmer's useful daughter.

Her garden is an Eden fair,
A bloom with pinks and roses—
She knows the name of every flower,
And makes some gorgeous posies—
Grows peas, and radishes, and cress,
And corn, and squash, and herbs to press—
The farmer's happy daughter.

Long may she bravely smile on us—
Our darling household fairy,
The queen of garden, house and lot,
And princess of the dairy—
To teach us by her pleasant way
To love the things of every day—
God bless the farmer's daughter.

Around the Farm.

NON-BREEDING cows are now cured by putting them to work like oxen.

THERE are two sore evils: Too many young men are going to the cities to find employment, and too many tramps are seeking the rural districts.—Des Moines Register.

THE blackberry is so healthy and delicious a fruit that no amount of trouble should prevent every well-living farmer from having a plenty. The Kittatinny and Wilson's early are highly recommended.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Country Gentleman says that Brownell's Eureka is a potato that will please the producer, the salesman, the cook, and the eater. It is enormously prolific, white in skin and flesh, smooth surface, and having a fine, dry and delicious flesh. The agricultural press will teem with testimonials of this potato within the next two years.

CORN-FED hens do not lay in winter, for the simple reason there isn't any albumen material in the corn. When wheat is fed, there is fat enough in it to supply all that is needed for the yelk, and gluten enough to make the white, and lime enough to furnish the shell; it does not thus seem difficult to understand why corn-fed hens should not lay, as they do not, and why wheat-fed hens should lay, as they do.

I HAVE some snakes and many hedgehogs in the garden; they are carefully protected, being of the greatest use in a garden, and doing not the slightest harm. Snakes should be most carefully preserved. There is a foolish prejudice against them. It is pleasant to see them enjoy life basking in the sun, and it is still more curious in the evening to watch young hedgehogs searching out and feeding on slugs.—London Gardener's Chronicle.

CUCUMBERS are generally permitted, or compelled, rather, to grow flat upon the ground, but vines have been trained upon trellises with the very happiest results. Indeed nature never intended the cucumber for a mere surface runner, else it would not have been provided with grasping tendrils. A low order of trellis, keeping both vine and fruit off the ground, adds largely to the yield and the quality. When space is an object a great saving of ground may be accomplished by training upon high trellises. —New England Homestead.

THERE is a vast difference in the flavor of eggs. Hens fed on clear, sound grain, and kept on a clean grass run, give much finer flavored eggs than hens that have access to stable and manure heaps, and eat all kinds of filthy food. Hens feeding on fish and onions flavor their eggs accordingly, the same as cows eating onions or cabbage, or drinking offensive water, imparts a bad taste to the milk and butter. The richer the food the higher the color of the eggs. Wheat and corn give eggs the best color, while feeding on buckwheat makes them colorless, rendering them unfit for confectionery purposes.

A CORRESPONDENT recommends the following mode for making tarred walks: First gravel the walk in the ordinary way, but do not give it so thick a coat as usual; beat well down to make a perfectly smooth and even surface, which coat well with tar. When this is done, put the final layer of gravel on the top—three-quarters of an inch to one inch will be quite sufficient, and again beat down, using the back of a spade for the purpose. The walk so prepared must not be trodden upon for two or three days, at the end of which time it will have become perfectly hard, and will not be affected by the heaviest fall of rain. The work must be done in fine weather, and the plan will be found better than using cement mixed with the gravel.—English Mechanic.

"I THINK," writes a young farmer, "I have made a mistake in years past in plowing part of my ground before it really was fit for it. As some of it lies very flat and is not drained, it turns up wet and clammy, even after it looks quite dry upon the surface. I am thoroughly satisfied that land in that condition does not work as easily or produce as good a crop as it would if dry enough to crumble when turned by the plow, and I do not propose to plow it so early this year as I have in years past. Though it may make the planting of it a little later than usual, I do not think the crop need be later, if by waiting the ground gets into better condition for planting. I used to think differently. I thought the ground dried faster after being plowed, and then a little extra harrowing would make it right, but I changed my mind last year by finding a part of one of those fields, which was plowed some days after the other part, bring forward its crop more rapidly than that which was plowed first, and which was wet when plowed. I shall, therefore, begin plowing upon side hills and upon such land as I think is drained, even if they are not the pieces which I wish to devote to the earliest planted vegetables."

About the House.

A LADY says: "I would like to tell you readers how I have kept my house-plants through the coldest nights, so far this winter: I set them on the table, draw the table into the center of the room, drop the curtains at the windows, leave the lamp burning in the middle of the room, and find my plants all right in the morning. Cost, one cent per night."

HOMINY CROQUETTES.—To a cupful of cold, boiled hominy add a teaspoonful melted butter, and stir it well, adding by degrees a cupful of milk, till all is made into a soft light paste; add a teaspoonful of white sugar and one well beaten egg. Roll into oval balls with floured hands; dip in beaten egg, then roll cracker crumbs, and fry in hot lard.

WARRANTABLE PUDDING.—Two cups of flour, one cup sugar, one tablespoonful butter, one egg, one teaspoonful soda, two of cream of tartar; steam one and one-half hours. Currants, raisins, or any fruit desired can be used. Do not remove the cover till done, and I think I hear you say, "I never tasted its equal."

HARD TIMES PLUM PUDDING.—Quarter of a pound of finely-chopped suet, the same of grated bread crumbs, currants, raisins and flour; add two tablespoonfuls of molasses and half a pint of milk; all of which must be well mixed together and boiled in a mold for three and a half hours. Serve with sauce.

CORNS AND WARTS.—Warts are very troublesome and disfiguring. The following is a perfect cure, even of the largest, without leaving any scar. It is a Frenchman's prescription, and has been tested by the writer: Take a small piece of raw beef and steep it all night in vinegar, cut as much as will cover the wart, and tie it on it; if the excrescence is on the forehead, fasten it on with strips of sticking-plaster. It may be removed in the day and put on every night. In one fortnight the wart will die and peel off. The same prescription will cure corns.

LEFT-HANDED.—A mother writes that her son is left-handed, and asks "if it will be an injury to him when grown if he continues to write with his left hand." By no means. Left-handed persons suffer from a certain inconvenience in being in this respect unlike most other people, but it does not amount to an injury. Our foremost educators say that both hands should be alike educated, and might be, if parents and teachers would be at the pains of requiring children to be ambidexters. One of our prominent generals in the "late unpleasantness" lost his right arm, and writes a very legible backhand with his left hand.

The Best Vegetables to Plant.

Scribner's Monthly is printing a series of timely and practical papers in its "Home and Society" department, entitled "Rural Topics," by the well-known horticulturist, P. T. Quinn. The following is from the May number:

April and May are the two busy months in a well-managed vegetable garden. During these months the most important work of the season has to be hurried through, for planting time is short, and there are many small matters that need prompt attention. First of all is the selection of choice garden seeds of recent growth, and such as will be found true to name. The surest way is to select from each year's crop a few of the best specimens of the same to raise seed from. For the rest, send to some responsible seed merchant, and don't depend on the kind of stock found in small boxes in the country grocery stores. As a matter of reference for those not familiar with the best sorts of vegetable seeds and plants, I append the following list, naming two or three kinds of each to select from:

Dwarf Beans—Early Valentine and Refugee.
Pole Beans—Large White Lima and Horticultural Cranberry.
Beets—Dark Red Egyptian and Long Smooth Blood.
Cabbage—Jersey Wakefield (early), and Premium Flat Dutch and Drumhead Savoy (late).
Cucumber—White Spine and Long Green.
Carrot—Bliss' Improved Long Orange.
Corn—Moore's Early and Stowell's Evergreen.
Cauliflower—Early and late Erfurt.
Celery—Dwarf Incomparable and Boston Market.
Egg Plant—Improved New York.
Lettuce—Curled Silesia and Butter.
Musk Melon—Skillman's Fine Netted.
Water Melon—Mountain Sweet.
Onions—Wethersfield Red and White Portugal.
Parsnips—Long Smooth.
Peas—Philadelphia Extra Early, Carter's First Crop, Champion of England, and White Marrowfat.
Peppers—Large Squash and Bull-nose.
Radishes—Turnip Scarlet, Long Scarlet, and White Spanish.
Squash—Summer Crookneck, Boston Marrow, and Hubbard.

In this brief list will be found the leading kinds grown both by market and private gardeners near large cities. With bush beans, peas and radishes, it is best to repeat the sowings every two or three weeks, until the middle of June. By following this plan, a fresh supply of these sorts will keep coming on for table use until late in the season.

Increase of Madness in France.

Lunacy is increasing in France out of all proportion with the growth of population. Official statistics show that, in 1851, the total number of lunatics and idiots there was (in round figures) 40,000; five years later, we find 60,000; ten years afterward, they numbered no less than 90,000; and the latest report shows that they have increased beyond 100,000. This remarkable growth of madness among the French is attributed to various causes—such as the use of absinthe, opium, tobacco, etc.—and to the prevalence of religious, political, and speculative fanatism. It was increased by the pilgrimages of a few years ago; it was increased by the war of 1870 with Germany; and the lunacy doctors of the perfecture of police have observed, that after every panic at the Bourse, they had twice as much work as usual on their hands.

IN 1875, 222 persons were killed in London by being run over by vehicles, and nearly 3,000 others were injured in the same way. Of these victims some were infirm and a few intoxicated, but this was not the case with many; so that the accidents must be attributed to reckless driving.

INDIANA ITEMS.

INDIANAPOLIS has forty-five gambling dens.

SOUTH BEND has 3,035 school children.

THE First National bank of Lafayette has withdrawn its entire circulation.

A LITTLE child was kicked to death by a vicious horse, in Richmond, Thursday.

A LITTLE son of Christ. Hilgemier, residing near Indianapolis, was run over by a clod-roller last Saturday, and crushed to death.

THE residence of S. E. Knapp, a printer, at Rockville, was totally destroyed by fire one night last week. The loss was $1,500.

LOGANSPORT has a young woman who has been married to five different men. Whether she was divorced from any of them is not so well known.

THE inability of the physicians of Crawfordsville to distinguish between measles and small-pox created a panic in that quiet village last week.

LEE BROWN, a young man of Bradford, White county, committed suicide last Saturday by shooting himself through the chest. No cause is known for the rash act.

ARTICLES of consolidation of the Frankfort, Toledo and St. Louis, and Kokomo and Marion roads have been filed. The latter road is to be made a link in the former on the narrow-guage plan.

GEORGE FRIEND was drowned the other night while fishing in Still Lake, near Lima, LaGrange county. The boat was upset near the shore, but he could not swim. The body was recovered a short time after.

CHARLES DAVIS, a blacksmith, formerly of Wytheville, Va., was instantly killed at Greencastle, Saturday afternoon, by being thrown from the platform of a street car under the car, two wheels passing over his head.

COL. THOMAS SMITH died at his residence in Versailles, recently. He was in his 77th year. He had been several times a member of the Legislature, and had also represented the Third Indiana district in the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth Congresses.

PETER REED, a resident of Terre Coupee, in the west part of St. Joseph county, fell in a burning brush while in a fit, and was burned nearly to a crisp. He survived but a short time afterward, suffering the greatest agony. He had been subject to fits for many years.

REBECCA ROBB, keeper of one of the most infamous dives in Indianapolis, and George Miner, a frequenter thereof, both colored, have been arrested on a charge of murder. The victim was a young girl from Crawfordsville, in this State, named Jennie Morris, who was decoyed into Robb's den by some means, and there was intimate with Miner.

A PAINTER named T. Martin, of Madisonville, Ky., fell off the roof of a three-story building at Evansville, a few days ago. In falling he turned a somersault and struck at full length on his back on the stone pavement. No bones were broken, but his brain was injured, and there are other internal injuries. Carelessness in walking too near the edge of the roof was the cause.

ZACHARIAH EPSTEIN, of Louisville, Ky., has been willed $200,000 by the death of his brother in Germany, whose effects are estimated at $1,000,000 in gold. The Epstein who died has four brothers and a sister, none of whom have seen him for forty-two years, when he suddenly disappeared, no one knew where. One brother, Zachariah, lives in Louisville; another, Seligman, lives in Luxemburg; a third in Lawrenceburg, and a fourth in Aurora.

PATENTS have recently been issued to citizens of this State for inventions, as follows: Casting mold-boards, J. Oliver, South Bend; carriage and wagon steps, J. F. Studebaker, South Bend; corn-planters, Abner N. Newton, Richmond; post-hole and well-diggers, Isaac M. Perry, Slate Cut; vehicle wheels, H. G. Porter, South Bend; apparatus for dressing mill stones, Jacob C. Kepler, Richmond; processes of preparing the surface of wood-work of carriages, Patrick O'Brien, South Bend.

TEN thousand people witnessed the successful launching of the new steamer Robert E. Lee at Howard's shipyard in Jeffersonville, on Tuesday of last week. Her entire length is 320 feet. She will carry 8,000 bales of cotton. Her cabin is to be a dazzling place, which will defy the competition of all predecessors or rivals for public favor on the great Mississippi. She has nine monstrous steel boilers, and her engines will be models of mechanical skill, and will rank the largest high-pressure engines ever built in the West. She is built for the Mississippi river by J. W. Cannon, of New Orleans, and when completed will cost over $250,000.

Dangerous Somnambulism.

As the north-bound passenger train on the Virginia Midland road, due here at 6 a. m., was approaching Charlottesville last night, a young man who had been soundly slumbering in his seat, was seen suddenly to leap up, rush to the door of the car, and spring to the ground. Capt. Peyton rang the bell, but as the train was rushing along at the rate of thirty miles an hour, it had gone considerable distance before it was brought to a standstill. It was started back, and the young man was met, running at full speed, and making night hideous with his screams to "stop the cars." He was taken aboard, and an examination developed the fact that his injuries amounted to nothing worse than a skinned nose and a slight abrasion upon his hip, caused by a pistol in his pocket, which, strange to say, had not been discharged by the jar. The young man's explanation was that he dreamed there was a collision and he jumped off to save himself.—Lynchburg Virginian.

Save your Soapsuds.

Who would throw away a barrel full of soft soap or a box of hard soap? Were it not otherwise useful, it would be of great value as a fertilizer, if spread, in its raw state, about our fruit trees or berry bushes. But, after being dissolved in water and passing through the wash-tub, gleaning the imperceptible elements of the best manure from soiled linen, its fertilizing power is vastly increased. Indeed we may almost say that the average soapsuds from the kitchen and laundry is worth more than the soap which produces it. Do not, then, allow your soapsuds to run away wasted while you have trees which it might benefit.—Scientific American.

Ancient Newspapers.

At the coming Centennial Newspaper Exhibition at Philadelphia it has been decided to display copies of antique journals and other curiosities of newspaper literature. To this interesting collection all persons having ancient, quaint, or curious specimens are invited to contribute; and should the response be as hearty and general as we hope to find it, this gathering of time-worn publications will prove to be not only a leading trait of the Newspaper department, but also one of the salient attractions of the Exhibition as a whole. All having the ability and the will to aid on the project should transmit their consignments without delay to the Philadelphia office of the Newspaper Exhibition, Ledger Building, 110 South Sixth street Philadelphia. While on view, these exhibits will have attached to them labels designating by whom they are contributed, and all consistent care will be taken to preserve them from damage. After the close of the Exhibition they will be again at the service of their owners, or, in the absence of different instructions, will be transferred to some historical society or museum.

During the late war there were many newspapers issued which illustrated the straits in which their publishers found themselves. Pink, blue, and yellow sheets, wrapping paper, and many other substitutes were pressed into service. Specimens of these now possess a curious interest.

The advantages to the public of such a gathering are manifest to a degree which renders elucidation unnecessary, and the opportunity to do a very useful act is placed within easy reach. A single copy of some senile broadsheet may not be of much worth to its proprietor, yet in conjunction with others it will make up a worthy collection. Many people there are who, having preserved such curiosities for years, can turn them to little or no practical account, and it is not too much to hope that the response given by such will be ready and general. Without loss to themselves, they can materially benefit visitors to the Great Centennial Exhibition and appreciably advance a patriotic movement.

An Ice Country.

We look over the map of the world, and down near the bottom we find some uncertain landmarks with many breaks, but on the whole tracing out very nearly the antarctic circle, and indicating that there is, covering nearly all that zone, an unexplored and scarcely discovered country. This impenetrable region is estimated to be as large as the continent of North America, about 8,000,000 square miles. A very little arithmetic will now prove the bold claim which I here make, that, even supposing the whole of this region to be land of the average continental height, there is still required over it all an average thickness of two-and-a-half miles of solid ice to make the southern hemisphere equal the northern in weight.

This result of calculation is well confirmed by the information which all southern navigators have brought back from those most desolate and ice-bound regions. The zone of the antarctic has been encroached upon only in a small space south of the Pacific. On every other side, so far as has been discovered, mountains of ice block the way on and near the polar circle, which seems to be the great ice-barrier of the south pole. Discoverers suppose what they have looked upon to be land, but rarely have they ever seen anything but rolling ranges of ice and snow rising higher and higher as far as the eye could reach. In the most open of the south-polar seas, Sir James Ross, in 1841, sailed 450 miles along an unbroken cliff of ice from 150 to 250 feet high, and of unknown depth beneath the water. It was one of the vast antarctic glaciers pushing down into the sea, from which some of those southern icebergs were broken off, that navigators have frequently laid down for islands, while the next sailor that voyaged that way found open water where they were charted.—Popular Science Monthly.

Easy Terms.

A man dragged a dog into a Michigan avenue saloon yesterday (says M. Quad), and wanted the barkeeper to buy him for $10. When he found that he couldn't get that price the would-be seller dropped to $5, then to $3 and in a minute more had come down to fifty cents.

"Think of a great big dog like that for fifty cents" he exclaimed as he pulled in on the rope.

The bartender talked of hard times for awhile, and the owner of the dog finally said:

"Well, take him for ten cents. I'm out of paper collars, and I ain't a man to let a dog, no matter how good he is, stand between me and a clean turn-down collar!"

Vanderbilt's Scrap-Books.

The latest estimate of Vanderbilt's wealth places it at a hundred millions, and it is increasing every day. The old man has a large library, which consists of scrap-books pasted full of Government and other bonds. He could buy out half of the crowned heads of Europe. Nobody, not even himself, knows the exact figures of his wealth. There is no danger of his failing in the road so disastrously traveled by Daniel Drew, because he is more careful about scattering his promissory notes around, and sticks rigidly to his library of Government bond scrap-books. He is the richest man on the American continent.—Boston Globe.

France's Recovery.

The marvelous recuperation of France is again proved by Leon Say's budget for 1877. In 1869, the last complete year before the war, the revenue amounted to 1,400,000,000 francs; the expenditure for 1877 is estimated at the enormous sum of 2,120,000,000 francs, which shows that in eight years the taxation of France has increased fifty per cent., the excess over last year's expenditure being 50,000,000 francs. For the army and navy 730,000,000 francs are allotted, but for education only 40,000,000 francs.

A DOZEN Turks, from Jerusalem, have arrived in Philadelphia.

Grain Prospects.

Contrary to the expectation of a great many people, the markets for flour and grain have recently taken a decidedly upward turn, owing to an improved demand. All through the winter and so much of the spring as has already elapsed, it was argued that the stocks of flour and wheat in England, and at the principal points of accumulation in the United States, were so large as to necessitate a fall in prices when the opening of navigation should permit a general forward movement toward the consuming markets of the world. But, at present, the case is just the reverse. A good demand has sprung up, in spite of the large stocks, which have not yet been much reduced.

There is undoubtedly some speculation in the demand. People do not buy whole cargoes of grain with the intent to eat it themselves. They buy to sell to others, and would not do so without the prospect of a profit. But so far as can be ascertained, the demand is of that kind usually called legitimate—the grain is actually wanted for consumption. Large purchases are now being made for the supply of interior points, in addition to that for Europe, which bids fair to be steady and persistent, at least into the month of July. The prospect now is that, with light receipts till after the planting season is over, the rather large stocks at western points of accumulation will be reduced to a small volume, making the summer forward movement a healthy one.

The prospects for the next crop are yet somewhat doubtful, but not really bad except in those sections which are so low and flat as to be almost without drainage.

The outlook is therefore a favorable one—not only for the farmers, but the whole community, the welfare of the one being bound upon the well-being of the other. The past few months have borne heavily upon our commercial interests, business having been at a deadlock in most parts of the country, chiefly because of bad roads. But there is all the more business to be transacted when the conditions permit, and it is only reasonable to look for an active trade during the summer and autumn, with that promptitude in payment which accompanies the prosperity of a people.—Chicago Tribune.

The Mexican Revolution.

Gen. Porfirio Diaz, the revolutionary leader who has seized Matamoras and appears to be making such headway against the Mexican Government, is well known in the political and military history of that republic. He was regarded as the hero against the empire, and it was he who besieged and captured the city of Mexico from the Austrians, Belgians and Mexican adherents of Maximilian, who held out after the fall of Queretaro. He was a candidate against Juarez in 1867, and again in 1871. In the latter election he claimed to have received a plurality of votes, but Congress decided against him, and he appealed to arms and organized a serious revolution. Juarez died in 1873, and Lerdo, then Chief-justice of the Supreme court, succeeded him as President ad interim. A general amnesty was issued, and Diaz laid down his arms. In the regular election for President which followed, Lerdo was elected without opposition, Diaz declining to become a candidate against him. But the administration of Lerdo has not been popular, and for some time it has been evident that a revolution was inevitable. The first intimation came from the State of Michoacan, but they were not of a character to excite alarm. Two or three months since, however, a programme was proclaimed from the town of Trextepec, in Oaxaca, which declared in favor of the Constitution of 1857, repudiated the present Government entirely, and pronounced in favor of Diaz as "General-in-chief of the regenerating armies." The plan was approved by the mountain towns, a force was gathered, and the capital of the State captured. From that day to this, though suffering defeat now and then at the hands of the Government troops, the revolutionists have been gaining strength.

Eating---Dyspepsia.

It is an old German adage that "more people dig their own graves with their teeth than with spades," and verily it will seem so if we would look at the immense number of dyspeptics, rheumatics and gouty individuals creeping through life in pain and wretchedness. Yet it is next to impossible to induce even thinking people to control their appetites, and to eat such things and at such times as nature shows them is necessary and right. Dr. Hall declares, unhesitatingly, that it is wrong to eat without an appetite, for it shows there is no gastric juice in the stomach and that nature does not need food, and not needing it, there being no fluid to receive and act upon it, it remains there only to putrify, the very thought of which should be sufficient to deter any man from eating without an appetite the remainder of his life. If a tonic is taken to whet the appetite, it is a mistaken course, for its only result is to cause one to eat more when already an amount has been eaten beyond what the gastric juice is able to prepare. The object to be obtained is a large supply of food; and whatever fails to accomplish that essential object, fails to have any efficacy toward the cure of dyspeptic diseases. The formation of gastric juice is directly proportioned to the wear and tear of the system, which it is to be the means of supplying, and this wear and tear can only take place as the result of exercise. The efficient remedy for dyspeptics is work—out-door work—beneficial and successful in direct proportion as it is agreeable, interesting and profitable.

Honesty and Truth.

A good many sayings and saws, wise and foolish, never uttered by the late Mr. A. T. Stewart, are now attributed to him. But, seven years ago, he did give to a young inquirer a sentiment which, in one shape or another, has often appeared in connection with his name since his death. The inquiring young man, anxious to make a fortune, resolved to find out the secret of doing it by asking a few of the most successful fortune makers in the city. "There is no secret about it," said Commodore Vanderbilt; "all you have to do is to attend to your business and go ahead." "There is nothing," said George Law, "so easy as making money when you have money to make it with; the only thing is to see the crisis and take it at its flood." The anxious inquirer found it hard to get the answer he wanted from A. T. Stewart, who merely said: "I consider honesty and truth great aids in the gaining of fortune."—New York Sun.

Meat Killed at a Distance.

Some bold experimenters buy the best class of cattle in Chicago, kill there, and take the dressed meat to the Philadelphia markets in ice-packed cars kept at a temperature below 35°. The meat is sold directly to the consumers (not the butchers) at a reduction of thirty-four per cent. on the usual price. It is of the finest grain and quality, and is in every respect superior to the flesh of cattle brought on the hoof from the West in overheated cars, ill supplied with both food and water. So great has been the success of this experiment in Philadelphia that in a fortnight's time the butchers, who were preparing to raise their prices to starvation height in the prospect of the Centennial, have been forced to reduce them five cents per pound, and there is hope that when the enterprise becomes established and widens its operations meat will be permanently cheapened.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Dear Courier.—There is not a cloud in the sky this morning, birds are singing, fountains are playing, the air is laden with perfume of sweet flowers, and all nature rejoices. I left you last Monday with cold winds and a dreary perspective, to find here, warm balmy spring, forests clothed in their foliage of green, and everything bright and smiling. Something in the air revivifies and invigorates, but you will soon have similar influences surrounding you, so that I need give no description.

Finding a moment's time the other day I went over to the Senate to witness the progress of the impeachment trial.

It would indeed have been a sad commentary upon the state of the popular conscience if so grave a matter as the trial of one of the first officers of the government on a charge of selling appointments, attracted scarcely passing notice in the capitol of the nation. For to a certain extent the moral apprehension of the nation must be judged from the manner in which the people at the seat of government viewed a crime of this kind. It is of course true that many scores of spectators who attend upon an occasion of this kind are attracted simply by their curiosity, but still the great majority are drawn there by higher and purer motives. But as this trial has progressed the public interest in it here and throughout the country has deepened, and there can be no doubt as to the effect the formal proceedings will have upon the public mind. It will attract attention to the moral obliquity of the men who have controlled public affairs so long, and impress the truth of the old maxim, "Honesty is the best policy," upon the masses of the people, who have unquestionably been greatly demoralized by the example which their rulers have set them. In this view of the case and in this only, does it become of importance to note the attendance of spectators upon the trial of General Belknap.

To-day long before the hour for the calling of the Senate to order had arrived, the galleries were filled with a vast throng of spectators. It is seldom that a more picturesque scene has been witnessed in the Senate than that which was presented to the eye of the observer from the reporters' gallery at 1 o'clock, when the President of the Senate announced that that body was for the nonce a high court of impeachment, and directed the sergeant-at-arms to make the usual proclamation. The ladies' gallery on the south side of the chamber was packed close with the fashion and beauty of the capital, and the bright colors of their toilets formed a brilliant setting to the sober and sombre appearance of the Senate floor. The other galleries were mostly occupied by gentlemen, with here and there a sprinkling of brightly attired ladies. The Senators were nearly al in attendance, and the counsel for the defendant and the managers on the part of the House made their appearance nearly at the same time. The former came in by a side entrance, with less dramatic effect than on the occasion of the filing of the accused plea to the articles of impeachment. Then they entered at the main entrance with a seeming desire to show off themselves, as well as their client. The reading of replication of Belknap and the rejoinder of the managers was proceeded with, and this part of the exercise attracted but little attention, as the papers had already been published. This formality over the attention of the audience was directed closely to the proceedings, as there was great uncertainty as to what would follow. The grave and dignified leader of the managers, Mr. Lord, rose, and all eyes were centered upon him, and every ear was strained to catch his words. He read in a slow and rather inaudible tone of voice, a paper asking the senate order, that proof be submitted as to the truth of the averments on the part of the defendant, and the details thereof by the House of Representatives, and also that this precede the argument of the question of jurisdiction. As Mr. Lord took his seat Mr. Carpenter rose and surprised the audience, and perhaps the majority of the court, by moving, after a few preliminary remarks on the motion submitted by the managers, that all proceedings in the impeachment be postponed till the first Monday of December next. It was a general surprise to many of the senators and to all the spectators.

Mr. Carpenter asked that rule 20, for the government of the Senate sitting as a high court of impeachment, be subsided, so as to allow the counsel for defendant to be heard for two hours on his question. This was granted, and a short opening was made by Montgomery Blair. As he concluded, Senator Edmunds moved that the senators retire to the reception-room for consultation. This was not encouraging to Belknap's counsel, but they insisted that they desired to be heard further, after one of the managers had responded. Mr. Lord on behalf of the managers, replied that they would not decide upon their course until the counsel for defendant had completed their opening.

This was the signal for Judge Black to come to the front, and for the Senate and spectators to bend forward in eager listening attitude to catch every word that might fall from the lips of the great advocate. Mr. Black is a large heavy faced man, stiff grey eye-brows, clear bright eyes and very calm and deliberate in his manner. The argument to which the audience was treated for more than an hour was in Judge Black's happiest vein, but impressive and cogent as were his reasons for the delay asked, it was evident that they fell on unheeding ears. The attempt to convince the Senate as a body that it was not capable under the state of public excitement which surrounded it to give the defendant a fair and impartial trial was of course a hopeless one, and it is difficult to imagine what the eminent counsel who conduct his defense expect to gain by making this effort. As able and entertaining as Judge Black's argument undoubtedly was, it, however, did not make a favorable impression on the great majority of his listeners. He spoke truths about both political parties which were calculated to arouse prejudices and there are many democrats as well as republicans who criticise severely portions of his speech. But the crowning piece of folly was committed by Carpenter. He seized the opportunity of making the concluding argument, a post of honor to which he was not entitled, and used it to make a most disgraceful partisan appeal to the majority of the Senate to disregard their oaths and decide this first initial question presented to them on purely political grounds. A more disgraceful exhibition certainly was never made, even in a political debate, and with all the vehemence and stage attitudinizing which the oration could throw into the speech, it was unavailing for he did not elicit a responsive murmur from the galleries. He waved the bloody shirt and cried out "red-handed treason," but a sense of decency shamed to silence the bitterest partisans who, on any other occasion, would have applauded such sentiments to the echo. His allusion to the removal of political disabilities, and contrasting that kind of legislation with the solemn judicial procedure by which the accused was to be deprived of all political privileges, prejudiced his client even in the eyes of the republican senators. It was an ill-timed, indecent and injudicious thing to do, and the efforts of it was apparent from the action of the court. After the conclusion of his harangue Mr. Edmunds renewed his motion to retire for the purpose of deciding the question, and it was carried by a vote of 35 to 24. In less than an hour the senators returned to the senate chamber and it was announced that the motion for a postponement was decided in the negative. The President has ordered the departments not to allow the committee of Congress to have recourse to the original papers in the department for the purpose of ascertaining whether the people's money has been honestly expended. This is a direct interference with the duty of Congress, and an effort to save the corrupt officials who have been plundering the government. If the President is wise he will order his cabinet officers to send to Congress everything they ask for, and help instead of hindering the investigation. We have sufficient confidence in him to believe that he has nothing to conceal; that although he may have done some indiscreet thing, he has done nothing culpable. His refusal to submit the original papers is in the interest of the bad men who have brought discredit upon his administration. The records of the government ought to be open, not only to Congress, but to every citizen of the republic.

I have just had a long conversation with the next Governor of Indiana, and I had the pleasure of seeing the Hon. Franklin Landers, personally congratulate Mr. Williams on his nomination, so that the story that Mr. Landers will still be the independant candidate, is absolutely false, as he told me.

Mr. Williams was greatly surprised on the receipt of the news announcing his nomination, as he had no aspirations for the position. He will accept as soon as formal notification is received, and will enter the campaign on the adjournment of Congress. He was elected a member of the House of Representatives of Indiana, thirty three years ago, and since that has been connected with the legislation of the State for twenty two years. There are few men in Indiana better acquainted with the legislative history of the State. He has long been connected with the State Board of Agriculture, and has always been recognized as a gentleman of fine executive ability. He is not a brilliant speaker, and will not be able to spread himself on the stump as has generally been the practice. He is in his sixty-eight year, but is hardy and active for one of his years. He is not the best looking man I ever saw, but when I think of the handsome Belknap, I feel much relieved that this is so. He belongs to the Grange order, as his wordrobe indicates and his suit of blue jeans commends respect here. He received about 8,000 majority in his election to this House.

Democratic County Convention.

A delegate Convention of the Democracy, of DeKalb county, will be held at Auburn, on Saturday, June 10th, 1876, at 10 o'clock A. M., to nominate for Treasurer, Sheriff, Recorder, Representative, three Commissioners, Coroner Assessor and Surveyor.

It is, therefore, requested that the Democratic voters of the county and all others opposed to the present administration of national affairs, meet at the voting places in the several townships on SATURDAY, June, 3rd, 1876, at 3 o'clock, P. M., to select delegates in accordance with the following basis of appointment to represent said townships in the county convention:

Butler township, 14; Jackson, 15; Concord, 16; Newville, 7; Stafford, 6; Wilmington, 20; Auburn, 39; Waterloo 17; South Richland, 12; North Richland 11; Fairfield, 20; Smithfield, 17; Franklin, 14; Troy, 4.

By order of the Democratic Central Committee.
T. C. MAYS,
Chairman.

Take up or lit-up the lamp posts!

Work commenced at the Stave Factory.

Mr. Roth has put a new dray on the road.

New Side Walks are going down in the city.

Hank Long, of Kendallville, was in the city this week.

Ward's new house on 6th street is nearing completion rapidly.

Dr. Spooner has purchased a neat and beautiful sulkey.

The Constable was selling "shirts on a man's back" last Monday.

Now the onion sets have quit singing "put me in my little bed."

Work has commenced on the foundation of Ensley's new block.

Laueferty sells his Goods at just what they are, and no misrepresentation.

Charley Klotz has the new furniture and French Plate Glass for his new brick.

Oats about all sown. The past week the farmers have been busy plowing for corn.

Parties who have examined the peach trees, say that the late frost has killed the buds.

Ensley is continuing work on his brick building, corner of Seventh and Ceder Streets.

The election at Butler went, by a small majority, Republican. They mixed too freely.

Don't put up the hogs this summer.—We don't want some improvements on the roads.

Seven jail birds made their escape from the Muncie jail by digging thro' the floor.

Get ready to work out your poll-tax if you don't want to join the Hook and company.

D. Kahn is a natural genius. Look at the handiwork on his new signs done by his own brush.

Al. Wells and Billy Humes amused the crowd, at the poles, by a rough and tumble "fall down."

Mr. M. L. Duck has purchased the brick building erected by Shull Bros. last summer, on Main street.

Shull run for Marshal, with no opposition on the Democratic ticket, and yet strange to say is not elected.

There was seventy-five men went to the Junction on election day, to have Joe. Miller come and vote.

There is lots of work for our new Board. The streets and sidewalks should be attended to immediately.

Crane, Duncan & Co., of Waterloo, have the contract for building the new School House at Ligonier.

If Father Floyd could have voted, it would only have been a majority of 58 but that's where the hen scratches.

The teachers and scholars of the public schools in this State have contributed over $4,300 to the centennial fund.

We hear on the streets that the Baptist minister has resigned his connection with the church in this place.

The wool clip in Los Angeles county California this year is estimated at 10,000,000 pounds, worth $1,500,000.

We have received twenty subscribers this week. It's a great consolation to know what our business is coming to.

Several parties caught fifteen pike and two black bass, out of Cedar Creek that weighed from six to twenty pounds.

The Ligonier "Banner" says that Tom C. Mays made a good secretary at the State Convention, held at Indianapolis.

And now we have a sure sign that "etherial mildness" is coming fast—you can taste the flavor of Spring grass in the butter.

We learn through our special that the old rookeries, at Kendallville, were suddenly wiped out on Friday night by the fire fiend.

The only thing needed to make the average boy happy when the sun shines is to pull off his shoes and "go it" in his bare feet.

The number of children between the ages of six and twenty-one in this town amount to 534 and increase over last year of 27.

Would'nt it be fair for the new Board to donate the wooden fire buckets to an extensive sugar camp, and replace them with leather ones.

Weamer has been sick for several days but on election day he braced. As the election went Democratic we fear he will have a "back-set."

Silver has become a common thing again, but it seems that the people would rather handle paper money, on account of its being more convenient.

Croquet playing in the yard of church members on sabbath, ought to induce every good pious man and woman to "drap the maul" henceforth and forever.

Are we going to have the street sprinkler out this Summer. It would save goods enough for our merchants to pay them for subscribing.

Jno. Hebel is about to resign the saloon business. A gentleman from Fort Wayne, applies for license in this issue, to carry on the business in John's old stand.

Slowly and cautiously the green grass begins to peep above the sod, as if featful that some rude wintry blast would sweep down and destroy its young life.

A hen will be sent from Indianapolis to the Centennial, which, in place of a beak, has a mouth with several small teeth in it, and feet that have no claws.

Messrs. Wicky, Gibben and Smith, of Fort Wayne, were the guests of Joe. E. Beugnot and F. X. Goodman, last Monday. The boys had lots o' fun and lots of—fun.

Sammy Pomert has moved his barber furniture over McQuiston's store room. The room is a new one and with Sammy's good taste and enterprise, we can expect a splendid barber shop.

It was no joke on Dave Bodine, after hitching up a horse and buggy and driving a mile down Main street after a voter, to have said voter put in a Democratic ticket. Oh, no.

We are reliably informed that the B. P. & O. railroad have discharged seven hundred men this week. The shops at Garrett City have been closed, which will be a "deadner" on the city.

At the meeting of the Republican County Committee, on Friday last it was resolved to call a mass convention of the party at Auburn on Saturday, June 24, 1876, to nominate candidates for county officers at the coming October election.

We have some merchants who do not advertise and they are the ones you can stand off. The Courier now has one 1200 subscribers and a man that understands his P's and Q's will take advantage of this. We direct our readers to the add's and warrant them good houses to deal with.

A man broke into Link's grocery at the Junction, the other day. The proprietor heard him and tackled the larky with a lamp, but the fellow got free by jumping through a window. A man by the name of Becher was captured the next morning and is now in jail waiting trial.

At the election in Butler, a fellow asked one of the saloon men to keep open until the poles opened in the morning and then open again in the evening The saloon man did so, and the "fellow" spoken of above is now a trustee of the incorporated town of Butler. There's nothing impossible.

Mr. Wiseman, of the Angola Herald, passed through the city last Saturday enroute for Chicago, with the intention of adding new presses, type, &c, to his already well selected office. We are glad to know that the people of Angola appreciate the Herald, and that they are giving it a liberal support, of which it is deserving.

The fine weather the past week has brought the farmers out, and they are pushing their spring work with a vim. There has been considerable gardening done, and with a few more days of fair weather the farmers will have their work well under way.

The day of deliverance is at hand. "J. N." has commenced kissing hotel servant girls. Some fine morning he will have a water pitcher smashed over his head and that will be the end of Jacob Free. Then the Heathen church will sing praises.

The other day when old man Smithers was trimming an apple tree, forgot himself and cut off the limb which he was standing on. He came down through the limbs making as much noise as a hurricane through a canebrake. He fell into a kettle of soft soap which his wife had placed under the tree, out of her way. The old man got mad, upset the soap and tore up things in general. His wife explained matters to him with the broom stick, and he went to work again satisfied that he was to blame for the fall.

Hank Shull, on the Republican ticket for Marshal, while excited by the large number of voters standing around the polls, pulled out $10.45 instead of tickets. After a little he went to hand it to Justice Walborn, but he couldn't get down into his vest pocket deep enough to find it. Right here is where the Republican ticket got "whipped." Hank done no more lectioneering, but a good job of hunting he did do. The balance of the day was devoted to a slow, steady walk, with down cast eyes, wishing at every step to rise and shout aloud, "Eureka!" But, alas, some one had put it carefully down, and now we hope this will be a warning to our Republican friends that—

Money spent and thrown away.
Goes hard with a fellow on election day.

CONCORD, April 29th, 1876.

MR. EDITOR:—

I beg leave to contribute a few lines for the columns of your paper, as it might interest the reader to know something in regard to the exhibitions held at Coleman's Corners and McGown's school house. As I am a disinterested person and being present at both entertainments, must say that the McGown school came out victorious, it being the best of the kind that I ever listened to in Wilmington-tp. The paper, known as the "Wilmington Truth Seeker," added much to the entertainment, and was thought enough of to cause quite an excitement, at Coleman's Corners, merely because they were unprovided with material to edit a paper in that place. Their plays consisted principally of select reading and negro dances. They are now practicing for another and we hope they will be more successful than before.

From our Exchanges.

The new school building, at Auburn, soon to be put under contract, will be quite a respectable one. Its dimensions will be 80x61 feet three stories high.—Butler Review.

That hen of G. O. Coburn's has since our last issue, laid three eggs in one day The first egg was a perfect one; the second was round as a marble, minus the shell, and the third was an irregular shaped one, also without a shell. This cannot be doubted as Mr. Coburn has ocular proof of the hen's laying the eggs in one day, not five minutes a part.—Hicksville Independent.

There is nothing singular about that. This is the Centennial year. Or mabe the hen could'nt help it.

Our "devil" wants to know when the trash along the sides of High street is to be cleared up.—Hicksville Ind.

How many families are there of them?

We saw a man in this county who represents a leading profession who wears a coat much too short to hide the rents in his trowsers. We think the members of the bar who have a pride in their county, would be justified in donating this man a pair of pants and a longer coat. Public decency demands the sacrifice.—Auburn Republican.

Now that is wrong, Bro. Weamer. Perhaps the man is honest and pays every debt he contracts It is his business to know how much cloth to wear. But to off-set every thing now in print we can say, that we know a man, not forty miles away, who wears a "Presbyterian coat" and he has, not as yet, paid for the cloth in the tail of it.

The station known as Sedan has been abolished, and is now known only as a prepared station. Our friend Esquire Urie will probably be transferred to some other point on the line. Mr. E. has served the public and the company faithfully and well.

It is well authenticated that capitalists in New York are about to construct a new line of Railway, to be called the "Bee Line," from New York to Chicago, and that a corps of engineers recently made the survey. It is proposed that the new line will be located between the B. & O. and the L. S. & M. S. R. R., about midway between Garrett and Corunna, thus giving De Kalb the sixth line of railway.

PICKLE STREET.

Never has there been such a time since the cry of the wild cat money, when our county was flooded with Banks, with not enough capital in hand cash, to redeem one quarter of their circulation, as at the present day; nor can we attribute on hard times and scarcity of money to this at the present day, for our banks are all solid, our bankers are men of means, and their security is good and the man that deposits with them is far more secure than if he had his money locked up in his own house, with the best chronometer lock, ever made. But sir our hard times come from running head over heels in debt. You earn to day one dollar and go in debt two and you are always behind. But on the other hand, if you earn one dollar and put that money where it will earn you ten to twenty per cent, you are one dollar and twenty cents ahead. But you would say at once where can I see, how can we do this? We would say in only one way, that is stop going in debt for goods run no bills allow no man to ask you for money.

Kahn sells for cash only, and by this means saves you a good interest on your money. Now, be sure you find Kahn's cheap clothing House, in Ensley's block, before you buy goods.

HOW WE DID SCOOP 'EM.

Nearly 400 Votes Cast!

The Republicans are Humming, "I wish I were a Child Again."

DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY 59!

THE ENTIRE TICKET ELECTED!

LEE AND SAM ON THIER MUSCLE?

Who's the Next Lucky Man, Etc., Etc.

Last Monday was the day for our corporation election, and it being agreed by the two parties not to "mix" tickets the election was Democrats versus Republicans. The gentlemen on either ticket would have made excellent officers, but the main object was to see which party was the strongest. In the forenoon the votes rolled in rapidly and the German friends of Mr. Otto were, to say the least, numerous. In the afternoon our Republican friends got nervous and brought out their horses and buggies and made a general canvass.—Both parties were wide awake "to their calling," and we have seen less interest taken in State elections than there was in this town election. The gentlemen who now control our town are men of ability, good judgment and economical—yet enterprising. We expect to see a different light thrown on our city and to have our citizens all benefited by each public improvement. The following is the ticket elected:

For Trustees,

1st	Ward	JOHN OTTO,
2nd	"	FRANCIS D. RYAN
3rd	"	JOHN TREESH
4th	"	EPHRAIM BERRY
5th	"	DANIEL Z. HOFFMAN

For Clerk
J. LEWIS ROTH

For Treasurer,
MITCHELL HOUSTON.

For Assessor
ANDREW J. LITTLE.

We would publish the number of votes cast for each candidate, but we have no "hard and stony heart," and will save our Republican friends from any more grief.

The Democrats beat 'em fifty-nine votes and that's the way with F. D. Ryan's Boot and shoe store— only more so. Frank beats all competitors about one half.

Why has Lauferty always a large lot of cassimeres at his store; because he sells his Clothing for less money than we could get them at wholesale prices.

If you go to F. D. Ryan's Boot & Shoe store you can get anything in his line you want. He has more varieties than any store in the county. But the main point is he sells at wholesale prices.

DRIFTED APART.

I must not look upon thy face,
Its memory dear must fade away;
Not ever more shall the soft grace
Shed light and hope on life's dark way.
[illegible]
[illegible]
Yet [illegible] the happy days
[illegible], I think, to you and me.

I love thee still, but yet must cast
The [illegible] but hopeless love away;
Like tender'st flower crushed by the blast,
Our fondest hopes must now decay.
But though we drift far, far apart,
Though cherished hopes all wither and die,
There still shall live in each sad heart,
Sad thoughts that bring both tear and sigh.

As hope is dead, would memory too
Might cease to torture with its pain!
In a common grave let both be laid,
And trouble us never, never again.
Why dream of joys too bright to last?
Why sadly mourn our bitter lot?
Better to bid farewell to the past,
Each forgetting, and each forgot.

My heart [illegible], and my prayer's [illegible],
That in the coming weary years,
In love and sunshine you may live,
With never a thought to bring you tears.
May strong arms shield you from the storm,
And loving lips thy praises speak;
Though I no more may clasp thy form,
Nor taste the roses on thy cheek.

And when God sends His angels forth,
With blessings ladened for the good and true,
To your home and hearth I pray they'll come,
And bring their richest gifts to you.
Beyond the grave we may meet again,
In a land where all are permitted to love.
Will you wait for me in that happy land;
Oh! say will you meet me there above?

CARTOUCHE.

Louis Dominique Cartouche, the son of a respectable, well-to-do wine-seller, was born at Paris in October, 1693. Anxious to secure for his son a higher position than he himself occupied, the father sent him to the College of Clermont, but his native instincts soon asserted themselves; he ran away and joined a party of gypsies. He was adopted as a child of the band, and his new friends formed the most sanguine anticipations as to his future. Bold, crafty, and inventive, he was nimble as an ape, pliant as an acrobat. To an unconquerable love of wandering, of pleasure, and idleness, he united a remarkable ability to endure, when necessary, privation and fatigue. After he had remained three years with the gypsies, they were abruptly ordered by the Parliament of Rouen to quit the province, and, as Cartouche was sick at the time, they left him behind. On his recovery he found himself alone and friendless in the streets of Rouen, without a single sou in his pocket.

By good luck he fell in with an uncle, who fed, clothed him, and sent him home, thereby affording him another opportunity for pursuing an honest career. A domestic life, however, had no charms for the ex-gypsy. After a few months tranquility he decamped from the paternal mansion one moonlight night with his father's money-box under his arm. He was then about seventeen years of age. Pocket-picking was the first branch of his future industry to which he devoted his talents. He formed a partnership with one Gaguis, and, between them, they were reaping a rich harvest, when one unlucky evening Cartouche's comrade was arrested and transmitted to Marseilles. This misadventure led our hero to turn his talents in another direction, and he took to dice and cards. Haunting the better hells, he used the skill acquired among the gypsies to such purpose that suspicions were awakened, and M. Cartouche was kicked into the street and debarred forever from that branch of industry. Tradition affirms that his next debut was in the character of a police spy. This, however, is apocryphal, and probably arose from the fact that when he appeared, as he soon did, as the organizer of a band of thieves, he exhibited ideas of discipline and subordination that, with his known character, must have been acquired from without.

Become at last an Ishmaelite, his hand against every one, and every one's hand against him, it became his constant care to impart to the skilled and desperate band which rallied around him an organization and discipline approximating as closely as possible to the military; he appointed lieutenants, sergeants, sentries, rallying and pass words, and spared no detail to insure the perfection of the instrument under his control. This completed, the campaign opened with night skirmishing. Thus some three or four of the band would pounce upon an unwary citizen, whom a blow on the head from a loaded bludgeon reduced to temporary silence. When the victim regained sufficient consciousness to give an alarm, the troop was at a safe distance, arranging the next affair. Paris was regularly apportioned into districts, one of which was alloted each night to some particular detachment of the band.

Become aware of the existence of an organized system of crime, the city, in alarm, appealed to its natural protector, M. D'Argenson, head of the police, but found little consolation. Police there were in abundance, but no controlling power, order, or system. Each worked for himself. They plundered the robber and the robbed alike. Selected without reference to their antecedents, many had served in the galleys, and many more bore the convict's brand on their shoulders. Miserably paid, they were perpetually opposed to the temptation of a bribe, and it was not long before the sheep-dog became almost as dangerous to the flock as the wolf himself.

It was in 1720 that the terror inspired by Cartouche's band reached its climax. They held virtual possession of the capital, especially by night. Their depredations were conducted with the military order and precision so much inculcated by their great leader. A party would assemble before some rich mansion. Then some huge fellow—very frequently one Simon Ouce, a brawny ex-porter—would offer his gigantic shoulders as the base of a living pyramid, which, formed by the lighter and more agile members of the gang, speedily reached the lower windows. Some panes were adroitly removed, the apartments entered, and the most attractive objects began to glide down a chain of ready hands till the pillage was complete.

The gang hunted noble game. In September, 1720, they invaded the residence of the Spanish ambassador, and stripped the chamber of the ambassadress, seizing a magnificent pearl necklace, a brooch with twenty-seven large diamonds, a rich table service of gold, and the lady's entire wardrobe. In the Palais Royal, then occupied by the regent, they stole two of his silver flambeaux. At the Louvre, Cartouche's brother possessed himself of the sword and mantle of the Prince de Soubise, while the regent himself was robbed one night on leaving the opera. Here, however, the laugh was on the other side, as, purposely to deceive the robbers, he had caused his sword-hilt to be richly chased—in steel.

Now that the inconvenience of such a state of things began to be felt in the very highest society, Government set itself seriously to the task of reform. A little incident helped to spur it on. One May morning in 1721 some laborers came upon the body of a murdered man. It proved to be that of an obscure poet named Vergier. What could possess any one to kill a poet, and so poor a one at that, was a puzzle, till some one suggested it was the regent's work. Philippe d'Orleans was black enough, in all conscience, but rumor painted him in still deeper colors. In a series of rhymed philippics he had been branded with every conceivable crime. What more natural, said the public, than that he should employ Cartouche's band to wreck his vengeance on the poet who had held him up to ridicule and shame. To be sure, Vergier was not the one who had written the verses in question, but the Cartouchians could hardly be assumed to be familiar with such gentry as starving poets, and in their zeal to execute their master's orders had mistaken the man. Stories such as this circulating through Paris caused the regent to bestir himself, and the authorities loudly demanded Cartouche; but, of course, it was much easier to ask for him than to get him.

Another murder now occurred to add the public agitation. Cartouche and his band were carousing at a cabaret, when they got into an altercation with some workmen at an adjoining table. A row ensued; swords and pistols were freely used. The police rushed in, and one of them, Mondelot, fell dead from a shot fired, it was declared, by a female Cartouchian named Manon-le-Roy. It is at least certain that this distinguished lady always carried arms, and equally so that when, some time afterward, she was arrested, she intrenched herself behind her bed and for half an hour kept the whole posse of police at bay. The murderers of Vergier and Mondelot brought the name of Cartouche prominently before the public. Henceforward every audacious crime was laid to his charge. Desperate attempts were made to capture the formidable thief, but this dexterity and skillfulness in changing his costume stood him good friends. The loose, half-fitting cloak, blue on one side, red on the other, and capable of being reversed in a moment of time, owns him for godfather. The police would be in hot pursuit of a man in red who fled like a deer around a corner. When the pursuers followed on his track he had disappeared, but they encountered a sedate individual in blue strolling quietly toward them, who had seen the aforesaid man in red dart into a neighboring house or disappear down some other street.

On one occasion the police, hearing a row in the house of a pretty lemonade-seller known as Margot the Nun, made a descent. They found a little man, half drunk, tearing around the room, firing pistols right and left, to the admiration of a mixed company of both sexes. He was arrested, and after a while represented himself to be an honest chocolate seller in the Rue Comedie-Francais, who had unfortunately taken a drop too much. He was allowed to go after depositing 100 livres and a gold snuff-box as security for his reappearance. No complaint was made against him, and in a few days he called at police headquarters and reclaimed his property. It was Cartouche.

In December, 1720, he was captured and confined in Fort l'Eveque, but in spite of the terror inspired by this redoubtable robber, so slight were the precautions taken for guarding him that he three months later effected his escape. The authorities roused themselves to unusual efforts for his recapture, and hereupon an odd incident occurred. As the officer of the criminal court was uttering the usual proclamation with sound of trumpet and outcry, calling upon Cartouche to appear within eight days and answer to the charge of murder, and had come to the words, "In the King's name we do command the person called 'Cartouche'"—

"Present, Cartouche!" shouted a voice in the center of the crowd, that turned the whole body, archers, trumpeters, citizens, and all into a frenzy of rage and agitation. It was Cartouche himself, but he had vanished.

Two persons now entered into a solemn league and covenant to pursue the impalpable robber without rest or respite till he should be slain or taken; these were Huron and Pepin, bold and clever officers in the service of the police. The chase opened ill for our hero; Huron tracked him so hotly as to exchange pistol-shots with him, by which Cartouche was said to have been seriously wounded. It is certain that, either to escape this persevering foe or to recover from his alleged hurts, he disappeared for three entire months from criminal history, and the police exultingly assured the public that he was driven from the capital. They were soon made painfully aware of his return.

A very large reward was now set on his head, and Huron and Pepin again devoted themselves to their task. The zeal of both these officers proved fatal to them. The former had one evening tracked Cartouche to a notorious robber haunt. Finding themselves likely to be surrounded, the band, like wolves at bay, turned suddenly upon Huron and his followers. The officer received several pistol shots, and was then cut down by Cartouche himself. A few days later the robber chief, while taking a quiet stroll with Madeleine Beaulieu, a woman belonging to the gang, perceived Pepin at his heels. Turning suddenly on their pursuer, Madeleine attacked him with large stones, while Cartouche ran him through the body.

A regular organized attempt was next made, under the direction of an Aide-major of the Gardes-Francies (Pekom), who selected ninety of his best men and sent them in various disguises, but well armed, in quest of the single robber chief. At this critical period of his fortunes occurred what was known as the affair of the Hotel Desmarets. Nicolas Desmarets, nephew of the great Colbert, died on the 6th of May at his hotel in the Rue des Petits Augustins. This wealthy residence Cartouche resolved should be thoroughly pillaged. A chosen band, commanded by their chief in person, forced an entrance and were busily at work in the rich saloons when one of their lookouts announced the approach of an absolute army of police. The danger signal had hardly been given before the enemy appeared. A fierce fight commenced—from room to room, from stair to stair. The robbers fought stoutly, but their ammunition failed, and they were overborne by numbers. Sauve qui peut became the order of the day. Cartouche escaped by a chimney, gained the roof, and descended at some distance in the garret of a good-natured mechanic, to whom he represented himself as a man pursued by his merciless creditors. His host sympathized with him, provided him with a disguise, and once more he broke through the toils.

The regent now doubled the reward and offered a free pardon to any one, no matter how guilty, who should betray his chief. Distrust now spread through the band, and two murders of suspected traitors quickly followed. But the hour of retribution was at hand. One Duchatelet—next to Cartouche the most ferocious of human tigers—acknowledged to himself that the game was nearly up. Plunged, as he was, in the deepest and deadliest crime, he saw but one chance of safety, and that was to denounce his chief. He made a bargain with Pekom, the Aide-major of the Gardes-Francaises, procured a promise of pardon from the regent, and then conducted a picked body of men to the robber's lair. Cartouche was taken so completely by surprise that he was secured almost without a struggle, although he had six loaded pistols ready to his hand. He was conducted to the Chatelet, and the process advanced quickly. Duchatelet, certain of reprieve, confessed to certain burglaries and murders, in which Cartouche had taken part. Notwithstanding this, the latter stoutly protested his innocence, and denied his identity, calling himself one Jean Bourguignon, a countryman.

Meanwhile he was well cared for, he received crowds of distinguished visitors, and fashionable ladies attended his levees. The most distinguished of these was the Marechale de Boufflers, widow of the gallant general who lost the battle of Malplaquet. One warm summer night in July, 1721, just as the lady had retired to bed, leaving her window a little open for air, she drew the curtain aside, and to her horror saw a man's face close to her own. She made a snatch for the bell cords, but the intruder seized her hands, opened his blouse, displaying a rich but faded costume, with a complete armory of silver-mounted pistols and knives, and introduced himself as Louis Dominique Cartouche. He had narrowly escaped the watchful eyes of the police, then in hot pursuit of him, by climbing the balcony; no one, he said, would dream of looking for him there, and he proposed to remain. He was hungry and tired, however, and wanted supper and a bed. Quaking with fear, the Marechale rang the bell, ordered her astonished servants to bring a hearty supper and a bottle of champagne, and when it came locked her door and watched the voracious robber as he disposed of all that was set before him. His repast ended, he apologized for incommoding her, stretched himself out on the sofa in her dressing-room and went to sleep. At 8 a. m. he rose, bade her good-day and vanished. She sprang out of bed, closed the windows, and alarmed the house. Search was made among the valuables, but not an article was missing; even the costly silver used for the supper had been spared by the eccentric thief. Some days later the Marechale received a basket of excellent champagne (stolen from a Parisian wine merchant) with the compliments of M. Cartouche.

The robber chief had been placed in one of those horrible subterranean dungeons destroyed in 1780 by the humane command of Louis XVI. He had a companion in trouble who had formerly worked as a stone mason; together they succeeded in making a breach in the wall of their cell, thence following a ditch connected with the sewerage of the prison they broke into the cellar of a neighboring house. Here, however, fortune ceased to befriend them; Cartouche was rearrested while endeavoring to leave the house and placed in closer custody than before.

His trial went forward with unexampled rapidity, and on Nov. 26, 1721, Cartouch and four of his companions were ordered to be broken on the wheel, after having been previously submitted to the question ordinary and extraordinary, with the view of extorting confession. The proces verbal relating to Cartouch reports the application of the question in the form of the brodeguins or boots. These were wooden frames fitted to the legs, into which wedges of increasing size were forcibly driven until the legs of the sufferer were reduced to a pulp. On the application of the first, second, and third wedge, answered that he was innocent. At the fourth answered that he knew not what they were speaking of. At the fifth that he was innocent—was dying. At the sixth that he had done all that was required of him; had done no wrong; was dying. At the seventh, was innocent—no accomplices. At the eight and last, was innocent.

Although he thus refused to confess under torture, he became communicative enough when he reached the scaffold, protesting, however, much to his credit, that he had never robbed a church, although often incited to do so by Duchatelet. He absolved his own family with especial earnestness from any share in his misdoings. He refrained from denunciations, even of those who had deserted or betrayed him, excepting only Duchatelet, toward whom he evinced intense scorn and hatred. But in revenge he was unsparing in respect to the spies and receivers of the gang, whom he denounced by the score. He avowed himself the head and chief of the numerous band, so long the terror of the capital, an assertion amply confirmed by the confusion and indiscipline, which on his decease became suddenly perceptible to the ranks of crime. To the last two questions addressed to him, whether any person of condition belonged to his band, and whether he had ever accepted bribes to murder, he replied emphatically in the negative.

Cartouche's was the first of a long series of executions. For several month the Place de Greve saw some unfortunate wretch hanged or broken. His name and memory seemed to engender robbers, and it was a long time before the effects of that powerful impulse which, by carefully organizing it, he had given to crime had passed away.

Centennial Railroad Fares.

It is time to say that the success of the Centennial exhibition is gravely imperiled.

First—There will be on the opening day—the 10th of next month—a serious lack of American furniture at hand, and some of the foreign departments will be in partial chaos.

Second—The inefficient methods of advertising adopted by the Centennial Commission, with no positive assurance against local extortions, have set people at thinking twice about spending their money at the big show.

Third—The railroad companies have made an extraordinary blunder in reducing their passenger rates to and from Philadelphia only twenty-five per cent. Negro minstrel troupes and opera and theatre companies can get better terms any time of the year.

The managers of the Exhibition have in some directions displayed unprecedented abilities and resources. The buildings are excellent. Many arrangements for public convenience, health and comfort, which were wanting at London, Paris and Vienna, are nearly completed at Philadelphia. But it is a great pity if Gov. Hawley, the President of the Centennial Commission, and Mr. Welsh, the President of the Centennial Board of Finance, have been so much engrossed by the details of their respective departments as to omit any endeavor to check the apprehensions which exist all over the country that "it will cost too much to go to the big show." That widespread apprehension to this effect prevails, is a fact that there is no use in concealing. It is testified to by our country exchanges from all quarters of the Union, and by railroad agents in divers places. These are hard times. Western and southern merchants would like to unite with their business in New York a visit to the Centennial exhibition with their families; but if prices are too high, wives and children will stay at home. The promoters of stock shows and country fairs are everywhere holding out unusual inducements to keep the country people from spending their money outside of their own neighborhoods.

The railroad companies should announce half-rates immediately, and the Centennial Commission should publish an authoritative schedule of living prices at and near Philadelphia.—New York World.

A Cure for Strikes.

This is the war between labor and capital—capital continually withdrawing itself from healthful work because it is afraid of losing its price, continually at difference with its one friend, without whom it must perish; labor striking, demanding shorter time, more wages, dictating imperious rules about piece-work and apprentices, quarreling with its one friend, without whom it must die or seek the poor-house. To adjust these differences is the problem of the day.

One way out of the difficulty is to make the laborer a capitalist. The savings bank is the chief aid in this direction. Let the worker put a part of his earnings in a bank, and he becomes a capitalist in a small way. He learns to view the subject of interest and dividends with the eyes of a lender, and he is straightway jealous of his capital and its rights. He joins the other party, and, belonging to both, he the more readily sees that it is for the interest of both to work together. Education is offered as another solution. Give the workingman a business education, and he learns to see and understand the laws that govern the movements of wages and interest. Finally comes the idea of co-operation—the giving the laborer a share in the guidance and profits of the work, the union of capital and labor in any particular undertaking. Co-operation is, in theory, the most sensible and the most just solution to this question that has been offered. In practice, it has been attended with every imaginable degree of success and failure. It has been repeatedly tried in every branch of business, both here and in Europe. In a certain way, it is already in active operation through the agency of savings banks, loan, friendly, and building associations, and insurance companies. But, as these are usually managed, they are not wholly co-operative in a commercial sense. In the case of savings banks, the laborers contribute to the capital and have no control over it, while capitalists manage the funds for a salary, or an extra dividend, or other consideration, over and above the interest paid to the real owners of the money.—Scribner for May.

Cost of a Trip to the Centennial.

A correspondent of the Chicago Times has figured the matter out, and places the cost of a round trip, via the Baltimore and Ohio road, to the Centennial, as follows:

1. Excursion ticket Chicago to Philadelphia and return	$32 00
2. Four meals going, $3 00; four meals returning, $3 00—total	6 00
3. Supper, lodging and breakfast in Philadelphia one day	2 50
4. Street car fare, two trips	14
5. Admission to exposition	50
6. Noon lunch in Centennial grounds	50
Total cost of trip and one day at exposition	$40 64
Sleeping-car, double berth, each way $5 00	10 00
Total	$50 64
Each additional day at exposition as per items 3, 4, 5 and 6	3 64

From the above statement it will be seen that a person can go to the Centennial by this line, with first-class accommodations, and remain ten days at a cost of $73.40—with sleeping-car, $83.40—two persons, occupying the double berth, $156.80.

Antidote for Rattlesnake Bite.

A writer in the St. Augustine (Fla.) Press says that a postoffice agent traveling in Texas, tells of the successful use of the gall of a rattlesnake as an antidote for the bite of that reptile. In the case spoken of relief was almost instantaneous to the patient, who was writhing in paroxysms of great pain, rapidly swelling and becoming purple. A friend of the writer, who had spent several years in California and New Mexico, saw the same remedy successfully used among the Indians in the latter country. In one instance an Indian's dog near the camp was bitten in the nose by a large rattlesnake. The Indians immediately opened the reptile and administered the gall. The cure was rapid and effectual.

THE CHINESE AT HOME.

Their Courts of Law and Instruments of Punishment—An Interesting Picture of Mongol Civilization.

[Shanghae Cor. New York World.]

To foreigners who are not familiar with the actions of courts of justice (so-called) in China, some account of them may be interesting. I was about to call them courts of law, but that seemed even more a misnomer than the one I have adopted, and should I confine myself strictly to the subject I should perforce take my model from Miss Edgeworth's chapter on the snakes of Ireland and write, "there are no laws in China," for this is very near the truth.

The Chinese have nothing that can be called a code or system or law. Some years ago a gentleman in the British consular service, well qualified to make the investigation, attempted to ascertain what the commercial laws of China are, but his researches were followed by no satisfactory result. There are some old usages and customs which the magistrates follow when it suits them to do so, but the purely civil business of the courts is very small, ordinary business differences being settled by compromise between the parties or by the guilds, of which every business or industry has one. Even the professional thieves have their organization, which is well known to the police. These guilds have very considerable power over their members, and, indeed, form a part of the machinery of government. No Chinaman of ordinary experience will take a civil claim before a magistrate if he can avoid it. As a preliminary, he must fee all the runners and hangers-on of the yamen or court-room, after which he must be prepared to pay a handsome bribe to the magistrate, having always the encouraging consciousness that the adverse party may outbid him. Even should he succeed in obtaining a judgment, he is by no means certain that it will be executed, as a judicious use of money on the other side may open the eyes of the magistrate to the injustice of his first decision, and induce him to treat it as a nullity.

Criminal jurisdiction is exercised much in the same manner. There is something called criminal law, but it is very imperfect and of little practical value. The same system of bribery that prevails in the trial of civil cases is found quite as effectual in criminal proceedings.

If a wealthy of influential crimina should be convicted, which is not often the case, he can buy immunity from punishment, except in the case of political offenders and others of a similar nature. Besides, even in the case of punishment, one is never quite sure that the sufferer is really the guilty man, for money in China can induce a poor starveling to take a flogging, and the convicted criminal by paying a few "cash" is tortured by proxy. This may seem an incredible statement, but it is not an exaggeration.

One is constantly reminded of the accounts of the administration of justice in the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments," and decisions, that seem to us monstrous, are bought and quietly submitted to with the same stolidity which characterizes the victims of the stories, only here they have no hope of the timely interference of a good roun al Raschid.

As if to form a startling contrast to the deficiencies of the preliminary proceedings, every arrangement is made for speedy punishment, and as the condemned passes out of the yamen he passes into the hands of the executioner, who stands ready, in the court-yard, with his lash, the cangue, the cage or the axe, as the case may require. Perhaps I can remind your readers in no better way of how far back in the history of civilization one has to go in order to estimate correctly that of the Chinese, than by describing some of the instruments of punishment still in use among them.

The cangue, which is used for minor offenses, is a heavy board about three feet square, having a hole in the middle large enough to fit around a man's throat; the board is made to divide in the middle, and being placed upon the offender, is closed and locked, leaving only his head above the aperture. Looking at the man in a sitting posture, everything below the cangue being concealed by it, one is reminded of the pictures of the head of John the Baptist on a charger.

This being worn night and day, allows the man no sleep except what he gets by resting his head backwards on the edge of the cangue, and in the season of flies and mosquitoes the culprit is a helpless victim to their tortures, as the cangue is of such proportions as to preclude all possibility of reaching the head and face with the hands. The ludicrous element of this kind of punishment, which to an Anglo-Saxon would, in itself, be exquisite torture, has no force whatever with a Chinese thief.

In the punishment of the "cage" there is no element of absurdity. It is literally a cage just large enough to contain a man, inclosed with bars on all sides and on the top, the floor only being solid.

The condemned is tied up by the arms so that his toes barely touch the floor, with a burning tropical sun beating upon his unprotected head; and he is there left, without food or water, to be gazed at by a gaping crowd until death comes to his relief.

There is no such thing as a Chinese bar to conduct cases in court, and the witnesses are not under oath; moreover, perjury, as a crime, is not recognized, although if a witness can be convicted of having by false testimony caused serious injury to another he may be punished, although I never heard of but one such case. That was a case in which Chinese witnesses testified in a British court against a prisoner charged with murder, and afterwards admitted that not only was the prisoner innocent, but that no murder had been committed. The Consul before whom the case was tried exerted himself to the utmost to have the false witnesses punished, but only succeeded in procuring a sentence of two months' imprisonment, and that was probably never executed.

Perverted Phrases.

Walpole is credited with the sweeping censure, "All men have their price." What he did say, referring to certain venal statesmen of the time, was, "All those men have their price." Neither did Jefferson say of office-holders: "Few die and none resign;" but he came pretty near it, saying, in the matter of vacancies: "Those by death are few; br resignation none."

HOE OUT YOUR ROW.

One day a farmer's lazy boy
Was hoeing out the corn,
And moodily had listened long
To hear the dinner horn.
The welcome blast was heard at last,
And down he dropped his hoe;
But the good man shouted in his ear,
"My boy, hoe out your row."

Although a "hard one" was the row,
To use a plowman's phrase,
The lad, as sailors have it,
Beginning well to "haze,"
"I can," said he, and manfully
He seized again his hoe,
And the good man smiled to see
The boy hoe out his row.

The lad the text remembered,
And proved the moral well,
That perseverance to the end
At last will nobly tell.
Take courage, man! resolve you can,
And strike a vigorous blow;
In life's great field of varied toil,
Always "hoe out your row."

SNOW-FLAKES.

Whenever a snow-flake leaves the sky,
It turns and turns to say "Good-bye!
Good-bye, dear cloud, so cool and gray!"
Then lightly travels on its way.
And when a snow-flake finds a tree,
"Good-day!" it says—"Good-day to thee!"
Thou art so bare and lonely, dear,
I'll rest and call my comrades here."
But when a snow-flake, brave and meek,
Lights on a rosy maiden's cheek,
It starts—"How warm and soft the day!
'T is summer!"—and it melts away.

DURING the drizzling rain yesterday a Woodward avenue car jumped the track and almost struck the curbstone. The driver said he'd have it back on the track in about a minute, but the only lady on the car at once stepped off into the rain. "You'll get wet—you'd better stay inside," called the driver. "Never mind the rain," she pleasantly replied. "The car is off the track, and I don't wish to remain where my presence would act as a check on any emphatic remarks which those half-dozen gentlemen may desire to make."—Detroit Free Press.

A YOUNG blood of San Francisco, much given to quizzing people, went into a restaurant the other day, and with a great flourish took a seat at one of the tables. A waiter approached. "What have you got to eat?" asked the customer. "Oh, got almost everything." "You have, eh?" "Yes, sir." "Almost everything; will you give me a plate of that?" he said, looking earnestly at the waiter. The waiter returned his gaze, and, catching the fellow's idea of quizzing him, he yelled to the cook at the further end of the room: "One plate of hash!"

A Texas Incident.

The Waco (Texas) Examiner, of the 4th inst., has a paragraph headed, "Neatly Done," which reads: "A young man living some ten or fifteen miles above the city was awakened one night recently by the suspicious barking and growling of his dogs in the yard. Rising lightly from bed, he peeped out through the window pane, and there sure enough, he discovered the cause of the disturbance. Dimly outlined in the moonlight stood the form of a man. With one hand he was evidently untying the gentleman's fine horse, which stood haltered for the night, while with the other he held a six-shooter, pointing directly at the front door. Taking in the situation at a glance, our young friend gently reached for his shot-gun, and, passing out at the back door and round the corner, opened the attack from an unexpected and wholly ungarded quarter. Under this skillful generalship the enemy came down while in the act of mounting, and without even so much as responding to the first fire. The deceased was buried without the honors of either peace or war."

Reformed Method of Studying History.

Barnes, the schoolmaster in a suburban town, read in the Educational Monthly that boys could be taught history better than in another way by letting each boy in the class represent some historical character, and relate the acts of that character as if he had done them himself. This struck Barnes as a mighty good idea, and he resolved to try it on. The school had then progressed so far in its study of the history of Rome as the Punic wars, and Mr. Barnes immediately divided the boys into two parties, one Romans and the other Carthagenians, and certain of the boys were named after the leaders upon both sides. All the boys thought it was a big thing, and Barnes noticed that they were so anxious to get to the history lesson that they could hardly say their other lessons properly.

When the time came, Barnes ranged the Romans upon one side of the room and the Carthagenians on the other. The recitation was very spirited, each party telling about its deeds with extraordinary unction. After a while Barnes asked a Roman to describe the battle of Cannæ. Whereupon the Romans heaved their copies of "Wayland's Moral Science" at the enemy. Then the Carthagenians made a battering-ram out of a bench and jammed it among the Romans, who retaliated with a volley of books, slates and chewed paper balls. Barnes concluded that the battle of Cannæ had been sufficiently illustrated, and he tried to stop it; but the warriors considered it too good a thing to let drop, and accordingly the Carthagenians sailed over to the Romans with another battering-ram and thumped a couple of them in the stomach.

Then the Romans turned in and the fight became general. A Carthagenian would grasp a Roman by the hair and hustle him around over the desks in a manner that was simply frightful to behold, and a Roman would give a fiendish whoop and knock a Carthagenian over the head with Greenleaf's arithmetic. Hannibal got the head of Scipio Africanus under his arm, and Scipio, in his efforts to break away, stumbled, and the two generals fell and had a rough and tumble fight under the blackboard. Caius Gracchus tackled Hamilcar with a ruler, and the latter, in his struggles to get loose, fell against the stove and knocked down about thirty feet of stove-pipe. Thereupon the Romans made a grand sally, and in five minutes they ran the entire Carthagenian army out of the schoolroom, and Barnes along with it, and then they locked the door and began to hunt up the apples and lunch in the desks of the enemy.

After consuming the supplies they went to the windows and made disagreeable remarks to the Carthagenians who were standing in the yard, and dared old Barnes to bring the foe once more into battle array. Then Barnes went for a policeman, and when he knocked at the door it was opened, and all the Romans were found busy studying their lessons. When Barnes came in with the defeated troops he went for Scipio Africanus, and pulling him out of his seat by the ear, he thrashed that great military genius with a rattan until Scipio began to cry, whereupon Barnes dropped him and began to paddle Caius Gracchus. Then things settled down in the old way, and next morning Barnes announced that history in the future would be studied as it always had been; and he wrote a note to the Educational Monthly to say that, in his opinion, the man who suggested the new system ought to be led out and shot. The boys do not now take as much interest in Roman history as they did on that day.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

In Durance Vile.

A letter from Jefferson City, Mo., says: Gen. John McDonald, the ex-supervisor, and Wm. O. Avery, the ex-chief clerk of the Treasury department, sentenced at St. Louis a week ago, were brought here this afternoon under two Deputy United States Marshals. McDonald, at the head of the United States troops, captured this place in 1861, and held it for some time, occupying the Governor's mansion as his headquarters. Upon his arrival here to-day he insisted on walking to the Madison house, followed by 200 or 300 men and boys, rather to Avery's amusement, who would have liked a conveyance. After dinner McDonald led the way to the penitentiary, still on foot, and arrived there several rods in advance of the deputy marshal. The prisoners were turned over to Capt. Bradbury, relieved of their baggage, and immediately conveyed through the inner gate and into the penitentiary. As soon as the party entered Col. John A. Joyce, in his full zebra suit, made his appearance at the door of the negro ward, over which he is the superintendent, and was greeted with a laugh by Avery, to whom his appearance seemed very amusing. McDonald and Avery were taken into the central tower of the hollow square and there informed by Bradbury of the regulations, which are very stringent. They were relieved of their jewelry, watches, knives and money. Joyce was brought in by a guard and he and McDonald indulged in a good deal of chaff at each other's expense. Both reiterated their entire innocence of the charges on which they had been convicted. Joyce, referring to the State's witnesses, inquired after the forty thieves outside, and McDonald told him he had left them there to save the country. Bradbury had intended to put on the convict garb at once, but after taking a mental measure of both McDonald and Avery, who were small men, said he would furnish them with suits in the morning.

The Force of the Wind.

The force of the wind when traveling at high velocities is capable of producing the most extraordinary effects on exposed objects, such as buildings, trees, animals, and even bodies of water. In March, 1875, a series of destructive tornadoes visited North and South Carolina and Georgia, and Sergeant Calver, of the signal service, was ordered to investigate their character and effects. Among other remarkable instances of wind force he reported that "a rock weighing eighteen thousand pounds, and having thirty-five square feet of exposed surface, was moved seven feet." "A pine log, weighing twelve hundred pounds, and with thirty-five feet of exposed surface, was carried a quarter of a mile." "A pineboard was driven through a telegraph pole." "A bale of cotton weighing five hundred pounds was carried a quarter of a mile." The sergeant-observer calculates the following degrees of force for the relative velocity of the wind: Pressure, 26.9 pounds per square foot of exposed surface; velocity, 73.3 miles per hour; 80.5 pounds, 78.1 miles; 77.7 pounds, 124.6 miles. He further estimates that some of the results could not have been produced by a wind traveling at a less velocity than about seven hundred miles an hour.

Rumor that Stanley Has Been Deserted by His Men.

The Liverpool correspondent of the New York Herald interviewed Lieut. Cameron as to his explorations in Africa. In the course of the conversation he asked:

"Did you hear anything of Stanley?"

"Yes, I heard of him several times. Of course he was away to the northward of my most northerly point. Poor fellow, he has a desperate class of people to deal with, and any one less determined than he would have been swept out of existence long ago. Several traders whom I saw at Nyangwe spoke of him. They had heard of him at Mtesa's. He was described as a short, heavy-set man, in white clothes—in fact, I am absolutely certain from many other facts stated by them that they were speaking of Stanley. The headmen and Portuguese traders of the Lualaba region are deeply interested in Stanley's trip, and frequent inquiries were made for him in Nyangwe. If he is fortunate enough to get through to that point from the Albert lake region he will find very good friends, who will furnish him provisions and all necessary outfit. Dugumbe, the headman of the settlers at Nyangwe, would do anything in his power for him. With his aid Stanley can get boats and practically solve forever the great Congo-Lualaba question. I do hope nothing will happen to the intrepid fellow. I heard many rumors about the desertion of his men, and the desperate straits to which he had been reduced; but such reports are always in circulation, and there was no means of either verifying or disproving them. I can say only this, that if his men have lost heart and begun to desert the case is very serious. It will not do any good to knock a few of them on the head. The rest will simply sit down and shake their heads, but go further they will not. I can tell you, from the bitterest of experience, that it is a dreadful position to find one's self in—alone in the wilderness, among human wild beasts, hundreds of miles between you and succor, and starvation staring you in the face. But I have only looked at the worst side of the picture. I have hope that Stanley will come out all right, and I am sure that in the bottom of my heart I hope so."

"What did you do with the men whom you brought through with you from Zanzibar to the west coast, Lieutenant?" I asked.

"I sent them around the cape in a schooner, and they are probably at home by this time."

Utilizing the Tramp.

They have established a good method in the interior of New York State for feeding the houseless poor, tramps, vagrants and the respectably destitute. They make them work for what they receive as relief. The town board of audit, answering the purpose of a board of relief, have an arrangement with the police, and to these the charge of the poor is given. A tramp receives a ticket from the board, which he presents to the police, who give him a plank bed similar to those in the "Soup House." The terms of entertainment are that the applicant shall, in the morning, before breakfast, break two bushels of stone. On these conditions he remains or leaves as the case may be. The arrangement has proved a success. The tramps, vagrants, or whatever you choose to call them, work for what they receive, and the theory of mendicant charity is to a great extent dispensed with. Women and children and disabled men are of course exempt from this rule, and are fed and lodged according to circumstances.

The tramps accommodated in these small towns numbered 744, the cost of which was $174.25; the amount of stone broken was 2,076 bushels, which, at five cents per bushel, is equal to $148.80, leaving a cost to the board only of $25.46, which was more than paid by the profit on the breakage of the stone. In years before this labor system was employed, the cost of feeding and lodging tramps, etc., varied from $400 to $800. The labor test extends to the resident applicants for relief, and they accept it readily. Every man who applies is required to go to the stone-yard and break stone, for which he receives at the rate of five cents per bushel. No money is paid, but an order is given for such supplies as his family may need, at the labor rates. The average day's work of these men has been twenty-five bushels, equal to $1.25 per day.

The result of this experiment is to diminish the number of applicants and to teach the idle the practical lesson that they must work to live. They ask for bread and are presented with a bushel of stone to give them an appetite.

Fifty Miles on a Bicycle.

The great fifty mile international champion bicycle contest between D. Stanton, champion of England, and Wm. C. McClellan, champion of America, for $700, was decided in the American Institute last evening. Stanton won the race in fine style. McClellan was in training ten days. Up to the sixteenth mile Stanton crossed the score two miles and a quarter on the lead; but then McClellan quit his bicycle and rushed after Messenger, accusing him of tampering with his machine. Messenger denied it. After Stanton had ridden twenty-five miles McClellan got on his bicycle and rode twenty miles and two laps, and then fell headforemost on the floor exhausted. He went off the track and gave up the race. Stanton made his fifty miles in three hours and four minutes; McClellan's twenty-one miles was made in 1 hour, 38 minutes and 22 seconds. Stanton's wheel was 58 inches in diameter, and McClellan's wheel was 56 inches.—New York Sun.

A. T. Stewart's Business Methods.

Mr. Stewart was a strictly just but not a generous man in his dealings. He always kept his own word scrupulously, and required others to do the same. If he promised to pay a dollar, he paid a dollar, and if a man promised him a dollar, nothing less than the dollar would satisfy him. Hence he got the reputation of being hard and exacting, and consequently was rather unpopular. He was also a strictly truthful man. He never told lies nor asked anybody in his employ to tell them. The foundation of his business success was the reputation, which his establishment gained at an early day, for describing goods exactly as they were, offering them at the lowest price intended to be taken, and then making no deviations. When he first opened his store it was the custom of sellers and buyers to chaffer over their transactions. The dealer asked more than he intended to take, and the buyer offered less than he intended to give, and a long debate followed. The result was that timid people, women and young persons, were very glad to find a place where they could look at goods, ask prices, and then have nothing more to do than to make up their minds whether to take them or leave them. Mr. Stewart also had the reputation of paying the lowest market rate of salaries to his clerks. This was partly owing to his natural shrewdness, and partly to the fact that he was constantly overwhelmed with applications for situations. Having only to pick from a great number who offered themselves, and who were anxious for employment on any terms, he found it easy to secure clerks at salaries far below those that many other employers were compelled to pay. But whatever he promised to pay was paid punctually and fully. And in the course of his long career it has never been alleged against him that he ever defrauded man or child of a cent. At the same time he required of all the fullest performance of the duties that they undertook, and a very slight failure was in his eyes sufficient cause for dismissal. As an illustration of his business tact, it is mentioned that on opening his great retail store he instructed his clerks to pay particular attention to the poor women who entered at the Fourth avenue doors, his object being to break up the Bowery trade. And he did it effectually.—New York Tribune.

Castelar on the Eastern Question.

The New York Herald publishes an article on the war feeling in Europe, from ex-President Castelar. In regard to the Eastern question, he says:

"There is but one cause for war, a considerable cause—the Eastern question. But the Eastern question may not lead to immediate conflict. The two nations most interested and compromised in that affair have, and do still, unless they have recently changed their opinion, wisely abstained from any view having an extreme or exaggerated character. England does not maintain, as in other times, even to the point of the sword, the inviolable integrity of the Turkish empire; neither does Russia act with such promptness as she was wont to do in the holy city of Constantine. Each has had her ardor moderated through the cooling influence of experience. England knows that in order to oppose Russia she requires to regain the Western support she lost completely through her neglect to protest, in any way, against the consummation of the unhappy dismemberment of France. Russia, on her part, knows that in order to turn the Eastern question to account she must complete her great system of railroads and the armament of the numerous contingent of her reserves. At this moment, by tacit consent, the nations of the north, as well as those of the interior of Europe, have accepted the principal initiative, and the important note of that Austrian empire which was so much denounced when she cast the shade of death over Germany and Italy. But at this time, also, her mediation may deaden the tremendous shock of Eastern Europe with Europe of the West, a shock that might occasion many awful disasters. Geography has an immense influence in politics, and geography imposes upon Austria and the Turks various limited intersections between the two peoples and their multiple populations. Again, the Austro-Hungarian empire exercises its authority over an immense multitude of slaves just as Turkey does—slaves of Bohemia, Galicia, Croatia, and the whole of ancient Illyria."

Points of Difference.

We can never become careless, or comparatively careless, of our points of difference, until we learn what wretched stuff they are made of; that these points of difference reside in opinions acquired at no cost at all, and that they often rise no higher in the scale of value than borrowed prejudices. So long as "orthodoxy" of opinion is more elaborately insisted on in the pulpit than love and purity; so long as dogmatic theology has the lead of life; so long as Christianity is made so much a thing of the intellect and so subordinately a thing of the affections, the points of difference between the churches will be made of more importance than the points of sympathy. Pride of opinion must go out before sympathy and charity can come in. So long as brains occupy the field, the heart cannot find standing room. When our creeds get to be longer than the moral law; when Christian men and women are taken into, or shut out of, churches on account of their opinions upon dogmas that do not touch the vitalities of Christian life and character; when men of brains are driven out of churches or shut away from them because they cannot have liberty of opinion, and will not take a batch of opinions at second-hand, our pride of opinion becomes not only ridiculous, but criminal, and the consummation of Christian unity is put far off into the better future.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for May.

Meerschaum.

Meerschaum shavings and dust are used when compressed for making inferior or imitation pipes. Forty-one thousand hundred weight of this waste is annually consumed in Vienna in the production of pipes, cigar-holders, etc., and the imitation has been carried to such perfection that connoisseurs sometimes find it difficult to distinguish these articles from similar ones of the genuine substance. Of the meerschaum itself, 12,000 cases, each weighing fifty or sixty pounds, and worth £35 a case, are used up in Vienna alone. In working up the shavings and dust into materials, about sixty women are employed in sorting, sifting, washing, and cleansing the refuse and rubbing it through silken sieves.

The Successful Physician.

[From the St. Louis Globe.]

There is probably no man to whom the community owe so much as to the honest, fair-spoken physician, who does his actual duty both to himself and to his patients. Really skillful physicians are not so numerous that their virtues need no mention, and hence the advertisement of Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, may well claim the reader's attention. Dr. Pierce is a type of a class of men who obtain success by careful and well-directed effort, not attempting too much, or creating false ideas as to ability. The only reliable physician in these days of complicated disorders and high-pressure living is the "Specialist," the man who understands his one branch of the business. Such in his line is Dr. Pierce. For the benefit of his readers he has written a "Common Sense Medical Adviser," which is well worth reading by those who need such a work. With strict business honor, high professional skill, reasonable fees, and a large corps of competent assistants, Dr. Pierce will doubtless make his name familiar as "household words."

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.—The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country.

Three Points
FOR CONSIDERATION.

During the past five years the VEGETINE has been steadily working itself into public favor, and those who were at first most incredulous in regard to its merit are now its most ardent friends and supporters.

There are three essential causes for those having such a horror of patent medicines changing their opinion and lending their influence toward the advancement of VEGETINE. 1st. It is an honestly-prepared medicine from barks, roots and herbs. 2d. It honestly accomplishes all that is claimed for it, without leaving any bad effects in the system. 3d. It presents honest vouchers in testimonials from honest, well-known citizens, whose signatures are a sufficient guarantee of their earnestness in the matter. Taking into consideration the vast quantity of medicine brought conspicuously before the public through the flaming advertisements in the newspaper columns, with no proof of merit or genuine vouchers of what it has done, we should be pardoned for manifesting a small degree of pride in presenting the following testimonial from Rev. J. S. DICKERSON, D.D., the popular and ever genial pastor of the South Baptist Church, Boston:

THE TIRED BODY SUES FOR SLEEP.

BOSTON, March 16, 1874.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—It is as much from a sense of duty as of gratitude that I write to say that your VEGETINE—even if it is a patent medicine—has been of great help to me when nothing else seemed to avail which I could safely use. Either excessive mental work or unusual care brings upon me a nervous exhaustion that desperately needs sleep, but as desperately defies it. Night after night the poor, tired body sues for sleep until the day dawn is welcomed back, and we begin our work tired out with an almost fruitless chase after rest. Now I have found that a little VEGETINE taken just before I retire gives me sweet and immediate sleep, and without any of the evil effects of the usual narcotics. I think two things would tend to make brain-workers sleep. 1st. A little less work. 2d. A little more VEGETINE. This prescription has helped me.

Now, I have a particular horror of "patent medicines," but I have a greater horror of being afraid to tell the straight-out truth. The VEGETINE has helped me, and I own it up. Yours, etc., J. S. DICKERSON.

VALUABLE EVIDENCE.

The following unsolicited testimonial from Rev. O. T. WALKER, D.D., formerly pastor of Bowdoin Square Church, and at present settled in Providence, R. I., must be esteemed as reliable evidence:

No one should fail to observe that this testimonial is the result of two years' experience with the use of VEGETINE in the Rev. Mr. Walker's family, who now pronounce it invaluable:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., 164 Transit street.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

I feel bound to express with my signature the high value I place upon your VEGETINE. My family have used it for the last two years. In nervous debility it is invaluable, and I recommend it to all who may need an invigorating, renovating tonic. O. T. WALKER, Formerly Pastor Bowdoin Sq. Church, Boston.

The Enemy of Disease, the Foe of Pain to Man and Beast, Is the Grand Old MUSTANG LINIMENT, WHICH HAS STOOD THE TEST OF 40 YEARS. THERE IS NO SORE IT WILL NOT HEAL, NO LAMENESS IT WILL NOT CURE, NO ACHE, NO PAIN, THAT AFFLICTS THE HUMAN BODY, OR THE BODY OF A HORSE OR OTHER DOMESTIC ANIMAL, THAT DOES NOT YIELD TO ITS MAGIC TOUCH. A bottle costing 25c., 50c. or $1.00, has often saved the life of a human being, and restored to life and usefulness many a valuable horse.

No honest fair-minded man can approve of the open frauds perpetrated by the Republican party yesterday.

It must console Morton's friends to have him indorsed by that Nestor of corruption, that hoary-headed old reprobate Simon Cameron.

The prospect for a good wheat crop, on sandy soil, is quite flattering but not so promising on clay ground. The fruit outlook is very encouraging.

— When the South hears of the valiant things done by the negroes at Morton's home will they fail to go for him solid at the Cincinnati convention?

Blue Jeans Williams, the veteran Hoosier, like William Allen, is popular with the people. He will be the next Governor of Indiana.

It is to be hoped that nobody will be inconsiderate enough to atempt Morton to make another explanation. What is the loss of $250,000 to being to death with his old speech.

Since the exposure of Blaine's rascality he is more endeared to Radical leaders. Just as Morton's corruption was assuming shape at the capital his followers carried out his bedding more faithfully than usual.

A LaGrange county correspondent writes us: "The fruit prospects in this county were never better; peaches and apples especially. Wheat badly winter-killed-indication of about half a crop."

Hanging out carpets, clothing, dry goods ets., across the sidewalk to playfully beat the passers-by in the face is a method of advertising that ought to be prohibited by law.

Since the 1st of January, there have been 956 accession to the Methodist churches in the Greensburg and Columbus distrects will some one send us the correct numbes for this district, and lets see if we can't scoop 'em.

If you can find no employment, rent a lot an acre or two of ground, and go to work for yourselves. You can easily raise enough to keep your family, and that is better than croaking about hard times and compelling your family to live on chips and whet-stones.

Caution to Auburn girls: "A girl employed in a paper mill at Westfield, Massachusetts, suffered a severe attack of lock-jaw last week in which the jaws were set for nearly two hours. The doctor said the trouble was the result of an inveterate habit of chewing gum."

A young lady, on Fifth street, in much false hair was warbling at the piano, and when her mother summoned her to assist in some household duties, her rosy lips opened poutingly and snapped out "O, do it yourself!" And then went on singing, "Kind words can never die."—

LaFayette has a young ladies orchestra led and drilled by a young lady.—She will have plenty to do now in drilling the spring styles of hats to wear when coming out to practice. Mrs. Little & Fair are the ones in town who have the genuine.

Quite a number of our farmer friends got out stove wood last fall intending to keep it until it would bring a big price. There was nothing wrong about that but then when it would bring the best price the roads were so bad they could not cart it, and now they are between two opinions, whether to keep it over or sell it for what it will fetch.

"The first payment of silver coin was made by Treasurer New last week to Representative Foster, of the Appropriation Committee. On Thursday regular payment of coin for fractional currency will begin, regulations to this effect having been prepared at the Treasury. It is expected there will be a heavy demand for silver for the first few days."

The rapid and emphatic recital of the following is said to be an infallible cure for lisping: Hobbs meets Snobbs and Nobbs; Hoobs bods to Snobbs and Nobbs; Hobbs nobs with Snobbs and robs Nobb's fobs. This is," says Fobbs," the worst for Hobb's jobs," and Snobbs sobs. y-y-s-s, t-t-is.

Auburn has survived the deluge of mud; and is beginning to dust herself for the centennial. The winter has been long; business dull; but amusements plenty. The last few days of fine weather have, however, has brought more encouragement, and bright prospects to all except the unhappy few whose lot ever is to wait for prosperity in the future. Business is reviving and travel is on the increase; although it is hardly probable that we shall surpass Fort Wayne" within this year at least.

An adroit swindle was perpetrated in Paris the other day. A well-dressed man who passed as Lord G—of England and was registered at the Grand Hotel, called at one of the most fashionable bootmakers and ordered a pair of remarkably handsome boots. The boots were to be made without any regard to cost, and to be sent to the Grand Hotel on the following morning at 11 o'clock, Lord G—wished to have them at 12. A like ordes was given by him to another fashionable bootmaker, who was told to bring his boots at 3 o'clock the next afternoon. On the following day, when the first bootmaker appeared the noble lord found the boots satisfactory, with the exception of the right one being a little tight. The left boot could be left however and he would postpone his departure another day and meantime the tight boot could be stretched. On its return he would pay for the pair. The bootmaker was pleased at his success, and withdrew with the right boot. A similar interview took place later in the day with bootmaker No. 2, who was asked to take away the left boot of his pair and leave the other. Not suspecting anything wrong he did so promising to return with it early in the morning. At 11 the next day two disconsolate bootmakers, each holding an old boot, might have been seen in the Grand Hotel, seeking in vain for their noble patron, who had left with his spoils.

The Defiance Democrat says: By Grant's direct order one hundred and eighty thousand dollars were taken from the United States Treasury in 1872 to help Grant's election in New York. The exposures of Republican corruption grow more astonishing every day. It seems that the treasury was a common fund to further the interests of the party and every bummer whom the President had around him had access to the vaults when votes were to be purchased or Radical machinery to be manipublated. In the face of these terrible charges against the men who manage the Republican party it would seem impossible for the people to contiune the party longer in power. If there was even a hope for a change being brought about in the party itself the rank and file of the Republican party might be excused for going up to the ballot box and voting for another Republican. But there is no hope for an improvement. Every Republican who has been mentioned for President is controlled by bad men, even as much as Grant has been. Morton is corrupt. So is Conkling. Bristow is full of crookedness. Likewise Blaine of Maine. All of them have made politics a money making machine. Hayes gave countenance the past winter to all of the rascally partisan schemes of the Republican Legislature of Ohio. He would be a willing tool in the hands of bad men if he were in Washington. For honesty and a desire for economy in government, the people will have to turn to the Democratic party for help in this serious time of trouble.

The Ind. Sentinel says: The citizens of the state at large should not be deceived by false reports of a Republican victory and great gain in this city yesterday. There was open corruption of the ballot-box by armed negro repeaters by fraudulent voters from other places, and at last five thousand illgal votes were cast. The victory is one of shame to the Republican party and all the decent men of that party feel humilated at the dastardly outrages their party leaders organized. They were confident of losing the election on a fair test. They had polled the city and could approximate the result. It was then they conceived the plan of having the negroes take the polls.

They hired men to perjure themselves by the hour in swearing in the negro and white repeaters. These were surrounded by their friends so that they could not be arrested. The negroes had been inflamed by incendiary appeals and when they went to work they could not be called off. They went from one ward to another. Drunken and debauched by passion they were really wild and ungovernable and therefore went far beyond the design of the leaders. Hence the open bare-feced frauds. Many of the poor wretches paid dearly for their folly and recklessness, and those who have used them will leave them to their fate. They are of use no longer now until the next election. It is no legitimate victory of principles in a fair contest. It was the victory of fraud of repeating of the bludgeon the razor and pistol. Let it go forth to the world that the Republican majority claimed to-day was gained by the violence of armed negroes and repeaters. It was nothing else.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

Gov. Rice, of Massachusetts, has vetoed the bill to legalize the marriage of James Parton, on grounds that the act is not within the constitutional power of the Legislature....A large number of the most important liquor dealers in New York city have been indicted for crookedness. The witnesses in most of the cases are Chicago men.

James M. Fair, a lad of 15 years, a member of the family of Mr. Tylor Watts, living at Jamaica, L. I., deliberately hung himself last week, because, it is said, his patrimony had been spent by an uncle.

Ariel F. Fifield, registrar of the Water Board of Cambridge, Mass., is declared to be an embezzler in the sum of $8,000.

A New York telegram says: "The recent breakage of rates is bringing corn to this market, and shows this result in round numbers: Receipts for the week ending April 15, 49,000 bushels; the week ending April 22, 220,000 bushels; the week ending April 29, 407,000 bushels. Receipts at Baltimore and Philadelphia have increased more than 50 per cent. since the 15th of April."....A member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives has been expelled for receiving money for his vote on a certain boom bill. His name is Lynott.

The quarrel between the two managing boards of the Centennial exposition has been settled in a manner eminently American by the appointment of another board. The police force will hereafter be under the control of a police board, consisting of five members, with Gen. Hawley as chairman.

A New York dispatch says that in view of the large supply of corn in that city awaiting transportation to Europe the steamship companies have doubled their charges for freight. They know that the New York Central road has agreed with the owners of this grain to transport it to Liverpool, and they have the road in their power.

The Centennial Managers have reconsidered their determination to prohibit the sale of liquors on the Exposition grounds, and restaurants and saloons are now free to sell liquors of all kinds.

THE WEST.

The supplies at the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Agencies are exhausted, and the Indians are reported to be on the verge of starvation.

Gov. Thayer, of Wyoming, has arrived at Omaha, Neb., to confer with Gen. Crook relative to military protection to be afforded to the Black Hills stage line. The General has promised all the protection possible, and an order has been issued to that effect....Trials of the parties indicted for connection with the Mountain Meadow massacre will shortly commence again at Beaver, Utah....George W. Deitz, a Western veteran, 70 years of age, started last week from New Albany, Ind., to walk to Philadelphia, to attend the Centennial Exposition. He was escorted from the Court-house to the eastern boundary of the city by a large concourse of citizens, headed by a brass band.

Chicago elevators contain 2,477,809 bushels of wheat, 1,437,371 bushels of corn, 649,216 bushels of oats, 65,728 bushels of rye, and 157,656 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 4,787,780 bushels, against 7,864,520 bushels at this period last year....Advices from Arizona give information of an outbreak of the Chiricahua tribe of Indians. Several whites were slaughtered, and a great many cattle driven off and houses burned. It was this same tribe, under the famous chief Cochise, which committed so many murders a few years ago....Dist. Atty. Dyer expects to dispose of all the St. Louis whisky cases during the present term of the United States court. It is stated that civil suits will be brought against Mr. McKee and against the securities of Con Maguire, and the gangers and storekeepers; also against all the distillers and rectifiers.

The disturbances in the coal-mining region near Massillon, Ohio, have culminated in open lawlessness. A few nights since forty masked men visited the mines, seized the watchmen, and set the coal-shafts on fire. None of the incendiaries were recognized.

The feeling against the Chinese in San Francisco seems to be growing more bitter. The "South-San-Francisco-anti-Coolie-Club-and-Young-Men's-Universal-Reform-Society" held a meeting last week, passed rules indorsing the destruction of the Chinese quarter in Antioch, and advocating a similar course in the city, unless the Federal Government should take immediate steps to abate the evil. The speeches were highly incendiary....Dr. J. B. Bendery, of Omaha, has just returned to that city from a three months' trip to the Black Hills. He reports the road from Custer City to Fort Laramie strewn with wagons, the owners having fled, or been killed or captured by Indians. During his trip from Custer to Cheyenne he dressed the wounds of twelve men who were wounded by Indians. It is dangerous for small parties to undertake the trip.

A shocking domestic tragedy was enacted in Chicago one day last week. Anthony Gehring, a German newspaper carrier, murdered his wife, to whom he had been married but a short time, and then took his own life. The weapon used was an Allen revolver. Jealousy was the cause.

Those who contemplate emigrating to the Black Hills are referred to the following prices current at Custer City, the metropolis of that country: Sugar, 40 cents a pound; bacon, 50 cents a pound; corn, 50 cents a pound; flour, $22 a sack; whisky, 50 cents a drink; tobacco, $3 a pound.

SOUTH.

A New Orleans dispatch states that State Senator M. H. Twitchell, his brother-in-law, George King, and a colored man, were recently assassinated while crossing Red river at Coushatta, La. They were all three shot by one man, who stood on the shore and picked them off with a repeating rifle.

GENERAL.

Dangerous counterfeit five-dollar notes on the Merchants' National bank of New Bedford, Mass., are in circulation. They are so well executed as to almost defy detection. Be on your guard....Chicago, St. Louis and Milwaukee have no monopoly of the whisky war. In various Southern States a great contest has been waged by the national authorities against "crooked" distillers and thieving revenue officers, but so silently as to have attracted but little general attention. Last week the results of the campaign in South Carolina were shown by the sentencing of twenty-four distillers convicted of fraud. They were sentenced to the Albany penitentiary for terms averaging two years each.

Prof. Blake, known throughout the country as a mind-reader, committed suicide in San Francisco the other day....The Centennial Commissioners, after having considered the question in all its bearings, and being unwilling to offend the religious sentiment of Philadelphia, have decided to close the Exposition grounds on Sundays. They have also determined that no spirituous or malt liquors shall be sold on the grounds....A correspondent of the New York Tribune gives what purports to be the details of a story to the effect that Wilkes Booth made an attempt to take the life of President Lincoln at the time of his second inauguration, and that J. W. Westfall, a Capitol policeman, saved his life.

The General conference of the Methodist Episcopal church is in session in Baltimore....

Assurance is given by Dr. Linderman, Director of the Mint, that there need be no apprehension of a scarcity of silver coin, as there has been issued but $1,500,000 under the Substitution act, while the Treasury Department has on hand about $14,000,000, and the mint coinage will supply from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 per month from this time forth. It will be necessary, however, before the $14,000,000 of silver coin reserve can be made available for circulation, that Congress authorize its exchange for legal-tenders, these, in turn, to be exchanged for fractional currency, and the latter to be destroyed. A proposition to this effect has been introduced and will probably be adopted.

An International Convention of archæologists has been called to meet at Philadelphia on the 4th of September next....Joe Goss, the champion pugilist of England, has challenged Tom Allen to fight for the championship of the world and $1,000, or more, a side.

The State department at Washington will take no action on the question raised in the Winslow and other cases until some demand is made on this Government by Great Britain for the extradition of some fugitive, in which event that portion of the treaty will be treated as abrogated.

WASHINGTON.

Kilbourne, the contumacious witness recently imprisoned by order of the House of Representatives, has been released on a writ of habeas corpus by Chief Justice Cartter, of the District Supreme court.

The Treasury books show that, at the end of April, the total contraction of the legal-tender currency under the operations of the new Finance act was, in round numbers, nearly $56,000,000.

During the month of April the national debt was reduced $2,781,181. The following is the official statement:

Six per cent bonds	$984,999,650
Five per cent bonds	710,041,800
Total coin bonds		$1,693,041,450
Lawful money debt	$14,000,000
Matured debt	6,414,270
Legal tenders	370,696,085
Certificates of deposit	33,665,000
Fractional currency	40,380,089
Coin certificates	27,975,700
Total without interest		478,096,277
Total debt		$2,190,552,499
Total interest		35,517,575
Cash in Treasury:
Coin	$77,605,428
Currency	5,161,196
Special deposits held for redemption of certificates of deposit	33,665,900
Total in Treasury		116,431,515
Debt less cash in the Treasury		$2,107,928,256
Decrease of debt during April		$2,781,181
Decrease since June 30, 1875		20,760,467
Bonds issued to the Pacific Railway Companies, interest payable in lawful money: Principal outstanding		$64,623,512
Interest accrued and not yet paid		1,292,470

The President has declared that he will veto the Consular and Diplomatic bill if sent to him in the shape it passed the House.

The District Grand jury has indicted ex-Secretary of War Belknap for the alleged acceptance of bribes in his official station....The President has nominated Olive Logan's husband, Wirt Sykes, as Consul at Florence, Italy....The draft of the Naval Appropriation bill has been completed by the committee having that work in charge. The sum covered by it is about $12,700,000—something more than $4,000,000 less than last year.

POLITICAL.

There was an exciting municipal contest in Indianapolis on the 2d inst., resulting in a victory for the Republicans. A serious riot occurred after the closing of the polls, in which pistols, clubs and bricks were freely used, resulting in the killing of one and probably the fatal wounding of two colored men. Numbers of others, both whites and blacks, were more or less injured.

Horatio Seymour has written a letter saying he could not and would not accept a nomination for the Presidency under any circumstances.

The Republicans of Oregon have nominated Richard Williams for Congress....The Committee on Transportation for the National Democratic convention have received replies from twenty railroads that they will make half-fare rates, not only to delegates to the convention, but to all persons in any way connected with the convention, and it is expected that at least all the main roads will acquiesce in this arrangement....A State Greenback convention was held at Jackson, Mich., last week. It was attended by about seventy-five delegates. The convention elected twenty-two delegates to the National Greenback convention.

The Oregon Republican State convention, on the 3d inst., appointed the six delegates to which that State is entitled to the Cincinnati National convention, and passed a resolution for Blaine as its first choice for President....The Republican convention of Maryland was held at Frederick on the 4th inst. The delegates to Cincinnati were instructed to vote for Blaine.

FOREIGN.

At a conference recently held at Rome between the representatives of the European powers and the Cardinals, the latter announced that peace was impossible unless "the spiritual independence of the church" were acknowledged....A telegram from Athens to the London Times says although the Sublime Porte has been induced to abandon an immediate attack on Montenegro, it will concentrate 30,000 soldiers at Scutari and 50,000 in Herzegovina. Public opinion in Turkey is weary of diplomatic interference. The Government's object seems to be only to gain time to assemble forces and strike a terrible blow regardless of consequences. The situation is full of danger. The Government is exhausting its resources in warlike preparations, and declares it can pay nobody.

A decree has been published restoring suffrage to the inhabitants of Alsace and Lorraine, who, while under German rule, have elected to retain the French nationality....Advices from Cape Coast Castle report that the King of Dahomey has refused to pay the fine recently imposed on him for maltreating a British subject, and has sent an insolent message to the British Commodore inviting him to visit Dahomey, where he promises to pay the demand in powder and bullets....The French have suppressed the Algerian insurrection....A Mexican special says Gen. Diaz occupied Camargo unopposed. Narranje will join him at Mier for the march on Monterey. A battle may be expected at Paso de Los Muertos....Official advices mention an important victory obtained by the Turks under Muktahr Pacha, who has at length succeeded in relieving the military posts so long isolated and threatened by the insurgents.

A boiler explosion on a ferryboat at Bingen, Germany, recently, killed thirty people....A Paris journal says that before the end of May the Emperor of Russia will take the opportunity of affirming that the peace of Europe must not be placed in doubt. The declaration will be made with such solemnity as to dispel all distrusts.

Winslow, the Boston forger, was not released on the 3d inst., as was expected. The British Government obtained a further delay of ten days, to give time for the receipt of Secretary Fish's answer to the latest English note.

At the urgent solicitation of the allied emperors, the Turkish Government has agreed to a renewal of the armistice, but insists that if there is not also a cessation of hostilities on the part of the insurgents, Turkey shall not be bound by it. In that event, disregarding all further efforts at mediation, the Sultan's ministers propose to proceed with the suppression of the rebellion by force.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Friday, April 28.—Senate.—When the impeachment court met, Mr. Carpenter, counsel for the defendant, asked that a postponement be granted for two weeks, at which time they will be ready to proceed. Manager Lord opposed the granting of the request, maintaining that ample time had been afforded to the defendant's counsel to prepare their side of the case. Senator Conkling moved an order that the court hear the arguments and determine at once whether the accused is amenable to impeachment, notwithstanding his resignation as Secretary of War, and that testimony be heard touching the exact place of said resignation. Senator Edmunds moved an amendment that the managers and counsel may discuss the question whether the issues of fact are material. The Senate, after consultation, adopted an order that they proceed first to hear and determine the question of jurisdiction, that the hearing proceed on the 4th of May; that the opening and close of the argument be given to respondent; that three counsel and three managers may be heard in such order as may be agreed on between themselves, and that such time be allowed for argument as the managers and counsel may desire.

House.—The Speaker laid before the House the decision of Chief-justice Cartter, discharging from custody Hallett Kilbourne. Referred....Tarbox offered a resolution in regard to the Union Pacific railroad, which, it is claimed, had some reference to Blaine, as it directed the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the circumstances connected with the purchase by the Union Pacific railroad of $75,000 value of the bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad for $64,000. Hurlbut objected, and the resolution was withdrawn....The House, after another day's discussion, passed the Legislative Appropriation bill without any very material changes. The chief feature of the day was the opposition made by Prof. Seelye to the incorporation of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department in this Appropriation bill. In this opposition Prof. Seelye was signally successful—Speaker Kerr, in an elaborate opinion, sustaining the point of order....An amendment was made to rule 5, so as to provide for the appointment of a Speaker pro tem. for a period of ten days, instead of one day, as heretofore.

Saturday, April 29.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The Farwell-LeMoyne contested election case occupied the attention of the House, but no decision was reached.

Monday, May 1.—Senate.—Boutwell introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to renew the issue of fractional currency, providing the total amount outstanding at any one time shall not exceed $50,000,000. Referred....The resolutions submitted by Hamlin on Friday, to amend the rules in relation to the impeachment trial, so as to provide that the deliberations on the questions submitted shall be in public, was discussed, but no action taken, and the impeachment trial was resumed. The pending question was the motion of McDonald to rescind the order agreed upon in the conference on Friday, allowing the respondent to open and close arguments, etc., etc. Blair, of counsel for the respondent, spoke against the motion to rescind. Hoar, of the managers, spoke in favor of rescinding. He claimed that the managers had a right to close, and cited English precedents in support of his views. On returning, the presiding officer stated that the motion to rescind the vote by which the order of argument was made was overruled, and that the request of the managers that four of them be allowed to address the Senate on the question of jurisdiction had been granted. The Court of impeachment then adjourned until Thursday, May 4.

House.—Holman offered a resolution to suspend the rules and repeal that portion of the Resumption act of Jan. 14, 1875, which provides that the redemption of legal-tender notes in coin shall begin on the 1st of January, 1879. Rejected—115 yeas to 111 nays—not two-thirds....Bills were introduced and referred relating to the punishment of witnesses adjudged in contempt by either house of Congress, and to repeal the law which requires the Speaker to certify the case of a recusant witness to the District-attorney for criminal prosecution....Hale moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution directing the several committees of the House charged with investigations to conduct such investigations with open doors while the testimony is being taken. Rejected—yeas, 126; nays, 105—not two-thirds in the affirmative....Morrison moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution directing the several committees of the House charged with investigations to conduct such investigations with open doors, except in the opinion of such committee public interest will be prejudiced thereby, but any person accused before a committee shall have the right to be heard in his own person, or by counsel, or both. The rules were suspended, and the resolution adopted without a division....Hoskins moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution instructing the various committees charged with the investigation of alleged frauds and misconduct to complete the same as early as possible, and to make report thereon on or before the 10th of June next, except where otherwise expressly provided by the House. Rejected—yeas, 84; nays, 126....The Speaker announced the appointment of a select committee to investigate the Federal offices in New Orleans as follows: Gibson, Blackburn, New, Vance of Ohio, Stevenson, James B. Reilly of Pennsylvania, Foster, Crapo, and Darrall. The Speaker laid before the House a communication from Hallett Kilbourne stating that he was now willing to appear before the House or committee, and answer fully all interrogatories in regard to the so-called real-estate pool in which Kilbourne and Latta, or himself, are or have been in any way connected. The communication was laid on the table....Blaine made a personal explanation in regard to newspaper articles reflecting upon him in the matter of certain bonds of the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company....He said, in conclusion, that he should not make any further statements about anything which might be invented and circulated concerning him, and that the explanation of to-day concludes his answers to all charges....Leave of absence for ten days was granted to Speaker Kerr.

Tuesday, May 2.—Senate.—The House bill appropriating $50,000 for subsistence supplies for the Apache Indians in Arizona, and for the removal of the Indians of the Cheriahua agency to the San Carlos agency, was passed....The Senate discussed, without action, the motion of Hamlin providing that the consultations of the Senate as a court of impeachment shall be public, not private....The bill to refund the Japanese indemnity fund was discussed......The LeMoyne-Farwell contested election case was considered, but no action taken.

House.—A resolution was unanimously adopted ordering the Judiciary Committee to investigate the transactions of the Union Pacific railroad in worthless Arkansas bonds....The Banking and Currency Committee made a report recommending the adoption of the resolution providing for the immediate issue of $10,000,000 of the silver coin reserve in exchange for legal tenders....The resolution passed at the last session of Congress censuring John Young Brown, of Kentucky, for language used in debate with B. F. Butler, was rescinded and expunged.

Wednesday, May 3.—Senate.—Morton made a personal explanation regarding the newspaper charge of corruption while he was Governor of Indiana....A bill was passed authorizing the transfer of $16,000 to pay light-house keepers and maintain light-house service on the Mississippi, Ohio and Missouri rivers....The Japanese indemnity fund bill was discussed without action.

House.—The contested election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell, Second Illinois district, was decided in favor of the former....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was discussed....Stevenson (Ill.) addressed the House in opposition to the admission of New Mexico as a State.

Thursday, May 4.—Senate.—The Senate discussed, without action, the proposition to take a recess to enable the Senators to attend the opening of the Centennial exhibition, after which the impeachment trial was proceeded with. Carpenter, of counsel for the respondent, said that if the Senate was to adjourn for a week, the counsel and managers would prefer to not begin their arguments on the question of jurisdiction, as thereby a break would occur which should be avoided. Manager Lord concurred in this statement. Sherman moved that the court adjourn until Monday, May 15, but this was voted down. Blair then began an argument against the jurisdiction of the Senate. Lord replied, after which the court adjourned without taking a vote.

House.—A resolution was adopted directing the Ways and Means Committee to report ways and means for the relief of the small change famine....Nearly the whole day was devoted, in committee of the whole, to consideration of the Postoffice Appropriation bill....Nine thousand dollars was appropriated for the expense of the committee to investigate the Federal offices at New Orleans....A resolution passed accepting an invitation to attend the opening of the Centennial exposition, and the adjourning of the House from Tuesday, the 9th, to Friday, the 12th.

The Mexican Troubles.

Gen. Hazen, who has been on a visit to Mexico, has just returned. Gen. Hazen, in speaking of Mexican affairs, says that he considers that the insurgents have about an even chance for success. To overturn the present government will not result in much of a change, as the people of that country are too much accustomed to revolution. He is of opinion that our people are equally to blame with the Mexicans for all the Texas border troubles. He says that along the border there are bands of lawless men of both nationalities whose sole means of support is by plunder. He laughs at all the crazy stories that our Government is in danger of a war with Mexico over these border troubles. War with that country would mean simple occupation. He is of opinion that Mexico is more than anxious to do all in her power to meet all reasonable demands.—Washington Telegram.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

In Reply to Representative Blackburn's Resolution.

WASHINGTON, May 5.

The President yesterday sent the following message to the House:

To the House of Representatives: I have given very attentive consideration to the resolution of the House of Representatives, passed on the 3d of April, "requesting the President of the United States to inform the House whether any executive offices, acts, or duties, and if any what, have within a specified period been performed at a distance from the seat of Government established by law," etc. I have never hesitated, and shall not hesitate to communicate to Congress, and to either branch thereof, all information which the Constitution makes it the duty of the President to give, or which my judgment may suggest to me, or a request either house may indicate to me, may be useful in the discharge of appropriate duties confided to them. I fail, however, to find in the Constitution of the United States the authority given to the House of Representatives (one branch of Congress in which is vested the legislative power of the Government) to require of the Executive, an independent branch of the Government, co-ordinate with the Senate and House of Representatives, an account of his discharge of his appropriate and purely executive offices, acts, and duties, either as to when, where, or how performed. What the House of Representatives may require, as a right, in its demand upon the Executive for information, is limited to what is necessary for the proper discharge of its powers of legislation or of impeachment.

The inquiry in the resolution of the House as to where the executive acts, within the last seven years, have been performed, and at what distance from any particular spot, or for how long a period at any one time, etc., does not necessarily belong to the province of legislation. It does not profess to be asked for that object. If this information be sought through an inquiry of the President as to his executive acts in view or in aid of the power of impeachment vested in the House, it is asked in derogation of an inherent natural right recognized in this country by a constitutional guarantee which protects every citizen—the President as well as the humblest in the land—from being made a witness against himself.

During the time that I have had the honor to occupy the position of President, it has been, and while I continue to occupy that position it will continue to be, my earnest endeavor to recognize and to respect the several trusts and duties and powers of the co-ordinate branches of the Government, not encroaching upon them, nor allowing encroachments upon the proper powers of the office which the people of the United States have confided to me, but aiming to preserve in their proper relations the several powers and functions of each of the co-ordinate branches of the Government agreeably to the Constitution and in accordance with the solemn oath which I have taken to preserve, protect and defend that instrument. In maintenance of the rights secured by the Constitution to the executive branch of the Government, I am compelled to decline any specific or detailed answer to the request of the House for information as to "any executive offices, acts or duties, and, if any, what have been performed at a distance from the seat of Government established by law, and for how long a period at any one time, and in what part of the United States." If, however, the House of Representatives desires to know whether, during the period of upward of seven years during which I have held the office of President of the United States, I have been absent from the seat of Government, and whether during that period I have performed, or have neglected to perform, the duties of my office, I freely inform the House that from the time of my entrance upon my office I have been in the habit, as were all of my predecessors, with the exception of one who lived only one month after assuming the duties of his office, and one whose continued presence in Washington was necessary from the existence at the time of a powerful rebellion, of absenting myself at times from the seat of Government, and that during such absences I did not neglect or forego the obligations or duties of my office, but continued to discharge all of the executive offices, acts, and duties which were required of me as President of the United States. I am not aware that a failure occurred in any one instance of my exercising the functions and powers of my office in every case requiring their discharge, or of my exercising all the necessary executive acts in whatever part of the United States I may at the time have been. Fortunately, rapidity of travel and of mail communication, and the facility of almost instantaneous correspondence with officers at the seat of Government which the telegraph affords to the President in whatever section of the Union he may be, enable him in these days to maintain as constant and almost as quick intercourse with the departments at Washington as may be maintained while he remains in the capital.

The necessity of the performance of executive acts by the President of the United States exists and is devolved upon him wherever he may be within the United States during his term of office by the Constitution of the United States. His civil powers are no more limited or capable of limitation as to the place where they shall be exercised than are those which he might require to discharge in his capacity of Commander-in-chief of the army and navy, which latter powers it is evident he might be called upon to exercise possibly even without the limits of the United States. Had the efforts of those recently in rebellion against the Government been successful in driving a late President of the United States from Washington, it is manifest that he must have discharged his functions, both civil and military, elsewhere than in the place named by law as the seat of Government. No act of Congress can limit, suspend, or confine this constitutional duty. I am not aware of the existence of any act of Congress which assumes thus to limit or restrict the exercise of the functions of the Executive. Were there such acts, I should nevertheless recognize the superior authority of the Constitution, and should exercise the powers required thereby of the President. The act to which reference is made in the resolution of the House relates to the establishment of a seat of Government, and the providing of suitable buildings, and the removal thereto of the offices attached to the Government, etc. It was not understood at its date, and by Gen. Washington, to confine the President in the discharge of his duties and powers to actual presence at the seat of Government. On the 30th of March, 1791, shortly after the passage of the act referred to, Gen. Washington issued an executive proclamation, having reference to the subject of this very act, from Georgetown, a place remote from Philadelphia, which then was the seat of Government, where the act referred to directed that "all officers attached to the seat of Government should for the time remain." That none of his successors have entertained the idea that their executive offices could be performed only at the seat of government is evidenced by hundreds upon hundreds of such acts performed by my predecessors in the unbroken line from Washington to Lincoln, a memorandum of the general nature and character of some of which acts is submitted herewith, and no question has been raised as to the validity of those acts or to the right and propriety of the Executive to exercise the powers of his office in any part of the United States.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1876.

PRECEDENTS.

It will be perceived that the message is dated "Washington, without the usual prefix of "Executive Mansion."

Accompanying the message is a memorandum of absences of presidents of the United States from the National Capital during each of the several administrations, and of public and executive acts performed during the time of such absences. This memorandum contains the following information, and much more of the same general character, only the most important of the acts recited in the memorandum being selected for mention in this abstract:

President Washington was frequently absent from the Capital. He appears to have been thus absent at least 181 days during his term. In March, 1791, the seat of Government being then at Philadelphia, he issued a proclamation dated at Georgetown in reference to running a boundary for the District of Columbia. He signed at Mount Vernon an official letter to the Emperor of Morocco, and from the same place issued the commission of Oliver Wolcott as Comptroller of the Treasury, and a proclamation respecting the whisky insurrection in Pennsylvania; also the proclamation of the treaty of 1795 with Spain, and the executive order of August 4, 1792, relative to duties on distilled spirits, etc. When at Germantown he signed sundry commissions. He proposed to have Mr. Yrujo officially presented to him at Mount Vernon as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from Spain, and Mr. Yrujo went there for that purpose, but the ceremony of presentation was prevented by an accident—the omission of the Minister to bring his credentials.

President John Adams was absent from the capital during his term of four years on various occasions 385 days. He discharged the official duties and performed the most solemn public acts at Quincy, Mass., in the same manner as when at the seat of Government. Several of them are recited, and it is also specified that on the 28th of September, 1797, he forwarded to the Secretary of State a commission for a Justice of the Supreme Court, signed in blank at Quincy, with instructions to fill in the name of John Marshall, if he would accept, and if not, that of Bushrod Washington.

President Jefferson was absent from the seat of Government during his two terms of office, 796 days, or more than one-fourth of the whole official period. He signed and issued from Monticello, among other things, seventy-five commissions.

President Madison was absent 637 days, and President Monroe was absent 708 days, independent of the year 1824 and two months of 1825, for which period no data are found. The latter transacted public business wherever he happened to be, and sometimes while traveling.

President John Quincy Adams was absent during his single term 222 days, and in his Memoirs, vol. VIII., p. 75, speaks of his practice of leaving with his chief clerk blank papers, signed by him, to be used, when necessary, for proclamations, remission of penalties, and commission of consuls. He speaks also of doing the same thing in regard to patents and land grants.

President Jackson was absent from the seat of Government 502 days. Among other important acts performed by him when away from Washington was his signing at Boston the famous order for the removal of deposits from the State banks. The memorandum at this point refers to President Jackson's refusal, in 1833, to furnish the Senate a copy of a certain paper alleged to have been read by him to the Cabinet, and mentions that in January, 1837, he refused to allow a committee of the House of Representatives to make a general investigation of the Executive Departments without specific charges, on the ground, among others, that the use of official books and records for such purposes interfere with the discharge of public business.

Other presidents were absent from Washington and performed numerous duties while absent: Van Buren, 131 days; Tyler, 163 days; Polk, 37 days; Taylor, 31 days; Fillmore, 60 days; Pierce, 57 days; Buchanan, 51 days.

No mention is made of the absences of Presidents Lincoln or Johnson.

INDIANA ITEMS.

A young man named Chas. Gray, of Oxford, was injured a few days since by a team running away with him. He died the same night.

A mistake was made at Crawfordsville, last week, in a case of measles being taken for small-pox, and the patient being sent to the pest-house.

Some sacrilegious thief robbed the contribution boxes of St. Joseph's and St. Benedict's Catholic churches, Terre Haute, of their contents, on Wednesday night.

Lewis Leaming, of Romney, was taken with hiccoughs, which lasted from Friday till Wednesday, when he fell asleep, and was found dead, from exhaustion, the next morning.

The Fort Wayne City Council has passed an ordinance forbidding captains of police or any policeman electioneering or peddling votes on any election day, or influencing votes in any way.

A despondent tramp attempted to hang himself with his suspenders, near Madison, last week. He was thwarted in his attempt to take his life by the elasticity of the improvised noose.

Wm. B. Orr, of Colburn station, Cass county, was found dead on the railroad one night last week. His body was horribly mangled. He had been to Delphi, and it is supposed took too much liquor, laid down on the track on his way home, and a train ran over him.

One night last week, near Castleton, a passenger train ran over a tramp named Charles Weightly, badly mutilating both legs and his right arm. He was sleeping on the platform, and becoming frightened rolled on the track with the above result. He is not expected to recover.

The large plate glass manufactured by the Star Glass Company, of New Albany, and the largest one ever made in America, and of superb size and finish, designed expressly for the Indiana headquarters at the Centennial, was unfortunately broken the other day in the process of boxing.

John Graham, Esq., was buried at Kendallville, Ind., a day or two ago. The deceased was for the past year City Clerk of Kendallville, and was formerly agent of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad. The funeral was very largely attended, Mr. Graham being a man of extended acquaintance.

Articles of incorporation and consolidation of the Frankfort, St. Louis and Toledo, Kokomo and Marion, and the Marion and Ottawa Railway Companies have been filed with the Secretary of State, under the name and style of Frankfort, St. Louis and Toledo Railroad Company. The capital stock of the new corporation is fixed at $1,250,000, and the instrument on file is signed by the Presidents of the respective roads.

Madison Courier: Martin H. Daily gives us the facts of the following item that will furnish a subject for stock-raisers to theorise upon and discuss. It is no less than two foals from one dam—two colts, one a mule and the other a horse. This phenomenon occurred in Shelby township. The horse and jack are owned by W. Johnson. The mare was bred by Mr. Ed. Roberts. The mare was first bred to the jack, and on the ninth day after, by agreement of the parties, was bred to the horse, and in the course of time two foals was the result—one a mule and the other of the horse species, both alive and perfectly formed.

Equestrianism Extraordinary.

Old Walter Lamb, of Jersey City, N. J., well known a generation ago as an equestrian messenger, has been telling how they used to express news in the days before the telegraph had revolutionized journalism: In 1843, he rode from Wilmington, Del., to Jersey City, 128 miles, with the Havana lottery drawings, between 5 and 11 p. m., changing horses every four miles. About the same time he expressed news from Philadelphia to New York for the steamers, seventy-six miles, doing it under contract, in seven hours, and he took Van Buren's inaugural to the Courier and Inquirer in that time, over a very heavy road. Once, on a $1,000 wager that he couldn't ride 300 miles in twenty-four hours, he did it in twenty-two hours and fifty-eight minutes, using thirty-two horses, and then rode an extra hour to insure the bet.

The New Bedford Mercury tells of five dogs who were shut up in a yard by the gate's closing after they had passed through it. When they wanted to go out they couldn't, for the gate swung inward. Then the canines held a consultation, which resulted in the best jumper, a big Newfoundland, getting over the fence, pushing the gate open, and releasing his friends.

KEEPING THE DEVIL AWAY.

Chinese Feast of the Dead—A Mongolian Picnic in a Raging Snow Storm.

[Virginia City (Nev.) Cor. New York World.]

From Virginia City to the Sutro tunnel a road has been built across the hills for the accommodation of the Tunnel Company. Since the road was built, various habitations have sprung up along its borders. The county hospital is reached by this road, likewise the habitation of "Old Kentuck," a hermit, who lives, with his donkey and dog, in a hut about three miles from Virginia, and a like distance from Sutro. "Kentuck" is certainly a curiosity, but the great curiosity of the neighborhood is the Chinese cemetery, in the sage brush, just east of the county hospital. I have often been struck by the bare and deserted appearance of the place as I passed along the divide between the two towns, but was never more forcibly impressed with its weird and somber characteristics than on a certain clear and terribly cold midnight in February, as I guided my jaded horse through the mountainous snow drifts and wondered if ever any one saw a Chinese ghost! This afternoon I had occasion to pass over this grade, and my curiosity was aroused by the spectacle of a wagon load of Chinamen directing their way toward the Chinese cemetery. I could not believe it to be a funeral, for there was nothing to indicate a corpse, but to satisfy my curiosity I followed them. Just as they arrived at the cemetery I looked toward Mount Davidson, and saw the snow whirling on its crest. Before I arrived in the midst of the Mongolians a blinding, stinging snow storm was upon us. It came directly from the southeast, driven by a fearful gale of wind, and for half an hour it raged as I never saw a snow storm rage before. The Chinamen, nothing daunted, commenced unloading the wagon of its treasures—a whole roast hog, plates of rice, bundles of cigarettes, white biscuit sprinkled with red sugar, preserved ginger, liquors and fireworks and bundles of light brown bits of paper inscribed with Chinese characters. One of the heathen spread out a roll of papers to the four quarters of the compass, and laid them on each grave, keeping them in place with a stone; another grasping a handful of sticks about as large in circumference as a match, and a foot in length, lighted them and placed them at the head of the graves. Others took bunches of tiny candles, and placed them lighted on the graves, the whole crowd keeping up the most incessant chattering all the time. "Hi, ya! Hi, ya! gou a wa; teya," seemed to my uneducated understanding the burden of their song. Then a bundle of fireworks were set off amid loud hurrahs. Without further ceremony they squatted themselves on the ground and the feast commenced. My distinguished friend and laundryman, Su Wong, politely requested me to join the feast, but I believed that I could wait until I reached Virginia City. The fact is I was not hungry. The joss sticks continued to burn and the Chinamen discussed the baked meats of the many funerals, and the storm increased in fury every moment. Finally the feast was completed—a little quicker than is usual on these occasions, I judged, and, gathering up the remnants, they replaced them in the wagon, and all returned to Virginia. In former times they used to leave the remains of the banquet in the cemetery, but the Piute Indians, without the fear of the Mongolian deity before their eyes, were wont to gobble up the dainties as soon as the Chinamen were out of sight, which "would never do for Larry O'Brien." During the ceremonies I asked Su Wong what it all meant, and was told it was a "yearly feast of the dead, to keep the devil away."

Wheat-growing in India.

Calcutta wheat has been exported to Great Britain largely this season, and has caused the "low class" of grain from this country and Russia to be neglected. There is reason for concern in regard to this new rival—land and labor in India being both very cheap. Great Britain needs annually, in round numbers, 44,000,000 cwts. (112 pounds) of wheat. We send her 23,500,000; Russia, 9,500,000, the remaining 11,000,000 being supplied mainly by France, Germany and Egypt. Favored, however, by the Suez canal, the East Indians face confidently all competitors.—New York Tribune.

"Hush! hush!" said the little brown thrush,
To her mate on the nest in the lilac-bush;
"Keep still! don't open your bill!
There's a boy coming, bird-nesting, over the hill.
Let go your wings, so,
That not an egg of the nest shall show.
[illegible]
I'm as frightened as ever a bird can be!"

Then still, with a quivering bill,
They watched the boy out of sight o'er the hill.
Ah, then in the branches again,
Their glad song rang over vale and glen.
Oh! oh! if that boy could know
How glad they were when they saw him go,
Say, say, do you think next day
He could possibly steal those eggs away?

Around the Farm.

Having occasion to build a post fence on one side of my orchard, about a dozen of the holes were left unfilled for a couple of days, and on going to set the posts from one to eight field mice were found in each hole, having fallen in and being unable to climb the smooth sides of the hole.—Maine Farmer.

We have long been satisfied that the best way to get rid of these evils growing out of boarding the farm laborers in the farmer's family is to build tenant houses and hire married men to occupy them and work for the farmer. If it seems best to employ some single men in addition, make arrangements to have them boarded with the tenants.—Rural Home.

A house should be so placed that the direct rays of the sun shall have free admission into the living apartments; because the sun's rays impart a healthy and invigorating quality to the air, and stimulate the vitality of human beings as they do those of plants, and without sunlight, human beings, as well as plants, would sicken and die. The aspect, therefore, should be southeast.—Popular Science Monthly.

It is a good plan, both for the wheat and the catch of clover seed, to harrow wheat in the spring. Select some day when the ground is dry enough to pulverize freely, and if possible, just before a rain. Where wheat has been drilled in a common heavy drag will only break down the ridges between the rows and cover exposed roots. If sown broadcast, the Thomas smoothing harrow should be used, and is preferable under any circumstances.

It is a fact that all the domestic animals fatten faster in dimly-lighted places than in the full light of day. This is well known in respect to poultry. From experiments made with sheep, it has been ascertained that in a dark shed, well ventilated, and kept at a suitable temperature, they will make most mutton from a given amount of food. But dark stables are not good for horses, or breeding stock of any kind; with such, fat is not the most important object in view.

I notice that some of your correspondents recommend feeding onions to poultry. If they themselves eat the eggs that are produced on onion feed, it is all well enough; but if they sell them it is a little too bad. I like a well-flavored egg, if I eat one; especially if I buy them at present prices. I would just as soon have butter flavored with onions, as eggs. I have seen fresh eggs—those not two days old—that were but little better than rotten. I believe it to be impossible to obtain good No. 1 eggs unless hens are fed on proper food. Onions are good in their place, but not for flavoring eggs.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Dr. James, the Commissioner of Agriculture, of Georgia, writes as follows: "Taking into consideration the cost of production, the chemical analysis and comparative freedom from stealage, oats are cheaper as stock food than corn. One bushel or thirty-two pounds of oats costs twenty-nine cents, making a difference of thirteen cents in the cost of 100 pounds of the two. Chemical analysis shows that oats contain twelve per cent. of albuminoids, or flesh and muscle producing principle, while corn contains ten per cent. It will thus be seen that for work animals oats are more valuable than corn as food when equal weights are used. Consider, now, that 100 pounds of oats cost thirteen cents less than 100 pounds of corn, and the case stands decidedly in favor of oats for work stock.

How it Pays to have Good Cows.—I herewith send a statement of the income of eight Jersey cows for the year ending January 1, 1867:

Twenty-five hundred and sixty-six pounds eleven ounces of butter made and sold at 40 cents per pound	$1,026.67
Cream sold	2.00
Eight calves (six heifers) raised	185.00
Ten pigs raised and fatted on sour milk and 25 bushels of meal	207.50
Total	$1,421.17
Less 25 bushels of meal	25.00
Total	$1,396.17

My cows are full-blooded Jerseys and three grades. I feed meal all the time they are giving milk. In the summer they have two quarts of corn-and-cob meal per day. Fall and winter, three quarts—one-half corn-and-cob meal, one-half bran. We never have any soft butter in warm weather. I feed no roots of any kind, nothing but meal and all the good, early-cut hay they will eat.—Vermont Farmer.

A Pennsylvania farmer tells, in a contemporary, how he treats muck, and it may be a good way, though many persons prefer to keep it a year exposed to the weather, and then, when dry, use it as an absorbent in the stables and cow-yards. As the muck was dug, he mixed with every five loads one barrel of fresh lime. This was spread evenly in layers between layers of muck a foot thick. In twenty-four hours the heaps were smoking hot. He threw more muck over the top and beat the surface closely to exclude the air, and in a few days the heat went down. When he came to draw the muck, it had become a black, rich mass, that exhaled a very pungent odor, much like barn-yard manure; and, although it was late in October when it was spread upon the grass, the color of the field became at once a deeper green, and a rapid growth started. Wood ashes, half a bushel or more to a load of muck, will produce equally good results, but more time is required for decomposition.

About the House.

A sure cure for pain in a hollow tooth is a mixture of powdered alum and common salt, applied with a lock of cotton wool. A sensation of coldness follows the application, after which the pain gradually subsides.

Silver Cake.—Two cups of sugar; two and one-half cups of flour; one-half cup of butter; three-quarters of a cupful of sweet milk; one-half teaspoonful of soda; the whites of eight eggs; one teaspoonful of cream of tartar.

Molasses Candy.—One pint white coffee sugar, one pint molasses, one tablespoonful of vinegar, one teaspoonful of butter; cook slowly a long time until it "strings" from the spoon when dipped up; pour upon a greased tin pan; then pull it until it becomes white.

To Wash Wine Decanters.—Soak the decanters for some hours in warm soda and water; if there is much cutting on the outside, a brush will be necessary to remove the dirt and stains from the crevices. Cut a potato into small dice, put a good handful of these into the decanter with some warm water, shake the decanter briskly until the stains disappear, rinse in clean cold water, and let them drain until dry. Vinegar and sauce cruets can be cleaned in the same way.

Scrap-book Paste.—Dissolve a teaspoonful of alum in a quart of water; when cold, stir in as much flour as will give it the consistency of thick cream, being particular to beat up all the lumps; stir in as much powdered resin as will lie on a dime, and add also six cloves; put a teacupful of boiling water on the fire, and pour the flour mixture into it, stirring well all the time. It will soon be like mush. Let it cool, and keep it cool. Lay a cover on it. For use, soften with warm water. It will keep twelve months.

The American Grocer says it is a lamentable fact that few have the proper facilities for keeping butter at any season of the year, and fewer still know how to properly make and pack it for long keeping. A very small percentage of the butter that reaches the principal markets is strictly fine; and much of it that is stale and unmarketable would have brought a fair price had it been marketed when new. This almost inevitable and rapid deterioration of butter is a strong argument against its retention by the producer, in the hope of higher figures, when remunerative ones are at once within his reach. It is better to sell any article when it is ready for the market and the market ready to receive it at paying prices.

Cause and Cure of Hog Cholera.

Probably the direct losses of American farmers have been greater in hogs the past two or three years than in any other kind of stock, or in any farm crop. A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette discourses on the origin of hog diseases generally, and gives a remedy which he has found effective:

Among some of the causes which produce cholera may be mentioned extreme and sudden changes; long hot and dry weather, as in the year 1874; long dry and cold, as in the years 1874 and 1875; followed by the unprecedented rains which fell during the summer of 1875. These rains caused an extremely rapid growth of grass, making it "washy," innutritious and defective in the qualities calculated to excite the secretions; and producing biliary derangements and congestion in an already over-taxed liver, that had suffered from an unparalleled long, cold winter, forcing the blood from the surface, unequalizing the circulation, and centering an undue amount of the internal viscera of the hog.

Another cause is found in hogs occupying one field or pen from year to year, without cleansing or plowing under the accumulated filth, having the hog constantly "rung," denying him a taste or smell of fresh earth, or the use of an instinct that teaches him, in bilious derangements, to search for bugs, worms, or vegetable roots, the natural excitants of stomach, liver and bowels. Another cause is scanty feeding, muddy, stagnant and filthy water, obliging them to allay their thirst often from the draining of their own discharges.

When the disease first made its appearance, a few years ago, it was characterized by many symptoms resembling cholera in the human being, even watery discharges, emaciation, and rapid waste. Its most usual form now is loss of vitality, emaciation, and drying up, with occasional paralysis, or an entire suspension of secretions; no discharges; with an inflammatory state of the liver, sympathetically affecting head, throat, and lungs.

Preventive and Remedy.—One pound of madder, one pound sulphur, one pound resin, one pound saltpeter, one pound black antimony, three ounces assafetida. Pulverize and mix well; feed three tablespoonfuls to five hogs, three times a week, in a little salt, more bran and ashes. Commence feeding before the cholera gets into your neighborhood, and continue until it ceases from the same, and if, during the time, and before your hogs are properly medicated, one should take the disease, immediately remove it to a dry pen. Give one tablespoonful of this mixture in one gallon of water or table slops, once per day; and in order to make the cure doubly sure, take one-half pint of soft soap, one tablespoonful pine tar, one ditto lard; warm and mix well, and drench the hog; and my word for it, it will cure ninety-nine out of the hundred.

If you will treat the first one or two in this way, the disease will spread no further. And you remember that as fast as the disease spreads, or in ratio to the number infected, its malignancy increases, until it will almost defy control. If the season should be wet, keep your hogs on short timothy pasture; if dry, on the best growth clover you have, and these are valuable helps. Sweet milk alone is said also to be good.

A Garden Extraordinary.

One of our considerable seed firms, in arranging their stock for last spring's business, laid aside a large quantity of flower seeds which remained over after the previous years' business. Unwilling to sell seed of doubtful vitality, the following plan was hit upon for a disposal of it which should promise an unusual if not a profitable return. The article is published in the American Garden, and we give as much of it as our space permits: "We plowed a strip about six feet wide all around a five-acre field, close to the fence. On this plowed ground the seed—previously well mixed—was thrown, just as it happened to come. The surface having, afterward, been smoothed over, we waited the result. This proved more than satisfactory. We had a wild garden indeed! The plants came up as thickly as they could grow, and flourished and blossomed as freely as though they had enjoyed all the care usually given to delicate hot-house exotics. Sweet alyssum, mignonette, phlox drummondi, seemed to cover the ground. Morning glories of every shade, and delicate Cypress vines, tried to cover the fences and run up every tree. Quaint little yellow and green gourds appeared in the most unexpected places, and the whole bed seemed in a blaze with the brilliant eschscholtzia, marigolds and zinnias.

"Every morning would find some new and unexpected flower in bloom. In short, the place was a constant delight all summer to each member of the family, as also to the neighbors. The children, especially, who reveled in a garden where they were allowed to pick whatever they pleased, were never tired of the excitement of hunting for something new.

"A quantity of the same seed was sown in the adjacent woods. Many of these germinated—and the sight of morning glories running up the trees in the wildest part of the woods, and bunches of balsam and zinnias and asters looking up through the underbrush was, indeed, passing strange and promotive of intense enjoyment."

Those who putter over the planting of such seeds in pans and frames, may learn a lesson from the above rough and ready treatment.—Moore's Rural.

Fire Insurance.

The annual convention of the National Board of Fire Underwriters was held in New York city last week. The principal companies of the United States and Great Britain were represented. The Treasurer's report for the year showed the receipts to be $134,000, and the expenditures $133,000. President Oakley delivered the annual address. The capital employed the past year was $55,000,000, an increase of $2,000,000 over 1874. The dividend on this capital averaged 132 1-15 per cent. The total amount of premiums received during 1875 by the American companies was $50,000,000, and by foreign companies $11,000,000, a decrease of 1 70-100 per cent. as compared with 1874. The losses for the year past were $28,000,000, and the increase in the amount of risks assumed during 1875 is $290,000,000. The loss rate during the past year steadily increased, and remunerative rates should be adhered to.

The report of the Committee on Incendiarism and Arson shows that during the past year at least thirty-five per cent. of the number of fires were caused by incendiaries, while fully fifty-five per cent. of the property destroyed was lost by the same cause. The report recommends offering rewards for the arrest and conviction of incendiaries. The fires for the year were 3,946, and were caused as follows: Defects, 868; matches, 214; spontaneous, 100; accidental, 517; carelessness, 777; miscellaneous, 343; unknown, 461; incendiary and supposed incendiary, 398; petroleum in all its forms, 308. Defective flues and foul chimneys cause daily fires.

The report of the Committee on Fire Department, Fire Patrol and Water Supply recommended the establishment of fire patrols in every city, and that they should be partly sustained and supported by the cities where they are located. New York city had not got sufficient water supply for its protection in case of emergency. Chicago was credited with having the best fire department.

A resolution was adopted condemning the law requiring companies to deposit certain sums with the State as security for policy-holders.

Petroleum as a lubricator was considered dangerous and the cause of many fires.

Planet-Hunting.

Prof. Watson, of the Michigan university, and Prof. Peters, of Hamilton college, have not yet finished their great planet-shooting match, in which they are engaged for the belt (Orion's) and the championship of the globe. They challenge the world to compete. We do not know exactly how the score stands at present, but, as a matter of State pride, we are bound to say that it has ceased to be an affair of skill with Prof. Watson. His reputation is now so widespread that when any skulking planet sees his telescope pointed toward it, it knocks under at once like Capt. Scott's coon, and remarks, "Don't look; I'll come down." His latest success was achieved when he was out hunting on Monday night. He had tried the "varmint" the night previous, but partly because it sneaked in behind some clouds, and partly on account of the Professor's respect for the Sabbath, he did not capture it. The next night, however, was favorable, and he discovered the "critter" in the constellation Virgo, and came up with it at right ascension thirteen hours and twenty-nine minutes, and declination eleven degrees and forty-seven minutes south. When he fairly covered it its motion was one minute daily in right ascension and north two minutes daily in declination. It proved to be a pretty fair specimen—one of the eleventh magnitude, from muzzle to tip of the tail.—Detroit Post.

A Conundrum.

"Say, Jane, why is—why is Butler's eye like a favorite fruit?" "Like a favorite fruit?—which eye?" "Either of 'em." "Why—because, Sam, it's one of a pear." "No—no—great deal better'n that." "Because—Sam—because—its apple——" "Not at all! Jane, you ain't nowhere near it." "Lemme try again, Sam: Butler's eye?—because it is under glass—conservatories, you know." "Jane, my opinion of you is that you're growing idiotic. You'd better hire a hall." "Don't git mad, Samuel, because I can't guess it the first time. Is it anything about eyes-in-glass?" "No, simpleton, it is not." "Butler's eye, Sam—fruit?—because it's subject to excise—X-eyes, you know." "No, that ain't it, Jenny, though that's very good." "Oranges—oranges—let's see—because one of his eyes is a lame 'un." "Oh, no; you'll make me sick." "Because it doesn't gage quite plum." "NO! Jane, be still!" "Because it's afflicted with strawberr'ismus—you understand?" "Jane, stop!—my head aches awful—it's because it's quints!"—Graphic.

THE BLACK HILLS.

Emigration Pouring into the Hills—Labor, Wages, etc.—An Election at Custer City.

[Cor. Chicago Times.]

Custer City is located in a narrow, beautiful valley on French creek, a very desirable site indeed. The citizens number upwards of 2,000, and I can add 500 more who are on claims up and down the gulch. The buildings are mostly log. A large number are sawed, and built with care, making very neat and comfortable quarters. Since the saw-mills have began operations logs are too common, and large frame buildings are taking their place. These saw-mills are at work, and have all they can do in furnishing lumber at $30 per M. One large hotel is being roofed, and several commodious store-rooms are under the mechanic's hand. Building lots are valued at from $30 to $500, size 50x150 feet. Rents are reasonable. A good store-room will bring $25 per month. Most all branches of mercantile business are represented on a fair scale. Provisions are high at present on account of the roads being so heavy that freight teams cannot get through. The first herd of beef cattle arrived on yesterday, and I had the pleasure of eating choice steak at 20 cents per pound. Large numbers of deer have been brought in, which sell by the mess at 12 to 15 cents per pound. Game is getting very scarce in this section. Indians, deer and buffalo cannot stand civilization.

Labor is very hard to get, and wages low. Mechanics demand from $3.50 to $4 per day. There are too many saw and axe men for them. Common laborers get from $2 to $2 50 per day. The supply of men far exceeds the demand, and so many are compelled to work that wages will be no better until mining commences; then they will talk $4 and $5 per day.

We have nothing but an accommodation mail line yet, but live in strong hopes of having a regular established line in a few days. We received a mail on the 3d inst., of 800 letters. How happy it made the boys! Reading matter is scarce. I have seen but one newspaper since I have been here.

Most of the immigration is from Nebraska and other Western States. But few from the East have arrived yet. A stage and freight line has been established between this city and Fort Peere. The distance is 170 miles, with a good road. They claim that supplies can be freighted at $3 per hundred. The supplies at present come from Cheyenne, at $7 per hundred. Two stage lines are established from this city to different points in the Hills, and several other lines are proposed.

I see in several places in traveling through the Hills preparations being made for farming, and I think it will prove a grand success. The soil in the valleys is very rich and deep, and without a doubt will produce very large crops. The grass in these valleys has furnished abundant pasture for the stock brought in. Large herds of horses depend entirely on it for subsistence. I saw four yoke of cattle that have worked every day since February 4, except two. They have eaten nothing except this grass, and they are in first-class working order.

[From Another Correspondent.]

Emigration to this place is enormous. The city is growing mushroom fashion. Over 500 houses have been built inside of two months. Last week there was a city election, and 800 votes were polled. The fight was nip and tuck between the people's ticket and t'other ticket. The candidates might have been seen ten miles out on the Sioux City, Sidney and Cheyenne roads drumming up voters. Chinamen voted, foreigners voted, women voted, and miners voted. We birds who have been caught in the nets of this excitement laugh at the fools who still come. A band of Sioux Indians made a raid on Rapid City, thirty-eight miles north of here, last Sunday, and captured two men on the way to the Dead Wood country, and also ran off thirty-one head of horses. Very little mining has been done yet, and the prospect for gold is thin. However, the country will be well developed this summer. It is not a good policy for any man to come here unless he has at the least calculation $400.

The Nation's Loan to the Railroads.

Judge Lawrence, from the Judiciary committee, has submitted to the House a bill and report on the Union Pacific railroad. The following are the conclusions of the latter: The land-grant railroads shall create two sinking funds—the first one to meet the principal of the subsidy bonds when due, and the second one to meet the interest on the subsidy bonds which the Government has advanced or shall advance to these companies. The bill by which it is proposed to carry these conclusions into effect fixes a specific sum which is to be paid to the Government by each company semi-annually as a sinking fund, to provide for the ultimate payment of the face of the subsidy bonds, and it provides that these sums shall be invested by the Government at interest. The sinking fund to secure the repayment of the interest is already partially provided for in the sections of the law which permit the Government to collect from the companies five per cent. of the net annual earnings, and to retain one-half of the sums due from the Government to them for services performed. The bill further provides that, to cover any deficiency that may arise in the second sinking fund after the application of these two funds, the companies shall pay to the United States such additional sums as, when added to them and invested, will meet the interest when it becomes due.

The theory on which this bill is based is this: First, that the right of the Government to amend the charter of the Union Pacific railroad which is reserved to Congress carries with it the power to make such changes as will secure the application of the assets of the company to protect the Government as a creditor; second, that the right to alter the charter is the right so to alter the contract between the Government and the company as to impose liabilities upon the company which did not previously exist, provided the new liabilities designed to accomplish the original object of the law or fulfill the duty of the company to the Government; third, that this power to alter, as affecting the individual liability of stockholders, has received consideration from the courts which may throw some light on this subject.

45,000,000.

The Centennial Population of the United States.

It is to be regretted, says the Chicago Journal, that Congress did not, at its last session, provide for the enumeration of the American people in 1875, so that in this centennial year we might know exactly where we are standing as to population. Our status herein, as compared with that of other great nationalities, is at this time a subject of peculiar interest. The Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia will enable us to compare the works of our mechanic arts, our manufactures, our fine arts, the wares of our merchants and the products of our agriculture with those of most nations of the earth, and it would be exceedingly gratifying were we also able to lay before our foreign visitors and exhibitors comprehensive statements of our exact growth in population, wealth, and in our material interests generally since "the sword of Bunker Hill" was drawn and we started in as a nation.

Though this cannot be done, on account of the neglect of Congress to provide for a census in 1875, yet it is possible to calculate, with a near approximation to correctness, the present population of the United States. And this because a number of States did actually enumerate their people in 1875. This was done in thirteen of the States, and the same thing was done in Michigan in 1874. The States in which the people were enumerated in 1875 were Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Wisconsin. It will be seen from the list that they are scattered all over the country, so that the facts shown thereby may fairly be taken as a basis of calculation for the whole. With the aid thus rendered by actual enumerations in 1874 and 1875, with further actual enumerations which have been made in many cities, and with the aid also of careful estimates as to some States and Territories, based on the number of popular votes polled at the general elections of 1874 and 1875, we have constructed the following table showing the population of the United States in 1875, as compared with the population in 1870. We believe it is not very far from the facts as they would have actually been shown had a census been taken during the summer of 1875. According to our careful calculations, the population is as follows:

NEW ENGLAND STATES.	Population in 1870.	In 1875.

[*The States marked with an * are those in which a census was taken in 1875.]

We thus perceive that, according to the best calculations and most careful approximations of which the case is capable, we have, in round numbers, a population of 45,000,000 souls wherewithal to celebrate our national jubilee and to demonstrate the good and progressive influence of free institutions.

If we compare our population with that of other countries, we shall find that we considerably outrank any nation, exclusively Christian, on the globe. The populations of the great nations of the world, according to the latest enumerations and estimates, were as follows:

British Islands	31,486,885
France	36,102,921
Germany	40,000,000
Russia	65,200,000
Spain	22,000,000
Austria	35,573,900
Italy	26,801,184
China	400,000,000
Japan	33,000,000

The population of Russia is probably half Mohammedan, fire-worshiping and heathen. The immense Empire of Brazil, in South America, contains a population of only about 14,000,000 souls, or less than our Northwestern States. Idol-worshiping China contains inhabitants almost equal to those of all Christendom.

Paper Bed Covering.

A suggestion that has been frequently made in the newspapers, that a sheet of blown paper used as a bed covering between or on top of other wrappers, will impart additional warmth and be as serviceable as a blanket, has been acted upon by Mr. Loder, who has taken out a patent for paper blankets. They are perforated at distances of about four inches, in order to promote the ventilation which the density of the brown paper material interrupts. These paper blankets may prove a boon to the poor, and as they are economical, and ready for use in any emergency, they will be acceptable in hospitals for the supply of which Mr. Loder has already obtained two or three contracts.

The Boston Pilot has been sold to Archbishop Williams and John Boyle O'Reilley. The price paid was $28,000, in addition to which the purchasers take up a mortgage of $6,500 and fulfill the existing contracts of the paper to subscribers.

A novel locomotive has been made in California to run on the long flumes that are used to float lumber down from the mountains. The wheels fit on the edge of the sides of the flume, and at the ends of the car are paddle wheels dipping into the water, and which are turned by the swift current. By a simple arrangement this power is made to propel the locomotive up the flume, and it runs back itself.

LATE COMFORT.

I saw my body dead, upon a day;
No tears, no kiss had fallen upon my face,
But common hands within my loveless place
Gave me scant heed and left me where I lay.
But, while I watched about the twilight gray,
One entering, knelt beside my body there;
She had not loved me in the days that were;
Footsore she was and weary of the way.

And when she saw the last love song I made,
The last, unended, in my fingers laid,
Her warm lips fell on my cold lips dead;
And then I saw her kisses and her tears,
And I forgave her all the cruel years,
Knew she had loved me, and was comforted.

The First Red Cent.

An item is going the rounds of the papers, stating that "the first cent was proposed by Robert Morris, the great financier of the Revolution. It began to make its appearance from the mint in 1792. It bore the head of Washington on one side, and thirteen links on the other." The cent recently referred to in the Detroit News, belonging to Mr. R. E. Roberts, of that city, has on one side the sun and dial, underneath which are the words, "Mind your Business," and on the sides, "Fugio" and "1787." On the reverse a circle of thirteen rings, linked together, surrounding one ring, on which is stamped "United States," and in the center, "We are One." It has always been understood to have been designed by Dr. Franklin. Such is a correct description of the first cent. In this centennial era, correctness in matters of history is important. In this connection the question arises, as it has about pins, where have the millions of old red cents made by the government gone to? Mr. Roberts has also in his possession a copper coin, about the size of the old United States cent, bearing the head of "Louis XVI, Lois des Francois. 1790."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR COURIER.—Passing along the Avenue the other morning, I saw a great crowd assembled on the space near Ninth street, listening attentively to a large, well preserved man, with florid complexion, and it needed no second look to convince one of his English origin. With a powerful voice he caught the ear of the most distant, and with a peculiar magnatism he almost compelled the passerby to stop and listen. That was Dr. Hammond, the celebrated revivalist, who has held away here for several weeks. He stops now and then in his remarks, and during these intervals, a fine, rich voice is heard singing of "The Ninety and Nine," or some other equally attractive piece, and when he comes to a chorus the immense throng take it up and swell the sound until it thrills and captivates the most indifferent. That is Mr. Bently, and these two go hand in hand in the great work of reformation. They have struck an admirable field here, plenty of raw material upon which to work, though not of the most plastic kind.

THE IMPEACHMENT.

I may be mistaken, but I think the action of the Senate since the beginning of the trial, shows that the Court has made up its mind that it has no jurisdiction. Your Washington dispatches state as soon as the House of Representatives ordered articles of impeachment against William W. Belknap, to be presented at the bar of the Senate that that body, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, could not try a private citizen for any offence alleged to have been committed as a public officer. Since that time an increasing number of persons have examined the subject, and with the exception of those sunk in the mire of English precedents there seems to be a unanimity that the doctrin of the continuous responcibility of a person who has once been a public officer for acts done as such public officer, even though the interval between his impeachment for alleged maladministration and the offense itself may have been fifty years, is one wholly discountenanced by the Constitution and fraught with great danger in practice

There is a great deal of misconception even now in regard to Belknap's case. Granting for the sake of argument that the Senate has jurisdiction over Belknap its power to punish him is very slight indeed. He is out of office, and all it could do would be to prevent him from ever holding any office of trust or profit under the United States. There is not much fear of his having the refusal of such an office trust upon him for some time to come. On the other hand, the Grand Jury of this District has just indicted him, and on theconviction in the crimeinal courts he is liable to three years' imprisonment and the payment of a fine of three times the amount of the alleged bribe.

Senators are extremely reticent as to the prospects of impeachment. They stubbonrly refuse to discuss the subject with any one, but the haste to hear the question of jurisdiction argued, and the well-settled conviction in the minds of impartial observers that the Senate has no jurisdiction, warrant the presumption that a number of the Senators, trained to form a judgment on such questions, share the same views.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

There has been a decided change in public sentiment here, relative to what is now called the "Great Unknown," the coming man. On one side Bristow seemed pretty strong, but the late developements before the Committee on the Barque "Mary Meritt" are not clearly in his favor. The facts in the case are, that the Mary Merritt a vessel on Lake Michigan was seized by the government for violation of the revenue law, or in other words, for smuggling. The vessel was owned by parties in Kentucky, and Bristow assisted their counsel to obtain a revocation of the order condemning the vessel. They failed. Afterwards when Bristow became Secretary of the Treasury, this order was obtained, and $10,500 was paid the owners. I do not think Bristow had much to do with it personally, but people will talk you know, and everything is not lovely. Therefore, Bristow's stock is not so strong as it was, and there are doubts among his friends. Blaine, is not gaining much by his late explanation of the $64,000 job, and if he is not loosing ground it is because of the great personal effort he is making to win. Morton has not been in much demand, and his late vindication was too thin a covering for even many of his Republican friends It is claimed here that he had some of his friends make charge against him so that he could "vindicate" and at the same time bring up his great war record but it has not panned out well. Conkling has been thoroughly squelched by the safe lock matter in which he has been attorney, while a Senator before the departments. Somebody has been foolish enough to suggest the name of Zach Chandler, but it don't seem to strike the popular idea with much favor.

On the Democratic side, Tilden of New York, seems to have some friends, though how they expect New York to get three nominees in successeon, I can't conceive, unless they are so modest to imagine that all the Presidential material of the country is contained in that State Gov. Hendricks holds steadily on in the race, and all added strength he gives is sure and permanent.

MISCELLANEOUS.

One thing I always enjoy is my trips to the Capitol. It is the walk from the western gate to the building. I never knew how many phrases of insanity could be expressed on different faces until I inspected those of the occupants of the benches which line the hill of science. The idiotic expression of countenance is simply delicious. The grounds look very pretty now. I often think if the humble dandelion was an expensive flower how we would all prize it; but as they cost noting they are valueless to us.

We Americans value things solely by what they cost. Camel's hair shawls are the ugliest I ever looked at, (and I know lots of others that think the same way, only they dare not say so,) and yet they are the envy and desire of every woman's heart on account of their cost It is this desire to outshine each other that has brought us to our present forlorn condition. Jones don't see why his wife should not have everything as well as Smith's wife. After a while Robison comes in and outshines both. It is a constant struggle for each one to be "ahead" A little discussion was caused by Piper of California, who seemed to have an insane idea that San Francisco should have a larger appropriation.—Not getting it, "he made fun of" Philadelphia, and called it a "little village one hundred and sixty miles from the sea," and an over-populated manufacturing country village." It was fun to see Pennsylvania rise in its centennial rath. Kelley was something awful to behold in his pig-iron dignity. His voice has never been so sonorons since he, some few years ago, went down to Alabama to reconstruct them, and came home suddenly to see his mother-in-law. Hopkins took his glasses off twice, and wiped from them the tears drawn by hearing the great centennial city of his State called "a village." O'Neill seemed in a state of mind calculated to make him eligible to testify before the insane investigating committee, by the slur cast on his loved city by the California minstrel, (I believe Pipers are minstrels) In fact Pennsylvania was insulted, and an insulted Pennsylvania is a sight worth witnessing.

I saw Belknap in the Senate the other day, and he looked as well as he ever did. Sentimental writers have made him out looking thin and care-wore.—His face wore a complacent look, and he seemed well fortified for the trial.—He seemes to have unbounded confidence in his counsel, which aint so bad as it might be. Such men as black and Carpenter make a heavy team in the intracies of the legal profession.

TO THE DELINQUENT

TAX-PAYERS

—OF—

DeKalb County.

Be it known that the Delinquent List from the Tax Duplicate of 1875 is now in my hands for collection, and will pass into the hands of my Deputy, T. J. Saxton [who will collect the entire county]

On Saturday the 10, day of June '76

Until the taxes may be settled at the Treasure's office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added. Afterwards there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment be made to the Collector or in person, or at the Treasure's office.

There will be further charges in case of collection by the sale of Goods and Chattles, and the legal fees for posting notices. Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the deputy's hands.

In compliance with the late law of the State of Indiana, the Deputy Collectors will be compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists. The new law further provides that the Deputies as well as the Treasurer have the power at all times to levy upon personal property wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattle tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township, and again exposed to sale.

Deputies will be responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collected by law. The new law compels Treasures to collect the tax of Delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax.

Now let me kindly urge each Delinquent Tax payer to avail himself of this timely notice, and call and settle his tax account before the 10th day of June 1876 as the Treasure's are bound under the new law to show no favors to any one Very Respectfully your obedient Servant

NICHOLAS ENSLEY.

We clip the following from the Ligonier Banner of last week:

Noble country had but two representatives at the State convention last week —O D. Willet, and J. B. Stoll. Lagrange county was represented by Dr. J. Dancer and C. B. Holmes, and Steuden by Dr. G. W. Mc-Connell and his son "Billy," our popular circuit prosecutor. DeKalb had a very fair representation in point of numbers and, unusdally strong in point of effective workers.

The Chicago Times says, that the common talk about the enormous cost of living in Washington may as well be dried up. It isn't born out by experience in Belknap's case at least. It is pretty well known that he went to Washington poor, and that he now owns a $80,000 house and a considerable amount of other property. He does not admit the receipt of any illegal revenues, and it is apparent, therefore, that he must have 'saved" the price of his modest salary—quite a remarkable feat of economy, it must de admitted, when the savings double the whole amount of the salery.

Centennial Bonnet.—Just such an one as our great-grandmothers wore one hundred years ago, we gazed upon with reference, yet could scarcely repress a smile when we thought of increasing the sweet face of one "dearer still than another" in such a head-dress. Yet such was the "love of a bonnet" of a century ago. In addition to the above Mrs. Little has returned from the East, with a large stock of Millinery goods. Little & Fair take the lead.

We see from the Anderson Democrat that our accomplished friend, Major Ed Henderson received the nomination in Madison County, for Representative to the State Legislature. A genial, clever gentleman, with a high order of ability and integrity, he will certainly prove a zealous and efficient worker in the cause of the people. A vote cast for him will be given in the interest of good legislation, and we hope to see him elected by a large majority.

An old lady and man visited our town last week, and were begging and selling temperance songs. The man was blind and the lady looking so shabby they won the sympathy of most every one they met. After convasing the town thoroughly, they laid away their traps and went into a saloon, and about six o'clock they were both blind—blind drunk. After having a little shoulder bumping between themselves they took their departure. The scene reminded us of the "Two Orphans."

A tramp broke into Charley Smith's saloon last Sunday night and took several bottles of whisky, cigars, &c. On Monday evening constable Thompson in company with Alex Seaton, started in persuit of the fellow, and on Tuesday caught and arrested a man near Newville by the name of Foley who is said to be the thief. He stopped at Mr. Williams', a short distance from town, and exchanged some cigars for "grub." He would rather drink than smoke, as he had a better supply of whisky than he had cigars.

If we thought it would do any good to write about having a celebration here on the Forth of July, we would cover one side of the paper. To look over our exchanges and see every town, village and City are to have a grand time this Centennial year, and hear we have nothing to report from this place, it gives us the blues. We could just as well as not have two days' celebration here as to have none; but we all would be satified with one. The buisness men is the ones who are benefi, financially, and it is to their interest to take hold of the matter.

Three of our sports hired a livery rig of Ford & Parent, last Sunday, and not returning at the time designated the proprietors started in persuit of them. Near the poor farm it was they all met. The proprietors asked for extra pay, and the boys thought they did'nt have to. One, two, three, they stepped out of the buggy and—walked home. But then it was no joke on the boys. If it had been raining (which it was) it would have been different; or on the other hand, if the juice had been squeezed out of the mud, they would have had dusty roads to walk on.

The new Town Board met at regular meeting last Monday evening. The bonds of the different candidates were examined and a marshal elected, being about all the business transacted. Samuel Galloway was chosen marshal and we have no doubt but the he will make a good one. Sam is a good fellow, liked by every one, and is enterprising and energetic. The Board called an extra session for Tuesday night. They will examine the "cannal" in the north part of town and will probably bridge it so that teams can cross into the alleys.

The north part of the county was visited by many candidates the latter part of last week. In our opimion that portion of the county is governed too much by a few moneyed men, who choose their candidates and carry the vote. Now, we like to see party men stand by each other and not let some little trifling thing that has been long in the past and can never be remied, create an ill feeling among a few influential men. Work for your own candidates in the convention but at the polls stand by the man on the ticket, even if you do not like him.

We received a piece of poetry from Sedan that beats the "devil and the Dutch." It would take all the school marms in this, and all the adjoining counties to "wind up one verse." The production was written on a saw-log, with the bark on. The reason we think so is, that one verse ends up like this.

"This paper on a log I lay,
To tell you my love this 10th of May."

She was writing to her fellow, you know. She wanted to get it into print so his ma could read it for him. We handed it to the devil and if it hadn't been that he was expecting his "Jane" up to see him every minute he would have fainted. But after looking at it for five minutes he braced up and said, he didn't owe a cent in this town.

The other evening one of our Auburn boys hired a livery rig and went a buggy riding with Milindy Smithers. They went several miles into the country and did not think of returning until quite dark. On the way home the young couple were so taken up in their love affairs that they did not notice an old cow lying in the middle of the road. One of the front wheels ran upon the cow's side. She jumped up and upset the lovers into a ditch, which was full of mud and water. Milindy looked like a kitten after taking a shower bath. The young man crawled out of the ditch pulled off his boots, and started in persuit of the horse and buggy. Milindy brought up the rear, carrying a boot in each hand. She got home about one o'clock in the morning, and is one pair of boots ahead, as her lover has not yet called for them.

A young girl, at Eaton, Ind., was recently seduced by a boy named Nathan Smith, and before it was time for her to become a mother the young man and two doctors under took a treatment to relieve her, from which she died. They took her to a swamp close by and buried her, and then sent out a report that she had gone south to visit friends. The mother of young Smith, on her dying bed, told the story, how and who committed the deed and where she was buried. After several days search the young girl was found. The body was covered with a horse blanket but on the body proper there was nothing but a chemise and a pair of wooled stockings The remains were taken to Eaton and placed in a building there where an examination ensued revealing but too plainly the truth of the dying mother's declarations. In the meantime the two doctors and the seducer were arrested and it was with much difficulty that they were prevented from being lynched by the infuriated mob, after the fact of the horrible affair had become knew. They are now safely guarded in the jail at Muncie although loud threats of lynching are still heard.

Lee Gets on His Ear.

The other day a great big over-grown fellow, with hay seed around his neck, came into the post office, spread himself out before the letter delivery and asked if there was anything for Ebenezer Stump. Down came the letters from the S. box. Lee looked them over carefully and told him there was nothing for Stump. "Anything for Johnathan Black?" Down came the letters from the B box, but nothing could be found. He called on in this way until he had called off twenty-one names, and not a name that he called for could be found. At last Lee "got on his ear" and asked him if he knew any of the names he had been calling. He said that he did not that he was a stranger in the place, and had called in to pass away the time. In about fifteen seconds, a number 9 boot was passing under that fellows coat-tail forty times in a minute. He landed in the ditch on all fours, crawled upon the other side and yelled with all his might "is there anything for Snickleby Stoop-and-take-it? and then broke off on a dead run for home.

Corunna Items.

—Jim Finch is now sole proprietor of the Dearborn house and livery.

—Mr. Knour is closing out his stock of goods and will re turn to Kendallville in a short time.

—Old Mr. Eddie has returned, and will probably remain in Corunna for some time to come.

—The Grist Mill owned by Mr. Betchel, has received a new coat of paint, which adds much to its outside appearance.

—Corunna still boasts of a good wheat trade. Taking the grain custom of Sedan to Corunna, will still add to their trade.

—Dr. Snyder is repairing and generally overhauling his residence, and when completed will make a very desirous home.

—E. Gonser is wide-awake to the people's interest and keeps one of the finest as well as the cheapest stock of goods in the place

—We visited Dr. Mercer's new Drug Store and find that he used good judgment and taste in arranging the room and purchasing stock.

—Mr. Geo. McMillen, one of the oldest inhabitants of the village, is still supplying the people with meat. He now appears as the youngest man in town.

—M. Boland is still serving the Air Line Road as operator. Mike is coming before the convention as Recorder, and will make a good one.

We visited the village of Corunna, last Saturday, and found everything in the way of business lively. In strolling about the place we gleaned the following items:

—The heavy rains last Saturday night washed away one side of Mr. C. Shaffee's new stone foundation, on which he intended to erect a fine residence the coming season.

—Jno. Ritter, the tonsorial artist, is doing a slashing business. Jno. is one of the best workmen in the State and should be patronized by every man in Corunna. His shop is as nicely arranged as any in the county.

—Lafe Miller has several pets. Among them is a pet crow. This crow is death on onions, and flies from patch to patch and pulls them up. Joe. Loveland has planted three different times, but the last planting is doing well. Joe covers them with a collar box till the crow goes to roost.

Neighborhood News.

WATERLOO

—This place now enjoys a Good Templar Lodge. The attendance is said to be large.

—B. B. Long has done all his Justice business he intends to, and D. Y. Husselman will fill the vacancy.

—More ground has been added to the cemetry which makes a pleasant spot to "lay your weary head."

—The corporation election was a little mixed. The Democrats carrying the majority.

—Baxter is still woried over the population of Auburn. It would look better to compare your city and Garrett City. Garrett has lost over 50 inhabitants, which would make you a trifle ahead.

BUTLER

—Last week's issue closed the first quarter of the "Butler Review."

—N. Veeley has moved his family south of Auburn.

—Sam Searight has put a wagon on the road. It will carry tin-ware.

—Rev. Mr. Bacon introduced himself to the children of the Sunday School, as the "preacher with two thumbs on one hand."—[Butler Review.

How about his toes. Were they all there?

FORT WAYNE.

—Ed. Booth played in the Opera House last night.

—The rifle team visited Jackson Mich and wiped out the Michiganders.

—The base-ball interest is lively. About 40 different nines are under practice.

—It cost the city $252.65 to bread and butter the tramps last month. Better give them bread and water.

—The Gazette says, twenty-two map men dined at the American House yesterday.

—The city election went Democratic.

There is but little chance for a Republican to get an office in Fort Wayne.

HICKSVILLE

—This place boasts of a champion horse-shoe pitcher.

—It looks bad for youngsters, and still worse for older persons, to sit on dry goods boxes in front of stores and making remarks about passers-by. With nothing else to do some amusement to develope the muscle and create an appetite would be better employment.—[Hicksville Independent.

That must be a nice burg for laboring men to find employment. Pitching horse shoes and setting on store boxes won't buy the baby a dress.

"Long" John Wentworth says there are only two parties in this country. One is the party who believe it is their duty to support government; the other is the party who believe it is the duty of government to support them.

There was a very close vote in the House of Representatives on Holman's bill to stop the sale of bonds for resumption purposes and the cancellation of greenbacks under the existing law. On a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill the years numbered 115 and the nays 111.

Professor Blake known throuhout the country as a mind-reader committed suicide at San Francisco Thursday. He carefully destroyed all evidences of his identity and left a note asking the Coroner to make no efforts to ascertain it. The body was recognized last Sunday. Cause poverty and ill health.

At a session of the United States Centennial Commissioners the question of opening the Exposition to the public on Sundays was freely discussed. The vote taken on the question of Sunday opening resulted in opposition to a Sunday exhibition nine States only voting in favor of the proposition.

The President has vetoed the bill reducing the salary of the President to $25,000 per annum. He says that amount was fixed 100 years ago when the country was poor and had a population of 3,000,000, and when Congressmen were paid $6 per day for the time Congress continued in session. The President's salary has not been advanced according to the salaries of other officials and he believes $50,000 not too much. He can speak disinter estedly on the subject as he would not be affec by the bill and declines to say his successor shall not receive the salary paid him.

THE BEAUTIFUL BALLAD OF WASKA WEE.

Her voice was sweet as a ban-go-lin;
Her mouth was small as the head of a pin;
Her eyes ran up, her chin ran down—
Oh, she was the belle of Yeddo town.

Now lovely Waska Singty Wee,
So good to hear, and sweet to see,
The fairest maiden in all Japan,
Fell dead in love with a Turkish man.

This Turkish man a turban had,
This Turkish man was sly and bad;
He whispered unto Miss Waska Wee:
"O fly with me to my own Turkee!

"O fly with me to my own Turkee!
And robes of gold I'll give to thee—
A girdle of pearl and love for life,
If thou wilt be my eightieth wife."

Now simple Waska Singty Wee,
So good to hear, so fair to see,
Resolved behind her bashful fan
To be eightieth wife to this Turkish man;

But though her heart was full of glee,
She hung her head and said to he:
"If thou shouldst die, my Turkish beau,
Where would poor Waska Singty go?"

Then this horrid, sly, old Turkish man
Declared he'd die on the English plan,
"And so," said he, "my bright-winged bird,
Thou'lt have for thy fortune the widow's third."

Then flew the maid to the Mi-ka-do,
And told the plan of her Turkish beau.
"And now," said she, "the whole thou'st heard,
How much will it be, this widow's third?"

Now the Mi-ka-do was wondrous wise;
He opened his mouth and shut his eyes:
"The widow's third, O daughter, will be,
Whatever the law will allow to thee."

Then flew the maid to the Court of Lords,
Where every man wore a brace of swords,
And bade them name what sum would be hers
When her Turk should go to his fore-fa-thers

They sat in council from dawn till night,
And sat again till morning light—
Figured and counted and weighed to see
What an eightieth widow's third would be;

And the end of it all, as you well might know,
Was naught but grief to the Turkish beau;
For lovely Waska Singty Wee
Said: "Go back alone to your old Turkee!"

NELLIE HARTWELL'S HOUSEKEEPING.

"My dearest Nellie!"

"Dear Horace!"

"And you will be content to take me as I am—a poor clerk, with only seven hundred a year? Will you be happy to pass life with me in a small house, and attend to the domestic affairs yourself?"

"Yes, Horace."

"But, have you considered, my best beloved, how great a burden this may sometimes be?"

"A burden! O, Horace, as if anything that I could do for you would be a burden! A sweet little vine-wreathed cottage will be delightful. A cozy house all to ourselves, and no prying housemaids to spy into everything we do, and prate of my faults and failings to the whole neighborhood."

"And no burnt steak and black coffee! Doubly delicious the ambrosial nectar that your lily hands shall prepare, my day-star, my wife—that is to be."

Immediately upon this followed a concussion which made the windows clatter as in the breath of a tempest; and, from what little experience we have had in such promises, we must venture to affirm that he kissed her—which of course sealed the compact.

Horace Hartwell was a fine-looking young fellow of twenty-three—a clerk in the jobbing-house of Martin & Turner; and Nellie Armstead was the daughter of a man who, though by no means wealthy, had a wonderful talent for appearing so. In this laudable endeavor he was aided by his wife—a handsome, showy woman, who brought his daughter up to ornament the parlor, to the utter exclusion of the kitchen. Therefore, Nellie was well qualified by edution to become the mistress of a house, and the regulator of its domestic affairs.

Horace Hartwell had fallen in love with her pretty face at a picnic; and, on obtaining an introduction, the infatuation had increased, until he came to the conclusion that he could not live without her; and Nellie was firmly convinced that she should pine away and die if separated from Horace. And having succeeded in convincing Mrs. Armstead of this fact, that lady informed her husband, and the good man had nothing to do but consent to the marriage which was to be the means of saving two valuable lives.

One fine, sunshiny morning in May, Horace and Nellie stood before the clergyman, and after that people called Nellie Mrs. Hartwell, and congratulated her on the happiness which was within her reach.

The young couple took up their residence in a neat, one-story house, a little removed from the bustle of the city, and easy of access from the store where Horace was employed. And here they first came to realize that Longfellow was not far from the truth when he said,

"Life is real, life is earnest."

Their house was comfortably, if not luxuriously, furnished, and an ample stock of the good things of life was laid in for Nellie to exercise her skill upon as a cuisinier.

When everything was put to rights, and Horace had gone to his place of business, leaving many a lover-like kiss on the white forehead of his wife, together with the intimation that he would expect dinner at three o'clock, Nellie consulted her watch and found that she had full four hours in which to prepare that important meal. She would dress before she commenced doing anything about the kitchen, she thought; she had read so much of untidy housekeepers, it never should be said she went round the house in slip-shod shoes or dingy wrappers. O, no; housework should never make a sloven of her.

So Nellie went up to her chamber, arranged her hair in becoming ringlets, donned a pretty white cashmere peignoir over an embroidered skirt, and with black velvet bracelets on her arms and a blush rose in its own sweet buds and foliage on her bosom, it must be confessed that little Nellie looked pretty enough to challenge anybody's admiration.

"Let me see," quoth she, meditating, "What shall I have for dinner? Horace is fond of broiled steak; I've heard him say so. And pudding; yes, there must be pudding; a rice one, I guess will be best. And then there must be potatoes and bread. That will suffice for the eatables; now for the drinkables, as Aunt Keziah says. Shall I have tea, coffee, chocolate, or water? My head doesn't feel very well, and it shall be tea; tea helps settle anybody's head, I have heard mother say. That's all, I believe—no, there's the sauce; there must be some kind of sauce. Shall it be apple or cranberry? For this once, cranberry; it's an abominable job to pare apples, and it stains one's hands so shockingly; and Horace can't endure stained hands. I'll go and make a fire now."

And suiting the action to the word, Nellie, after some search, found the coal shovel, and put into the stove a peck of coal and an ignited bunch of friction matches, then stood quietly awaiting the conflagration which was to ensue. Nothing alarming occurred; there was considerable smoke, and a powerful, strong smell of brimstone, but no great fire. She concluded that the matches didn't get fairly burning, so she tried another bunch; and believing this could not fail of accomplishing her design, she retired to the pantry as the next field of operation. After considerable thought on the subject, she decided to make the pudding first; it would be the most difficult job, she argued. Well, how was it to be made? "The Revised American Cook Book and Delicate Housewife's Especial and Valuable Friend in Need" was called in play. There was a paragraph on the cover to the effect that you would find everything worth knowing within the lids of that invaluable casket of diamonds; and Nellie fondly believed that people in general prefer speaking truth to a lie! So she opened the book in full faith touching its veracity.

"Rice pudding. Put the rice to soak in luke-warm water, having picked it clean of all impurities; and milk, sugar, and salt to your taste. A little nutmeg and a couple of eggs improve it."

"Goodness me!" ejaculated Nellie, "how am I to know anything about it, I wonder? How much is a little nutmeg? And how much rice, and milk, and sugar, will be enough? And, as I live, if there ain't the awfulest smut spot upon my skirt! I must wash that out the first thing!" And, forgetful of pudding and dinner, she flew to the wash bowl, and scrubbed the soiled cambric till its gaping threads cried eloquently for quarter.

By the time this was cleansed she espied a second spot, located on the sleeve of her dressing-gown, and this must undergo the same elaborate process as the former blemish. When this much was gone through with, she saw that the rose on her bosom was in a disabled condition—the rose itself being among the missing, and the two delicate buds broken and wilted. So Nellie had to go up stairs and get a fresh blossom. Horace admired flowers, and thought Nellie became them amazingly.

"Now the pudding must be mixed, for certain," said she, assuming an air of pretty importance, which, unfortunately, no one was there to see. "Let me read that recipe over again. 'Pick it clean of all impurities.' I wonder if that means the water, or the rice. It can't mean the rice, assuredly, for that is as clean as it possibly can be; it is the double refined—no, double distilled—mercy! strange that I should forget the label on the box! Well, it is pure rice, that don't need any picking, any way. How much rice will it take? Goodness! I wish the cook book was a little more definite. Some time, I'll write one myself, that will give all the particulars to a teaspoonful. Well, we shall want the large white dish full; I'll measure it, and see how much it holds."

And away flew Nellie to gauge the pudding dish, in order to calculate the quantity needed for the pudding. She found the plate capable of containing two quarts, and from this she concluded that two quarts of rice would be quite enough. The extravagant item was measured out, and committed to a tin pan full of water to undergo the soaking process, and Nellie surveyed with dismay what remained in the box.

"Dear me! it must be a terrible expense to keep house—here's every bit of that rice gone for a pudding; and Horace only having $700 a year. I must try to be very saving. I won't use as much sugar as I intended to; and the recipe says a little nutmeg—and I won't put in so much as that. Economy is a real virtue."

Soliloquizing thus to herself, Nellie mixed the rice, water and all, with a cupful of milk, a teacupful of sugar, two unbeaten eggs, a half a cup of salt, and a few grains of nutmeg. This precious compound she put into the oven of the stove and then proceeded to examine the fire. This was not so easily done, as there was no fire to be examined. Nellie thought she never did see such a contrary stove in her life; and by way of improving its contumacious disposition, she poured two or three spoonfuls of burning fluid on the coal, and then touched a lucifer to it. The effect was astonishing; the covers of the stove were blown off like a beaver hat in a nor'wester, and the fire proved to be a mere "flash in the pan."

"Never mind," said Nellie, in a consolatory tone; "I guess it will kindle; there seems to be a small blaze underneath."

The potatoes were brought next, and having carefully peeled them, she placed them in a kettle with some water and put them over the stove. Then she cut the steak—and her finger at the same time; and the extraordinary gyration which she made under the influence of the pain upset the flour bucket into the slop-pail and entangled her crinoline in the hooks of the steelyards which depended from the wall. It was a long time before she could break clear from those tenacious intruders; the steel frame-work of her skeleton held on like true metal, and the hooks of the steelyards were bound not to let go; so a compromise was made, and Nellie divested herself of the warlike garment and disengaged the combatants at her leisure.

Nellie had heard her mother's cook say that pounding meat made it tender; and, in pursuance of this knowledge, she put the pieces of steak into a mortar and pounded them until the perspiration streamed down her face and her arms ached with the exertion. As for the meat, it is best not to say much regarding the appearance; but it more strongly resembled a poultice than anything else.

While she was thus engaged the cat—a family pet—had taken possession of the remainder of the steak, and was enjoying it to her feline heart's content, in the shadow of the pickle jar.

"Scat, scat, you beast! Shoo, scat, there! Shoo, I say!" cried Nell, dropping the mortar, and making at pussy with the pestle elevated over her head. The cat, to avoid the impending blow, made a sidelong spring, knocking down a shelf which held several vessels of milk, and this shelf falling upon the egg basket, smashed a chosen dozen of as good eggs as ever a hen cackled over.

Nellie had quite a mind to sit down in the midst of the ruin and indulge in a good cry; but she controlled herself, and after mopping up the milk, to the great detriment of her white garments, she went out into the kitchen to see what progress the fire was making. There was not the least vestige of a fire about the premises, and poor Nellie was in despair. Just then she spied a boy going by, and called out:

"Here, boy, here! I'll give you ninepence to do a little job for me."

The boy's eyes glistened at the prospect, and he obeyed her call with alacrity; but, when she told him to make a fire, he laughed in her face. However, he was a capable lad—as Nellie thought—and ere long, by his skillful application of kindlings, a brisk fire was in progress. The stipulated price was paid, and Nellie considered it a good bargain.

The pudding was in the oven, the potatoes in the pot, the steak on the gridiron upon the top of the stove—everything was en traine. By-and-by the dripping from the fat began to smell rather unpleasantly; it filled the room with smoke so dense and stifling that poor Nellie's eyes grew red and tearful; and the tortured meat sizzled and hissed, and turned black as a bear's skin. Nellie threw open the doors and stuck to her task of turning the gridiron, resolved in vulgar, though expressive, parlance "to grin and bear it."

The pudding boiled over a continued stream; the potatoes bounced up and down in the kettle like cockle shells in a stormy sea; the steak groaned and spit, and in the midst of it all the clock struck three. Punctual to the hour, Horace's step sounded in the entry, the kitchen door was flung open with a lover's impetuosity, and that individual invaded the smoky room.

"Good gracious, Nellie! is the house on fire? Come here this moment, darling. What under the canopy ails your face? It's blacker than the ace of spades—begging your pardon for the comparison. Do look into the glass, Nell!"

He wheeled her round toward the mirror, and surely the picture there presented was not the most attractive one that a young husband might wish to look upon. The ashes which had been evolved from the stove through her unremitting attempts to make a fire had settled on her hair, until her head was as white as that of an ancient militia captain, powdered for training day. One long curl had dipped itself in the hot water, over which she had been standing in vain effort to scrub the stains from her clothes, and it was straightened out as perpendicular as a candle, and hung, dripping with water, down her back. To finish the tout ensemble, a streak of smut extended from her left temple across her nose to her right cheek, and at sight of the ridiculous figure she made poor Nellie burst into tears. This only made matters worse; but Horace, like a true hero, kissed away the tears, soot and all, transferring by far the larger portion of the latter substance to his own face. Then he off coat, turned up sleeves, and announced himself ready to assist about the dinner. In this respect Horace was a jewel, and his wife blessed him for the generous heart which prompted his ready sympathy. But his abilities as a cook were in no wise equal to his will. He turned the steak, and lost half of it in the fire through the bars of the gridiron, "set" the table with the cloth wrong side out, the knives in the spoon-holder, the butter in the preserve bowl, and mistook the pudding dish for the meat plate.

The potatoes were fished out of the pot, boiled to a complete mash; not one particle was left upon another; and Horace, to his wife's dismay, insisted upon straining potatoes and water through the dish-cloth, in the hope of saving the remains.

At last they sat down to dinner—baker's bread, suspicious-looking butter, meat, and a pie from the confectioner's. The pudding was to answer for the dessert.

"Is there tea or coffee, dearest?" asked Horace, looking dubiously over the table.

"Goodness, if I didn't forget it!" cried Nellie, springing up with such force as to upset the castor, and send the vinegar dancing to the floor. "How much tea will it take for us?"

"I don't know, I'm sure," said Horace, slowly. "What does your cookbook say?"

Nellie consulted the work.

"It says 'a quantity proportionate to the size of the family.' How much would that be for us?"

"Well, I don't know; about a cup full, I should think."

So a cup full was put into the urn; hot water was added, and the two housekeepers sat down and waited patiently for the steeping to be finished. At last the tea was drawn; Horace sugared and creamed it, and put the cup to his lips.

"Good heavens!" cried he, in dismay, it is strong enough to bear up a long-boat; and black, too. No more black ink needed in this house yet awhile. We must drink water to-day. There, there, never mind; it was all my work."

Nellie's tears had begun to flow again, and Horace leaned over the table to kiss her forehead, upsetting the tea at the same time into the bosom of his white vest. The amount of caloric contained in the fluid was decidedly unpleasant, and poor Horace, under the influence of the pain, kicked over his chair and broke the looking-glass with the flourish of his elbows. Then he begged Nellie's pardon, picked up the chair, removed the fragments of the mirror, kissed his Niobe of a wife, and sat down to finish his dinner. Alas for his appetite! The steak was nothing but a burnt cinder—outrageously detrimental to molars and incisors; the potatoes were non est; and Horace saved all his powers for the pudding. And he had need of them.

The dessert was brought on and poured into its appropriate receptacle, and Horace helped himself and his wife to bountiful portions.

"Turk's island! and crystallized limestone!" cried he, dropping his first mouthful back into his plate. "Let's wife must have been imported in the last steamer."

"Why, Horace!" exclaimed Nellie, in alarm, "what is the matter with the pudding?"

"Salter than salitudus! Do taste, Nell!"

One mouthful was sufficient. Nellie's pretty face was screwed up into a hundred puckers.

"Why, Horace, who would have thought it? I only put in half a cup-ful."

Dinner passed off rather soberly. Nellie was mortified at the ill success of her hard work. Horace was obliged to quit the table hungry, and we all know that a man with an empty stomach, and the prospect of that organ's remaining thus, is a a formidable animal.

However, his good humor returned directly. He kissed Nellie good-by, and left her to the task of washing the dishes—no easy duty, by the way.

The dinner and its accompaniments were but the prototype of many another dinner. It would be infinitely amusing to the reader to follow Nellie Harwell through the four weeks following her removal to a house of her own.

She invariably forgot to make the bed until she went up stairs to retire; the lamps were never filled till the moment they were wanted; the carpets were swept after she had dusted the furniture; she boiled the calico clothes and the white ones together; made starch of cold water; ironed Horace's dickies wrong side out; sewed up the fingers of his gloves; mistook salt for saleratus and tartar emetic for salt; burnt the meat, forgot to sweeten the sponge cake, and made a hundred other blunders that every inexperienced housekeeper can imagine for herself.

A month of this kind of existence passed away, and Nellie broached a plan to her husband. Horace was only too delighted to consent. Their house was shut up; the young man went to a boarding house and Nellie went to Aunt Martha Chase, a widowed sister of her father, who resided in a country town some twenty miles away.

Aunt Martha was a lady more celebrated for the excellence of her pies and preserves than for the number of her flounces, and under her tutelage Nellie became, in time, what every woman should be, without regard to her station, a good housekeeper. And when at the end of three months she went back to her own house, there were no more salt puddings or burned steaks.

Little lady, think well beforehand, if the adoration of your accepted lover will live after marriage if fed upon bad bread and black coffee.

The Influence of Newspapers.

A school teacher, who had been a long time engaged in his profession, and witnessed the influence of a newspaper upon the minds of a family of children, writes as follows: I have found it to be a universal fact, without exception, that those scholars of both sexes, and of all ages, who have access to newspapers at home, when compared with those who have not, are: 1. Better readers, excellent in pronunciation, and, consequently read more understandingly. 2. They are better spellers, and define words with ease and accuracy. 3. They obtain practical knowledge of geography in almost half the time it requires of others, as the newspapers have made them acquainted with the location of the important places of the nations, their government and doings on the globe. 4. They are better grammarians, for, having become familiar with every variety of styles in newspapers, from the commonplace advertisement to the finished and classical oration of the statesman, they more readily comprehend the meaning of the text, and constantly analyze its construction with accuracy. 5. They write better compositions, using better language, containing more thoughts, more clearly and more correctly expressed. 6. Those young men who have for years been readers of newspapers are always taking the lead in debating societies, exhibiting more extensive knowledge upon a greater variety of subjects, and expressing their views with greater fluency, clearness, and correctness.

Opening of a Remarkable Railway in London.

The London papers announce a further extension of rapid transit in that city by the completion and opening for public traffic of the East London railway, which is another of those gigantic underground enterprises for which the metropolis of England is so distinguished. The most remarkable feature of this new work is the fact that a considerable portion of the line is built under water. The commerce of the world may be said to float and navigate directly over a part of the roof of the tunnel, which extends southeasterly, from the Liverpool street station of the Great Eastern railway, passing directly under the warehouses and water basin of the London docks, thence under the embankment, across and under the Thames river, to the New Cross station of the Southeastern railway, thus connecting all the roads named, and also the London and Brighton and South London lines. At Shadwell and Whitechapel, magnificent stations, each four hundred and fifty feet in length, have been erected. The total cost of this new line, which is a little less than six miles in length, has been £3,200,000, or sixteen millions of dollars.

Manufacture of American Silks.

At the annual meeting of the Silk Association of America, held in New York city last week, reports were read showing that the American silk manufacturers are prospering, and rapidly meeting the demands of home consumption. The total value of American silk goods manufactured in 1875 was $27,158,071; American silk ribbons manufactured were valued at $4,807,985, and the value of imported silk ribbons was only $2,984,271. American manufacturers of sewing-silks and twist are stated to be competing successfully with the English manufacturers in the Canadian market. A marked feature of the increased activity in the silk trade of Paterson, N. J., last year, has been the immigration of a number of so-called master silk-weavers from France and England. These men individually own several looms, which in some instances they have brought with them. They carry on weaving at their homes, one or more rooms being fitted up for that purpose.

RABBITS killed 300 apple trees for a Minnesota farmer recently, by gnawing the bark off.

The Mississippi Mound-Builders.

A recent writer upon this subject has grouped some facts concerning the mound-builders. From these facts we may reasonably infer:

1. That the mound-builders had an organized autocratic government, in which the individual was merged in the state, and thus their rulers could undertake and complete the great works, the remains of which are found in this age.

2. The mound-builders were a laborious people. Nothing but the united labors of many thousands of men could accomplish such great works as have survived the leveling influence of time through thousands of years.

3. The mound-builders were not nomads, but had fixed habitations.

4. They were numerous and gregarious, dwelling in populous cities, as attested by the groupings of the mounds.

5. The mound-builders were acquainted with many of the practical arts of civilized life. They smelted copper, wrought stone, molded clay into useful forms, built houses, reared mounds, which, like those of Otolum, Uxmal, Palenque and San Juan Tectihuacan, were no doubt temple-crowned in the distant past. They manufactured salt, made cloth, and had vessels fitted for many uses. They cultivated the soil, raised corn, melons, pumpkins and squashes, and subsisted in a large degree on the fruits of the earth.

We know not how many centuries may have rolled away since the most recently built of their cities became waste and desolate. Many centuries, we know, must have elapsed since the last mound-builders were expelled or exterminated from the Mississippi valley. Only relics of the most durable character have been found.

Vast and splendid cities built like ancient Sardis of canes and rushes and other perishable materials may once have covered the plains around the temple mounds and about the citadel walls all traces of which have passed away. In the construction of some of the pyramidal groups of mounds in the Yazoo country the labor of many thousands of men must have been called into requisition through many years to complete the work.

There is no evidence that any of the mounds were ever constructed as the foundations of dwellings for the people. The pyramidal mounds of the Mississippi valley are similar in form to the teocalis of the region further south. On some of those we know that temples were erected. In the ruins of Chi-Chen, Yucatan, there is a pyramid of hewn stone surmounted by a temple which must once have presented a splendid appearance. In the valley of the Mississippi materials were abundant for the construction of light buildings. In many of the localities once densely populated by the mound-builders, no stone could be had. Of course no structures of wood could survive the lapse of so many ages. So the cities and habitations of the mound-builders have all vanished, and in the undisturbed quiet of many centuries giant trees and tangled vines usurped the spaces once worn smooth by the pattering feet of thronging myriads of men who have utterly perished from the earth, leaving no memorial of their arts behind them.

Dom Pedro's Country.

All intelligent travelers who have visited Brazil speak in the most glowing terms of the country. Prof. Agassiz regarded it as the most productive and interesting country on the globe, and the one in which it is easiest to obtain a livelihood. Some who have sailed up the Amazon declare that a vessel can be loaded with Brazil nuts at an expense of of only a few cents per bushel. These constitute a valuable article of commerce, while the oil extracted from them is very desirable. All the tropical fruits are produced in Brazil almost without cultivation. The soil in many parts the country will produce twenty successive crops of cotton, tobacco, or sugar-cane, without the application of manure. No country in the world approaches the land of Dom Pedro in the variety of its forest productions. Prof. Agassiz states that he saw 117 different kinds of valuable woods that were cut from a piece of land not half a mile square. They represented almost every variety of color, and many of them were capable of receiving a high polish. One tree furnishes wax that is used for candles; another a pith which is used for food, and still another yields a juice which is used in the place of intoxicating liquor. There is a single variety of palm from which the natives obtain food, drink, clothing, bedding, cordage, fishing-tackle, medicine, and the material they manufacture into dwellings, weapons, harpoons, and musical instruments. Doubtless the day is not distant when the valuable woods of Brazil will be used for various useful and ornamental purposes. Brazil is not only "a wooden country," but a country that produces the most beautiful woods in the world.

Civilized Man vs. the Savages.

In regard to the relative strength of men in different places, investigations show that of twelve natives of Van Diemen's Land the mean strength of their arms was 50.6; of seventeen natives of New Holland it was 50.08, and of their loins 10.2; of fifty-six natives of the island of Timor it was 58.7, and of their loins 11.6; of seventeen Frenchmen it was 69.2, and of their loins 15.2; and of fourteen Englishmen it was 71.4, and of their loins 16.3. The causes of this weakness on the part of savages are sufficiently obvious in their poor and scanty food, want of clothing and shelter, and the various comforts which tend to nourish and support the human frame. Wherever man is found in a state of nature he is necessarily surrounded by circumstances unfavorable to existence, and certainly to physical development and prowess—immense tracts of forest cover the land, large masses of water stagnate on the earth, noxious and pestilential vapors remain unrelieved, ferocious and venomous animals have constantly to be guarded against, and, o course, the lack of means to efficiently combat these and other disadvantages tend to weaken the vital forces. Most of those who have traveled in barbarous climes unite in saying that they seldom come across an old man; and the same causes, apart from violence, which tend to shorten life, may be reasonably expected to diminish strength.

OUR ORDER OF NOBILITY.

The patent of nobility
Dates further back than history,
Or any parchment scroll,
Or coats of arms of ancient lords,
Or mystic signs, or delphic words—
'Tis written in the soul.

Good blood is that which never pales
When error's sword the right assails;
It flashes like a flame,
When innocence is trodden down;
It whitens not before the crown
Of laurel worn by fame.

Royal is the blood, when hearts are true;
To prove the pulsing current blue,
By name, and date, and birth,
Will not suffice when left alone;
He is the king upon the throne
Who has true moral worth.

No gilded coat of arms he needs
Whose title springs from noble deeds;
Self-poised, star-crowned and tall,
He stands, like some high tower that flings
A shadow on the petty kings,
Like the anointed Saul.

A crown may be a vacant show
A scarf of stars, a blinding glow,
Cold the embroidered zone;
A title, not a title deed,
The scepter but a broken reed,
A dunce's block the throne.

At home, in school, let youth be taught
To win nobility of thought;
Thoughts are the fruitful seeds,
Sown broadcast in our daily walk,
They bud and blossom on the stalk
Of daily life in deeds.

A CURIOUS STORY.

Why Lincoln was Assassinated—How John Wilkes Booth Avenged the Hanging of His Friend, John Y. Beal.

The following singular story, which we copy from Pomeroy's Democrat, is given for what it is worth:

Among the chosen friends of John Wilkes Booth's boyhood was a dashing, chivalrous young man named John Y. Beal, whose home was in the beautiful Shenandoah valley, not far from Winchester. Damon and Pythias were not more attached to each other than were Booth and Beal. Beal was Southern in his sympathies, and planned raids on Northern cities, and at last was captured at or near Buffalo, tried for piracy on Northern lakes, and sentenced to be hanged on Bedloe's island.

One afternoon, in the city of Washington, while Beal was under sentence of death, there alighted from a carriage two men, who walked into the room occupied by Washington McLean, of Cincinnati, who was at the time in Washington in the interest of his business. These men who called were Senator Hale, of New Hampshire, and John Wilkes Booth. Booth was anxious to save the life of Beal, his chum and confidential personal friend. He had interested Mr. Hale in his behalf.

They importuned McLean to go with them to the President, as a Democrat—as a friend of Booth—as a man who had much influence with Mr. Lincoln, and to vouch with Mr. Hale for any promises Booth might make in return for this great favor to him. After a protracted interview, McLean accompanied Hale and Booth in a carriage to the residence of John W. Forney, who was then in bed, the hour being late. Forney was awakened from his sleep and told the object of his call. His sympathies were enlisted, as he was always ready to serve his friends.

It was an hour or more past midnight when Hale, Forney, McLean and Booth were driven to the White House. The guard, at the request of Forney, admitted the carriage to the grounds. Mr. Lincoln was called from his sleep, and there, in the dead of night, he sat and listened to the prayers of Booth and the indorsements of those who came with him to ask the favor of executive clemency

This interview lasted till 4 in the morning. It was one of tears, prayers and petition. There was not a dry eye in the room as Booth knelt at the feet of Lincoln, clasped his knees with his hands, and begged him to spare the life of one man—a personal friend, who, in serving the ones he loved, had come to the door of death.

Booth told all. He told how, long before, in a fit of passion to do some bold deed, he had joined in a conspiracy to abduct the President and to hold him as a hostage for the release of certain military prisoners who were Booth's friends, and who, it was thought, were to be shot. He told of the meetings they had held at the house of Mrs. Surratt, and that all of that plan had fallen to the ground long before. He offered his services at any time and in any place or capacity, free of cost or fearless of consequences. The eminent gentlemen who were there with him joined in the request that the prayer of Booth be granted, and that Beal should be pardoned.

At last President Lincoln, with tears streaming down his face, took Booth by the hands, bade him rise and stand like a man, and gave him his promise that Beal should be pardoned. He asked the party to depart that he might gain rest for the work of the morrow, and said that the official document that they asked for should be forwarded at once to United-States Marshal Robert Murray, in New York, and through him to the officers charged with the execution of Beal.

After breakfast Lincoln informed Seward, Secretary of State, what he had done or promised to do. Seward said that it must not be; that public sentiment in the North demanded that Beal should be hung. He declared that to pardon Beal would discourage enlistments, lengthen the war, and insult the sentiment that called for blood. He chided Lincoln for making such promises without asking the advice of his Cabinet, or advising with himself, Seward, on State policy. As the argument grew contentious, Seward declared that if the conduct of the war was to be trifled with by appeals for humanity he should go out of the Cabinet and use his influence against the President, and should charge him with being in sympathy with the South. Lincoln yielded and Beal was executed. The reaction to Lincoln's nervous system was such that for days he was far from well.

The effect on Booth was terrible. He raved like a madman, and in his frenzy swore that Lincoln and Seward should both pay for the grief and agony he had been put to. From the death of Beal, Booth brooded vengeance for that which he considered a personal affront. His rage took in Seward, and he engaged Harold, Atzerodt, and others to avenge Beal's death by killing Seward, while he, Booth, wreaked human vengeance on the President.

At last came the hour. Booth killed Lincoln. His friends and the relatives or avengers of Beal tried their best to kill Seward, and when they left him stabbed, bleeding, and limp as a cloth, as he rolled over behind the bed whereon they found him, they supposed their work was completely done. Our story is told. We have given the truth of history, and told exactly why Abraham Lincoln, the humane President of the United States, was killed.

Col. Forney Denies the Story.

Col. John W. Forney contradicts the above statement, so far as it relates to him. He says:

"To my knowledge I never saw J. Wilkes Booth in my life. The only time I ever visited Mr. Lincoln to secure a pardon was in company with my old friend Washington McLean, of the Cincinnati Enquirer, some time, I think, in February of 1865, to ask the the release of another old friend, Gen. Roger A. Pryor, who was a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, New York harbor. Mr. Lincoln heard our statement, and set Gen. Pryor free on the quaint condition that he should report at my residence, on Capitol Hill, where he remained my welcome guest for several weeks, until I was authorized to return him to his friends and family in Virginia."

The Roustabout Who was Sharper Than a Barkeeper.

He walked into a Vicksburg barroom about 2 o'clock in the morning, and slily edged his way to the counter. His clothes were tattered and torn, and his head was shaven and shorn, and he looked for all the world like a plantation field hand. His face was as black as night, and his general appearance countryfied and green.

The barkeeper, a dissipated-looking fellow, with a bloated face and a long nose, resolved to play a joke on the "green 'un" to pass time; so he offered to bet the innocent-looking darkey the drinks that he couldn't pick up a pin from the floor without bending his knees. The nigger vowed that he was not given to betting, but he would try the trick to oblige the company and help while away the tedious hours. The pin was stuck in the floor, the negro bent to the task, and the barkeeper got alongside him with a twenty-four-inch board to see that he didn't cheat.

The negro stooped until his back resembled Hogarth's line of beauty; his pants became tighter and tighter, and his breath shorter and shorter. The barkeeper, with a cunning leer and a significant smile, slowly lifted the board in the air with both hands, and whirled and whirled it around to give greater force to the blow. The negro stooped lower and lower, his pants grew tighter and tighter, and the board flew faster and faster. At last, when everything was ready for the grand coup, the barkeeper took deadly aim, the board came down with a whir, and —— the negro skipped nimbly aside, and the barkeeper fell flat on his nose.

They picked him up and carried him home, applied oysters and raw meat, and when they told him that the greenhorn was a retired roustabout, and had fired the Lee in the great race, he smiled a sickly smile, and admitted that he ought to have known better.—Vicksburg Herald.

Lieut. Cameron's Explorations.

The attention of commercial adventurers is now sure to be directed to that part of Central Africa which has just been explored by the bold Englishman, Cameron. His accounts of the people and their country have given mankind new information of no little interest. As he advanced toward the west, in crossing the continent from Zanzibar and Ujiji, he followed the line of the watershed between the Zambesi and Congo rivers till he got into Congo basin. He said in his speech at the Liverpool banquet in his honor that the riches of that region are unspeakable; but he was then unable to describe the multifarious products, natural and artificial, that had fallen under his eye. He felt sure that the center of Africa would one day be the scene of civilization, productive trade, and commercial activity; that its fertility would make it one of the granaries of the world, and that its mineral wealth would make it the center of the iron manufactures when other parts of the globe have been worked out. Lieut. Cameron is not a loose-tongued man, but a thoroughly trained scientific observer and explorer, and these observations of his are not to be regarded as overdrawn in any respect. He found in the region to which we have referred a magnificent system of internal water communication, and ascertained that the Congo river could be joined with Lake Tanganyika, for purposes of navigation, by a canal thirty miles in length. In this way a vast region would at once be opened up to civilization—a region which is now known to but a few Arab traders. The people are peaceful, their towns are large, situated near each other, and to be seen every five or ten miles. The reports of Lieut. Cameron are attracting much attention in Great Britain; and there is no doubt that within a few years there will be plenty of British commercial adventurers in that heretofore unknown portion of the African continent which he has traversed.

A Cat that Will Stay in the Family.

A few days ago a cat and kitten were presented to a lady who conveyed them to the store of Mr. Edwards for the purpose of having them taken into the country. They were sent down on the train on Monday afternoon to Santa Clara, on the Southern Pacific railroad, and deposited in a residence in that town. Yesterday morning, before the train from that station had arrived in this city, the cat wandered into the house of its first owner in this city, presenting a tired and worn-out appearance. Inquiry revealed the fact that cat and kitten were nowhere to be seen about the Santa Clara house yesterday morning, and it is presumed that the cat carried the kitten a part of the distance, and left it to its fate, completing its lonely journey of forty-nine miles in the dark. The cat will remain in the family.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Preference.

"If you prefer the keg of lager or the bottle of wine to me," said Mary, "just take them to the Magistrate, and get married to them."

"What do you mean?" said John.

"Just what I say. I don't want a young man to come here evenings chewing cloves to hide his breath, and hide his habits of drinking. If you like lager more than you love me, just marry it at once, and don't divide your affections between woman and wine, or a woman and lager; love and liquor have no affinity."

"Why, Mary, how you talk!" exclaimed John.

"Yes, I mean what I say; unless you sign the pledge and keep it, you had better not come here again."

John did sign the pledge, and he kept it, and he married Mary.

Remarkable Ocean Steaming.

The recent voyage of the Pacific Mail Steamer Company's new steamer City of New York, from New York to San Francisco, was in some respects remarkable. The total distance, 13,552 miles, was performed in fifty-nine days, the actual steaming time being fifty-four days and fourteen hours. The entire passage was made on the coal shipped at New York, none having been taken on board en route.—Scientific American.

Cruelty to Pets.

Whenever I hear of some thoughtless, selfish woman neglecting a household pet, my blood fairly boils within me—particularly if that pet be a bird. "No one who has not a kind heart, thoughtful head, observant eyes, and gentle hand, has the least right to keep birds. One should weigh the matter of keeping a bird as if it were the question of adopting an orphan." If a careless person neglects a cat or a dog, it will make its wants known, and, the worst coming to the worst, go out on foraging expeditions, and appropriate whatever it finds to its own use. But the poor, neglected bird has no voice to tell its hunger; all its notes are called "singing." It cannot escape from prison to borrow, beg or steal seeds from its neighbors, and can only beat its little wings against the bars. Therefore those who enjoy keeping birds should make their care a matter of conscience. Whatever happens in a household, these little prisoners should be faithfully cared for and tended.

A DOCTOR in Omaha was engaged to attend a lady in her confinement, agreeing to charge $10. The lady gave birth to twins, and he demanded double pay. Payment being refused, he sued her, but lost the case.

AT our request Cragin & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have promised to send any of our readers gratis (on receipt of fifteen cents to pay postage) a sample of Dobbins' Electric Soap to try. Send at once.

Unlimited Remedial Resources.

People sometimes suppose that Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines represent the entire extent of his resources for curing disease. This is an error. Experience proved that while the Golden Medical Discovery, Favorite Prescription, Pleasant Purgative Pellets, Compound Extract of Smart-Weed, and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy would, if faithfully used, cure a large variety of chronic complaints, there would be here and there a case which, from its severity, or from its complication with other disorders, would resist their action. These exceptional cases required a thorough examination into their symptoms, to ascertain the exact nature and extent of the disease or diseases under which the patient was laboring, and the use of specific remedies to meet and overcome the same. This led to the establishment of the World's Dispensary, at Buffalo, N. Y., with its Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, each of whom is skilled in the treatment of chronic disorders in general and those belonging to his own special department in particular. To one is assigned diseases of the throat and lungs; to another, diseases of the kidneys and urogenital organs; to another, diseases of the digestive system; to another, diseases of the nervous system; and to another, diseases of the eye and ear. Thus the highest degree of perfection in medicine and surgery is attained. The establishment of this institution enables the Doctor to meet a long-felt want in the treatment of the more severe chronic affections. By a careful consideration of the symptoms as given in writing, he successfully treats thousands of cases at their homes. Others visit the Dispensary in person. The amplest resources for the treatment of lingering affections are thus placed at the disposal of every patient, and those on whom the proprietary medicines do not have the desired effect can procure a more thorough and efficient course by a personal application to the proprietor of the World's Dispensary.

Southern Hotel, St. Louis, Mo.

The most complete hotel in all its appointments in the West. The table supplied at all times with the best the market affords.

CHAPPED hands, face, pimples, ringworm, saltrheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and rough skin made soft and smooth, by using Juniper Tar Soap. Be careful to get only that made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, as there are many imitations made with common tar, all of which are worthless.

VEGETINE is acknowledged by all classes of people to be the best and most reliable blood-purifier in the world.

Notice to Subscribers.

Any subscriber to this paper (old or new) who will take the trouble to send his name and address, with twenty-five cents to pay for postage, mailing cylinder, etc., to the well-known publisher, Mr. C. F. Vent, 38 West Fourth street, Cincinnati, Ohio, will receive by mail, guaranteed in perfect order, a copy of Hodgman's Family Album; a full description of which may be seen in our advertising columns, or a copy may be seen at our office.

It will be observed that this Album is not in the usual BOOK form. It is in the form of an ENGRAVING, which is as sensible and unique in design as it is beautiful and artistic in execution. In order that subscribers ONLY shall reap the benefit of this offer, the publisher's proposition, as it appears in another column, should be cut out and sent with the name and address to Mr. Vent, as above.

TO ALL, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated, and the system to remain in a disordered condition, until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all who are troubled with the complaints now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish skin—to take, without delay, Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action. It at once strikes at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they feel the first indications of the malady. Families leaving home for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the liver of surrounding bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

"THE VIBRATOR"

1000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this Improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz: our improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

25cts. On the receipt of Twenty-five Cents, I will send, postage prepaid, to any patron of this paper, a copy of HODGMAN'S FAMILY ALBUM, which is not in the form of a book, but of a unique, beautiful design, printed on a single sheet of very heavy plate board of the finest quality, suitable for framing; and in size 22x28 inches. In the center is a Family Record, which is surrounded by a highly ornamental, very artistic and appropriate design, in which are spaces for 16 Photographs. The great advantage of this arrangement over the book form of album must be at once apparent. Every one knows how soon the likenesses of the loved ones arranged in a book album become defaced, and in many cases ruined, while by this plan of arranging them under a glass, and in a frame, they can be seen, but not handled, and hence will never wear out. I fix my retail price upon this Album, but will guarantee that it costs more to produce, and will give better satisfaction than any Premium, of whatever name, ever presented to the old subscribers of any paper.

The Wonders of Modern Chemistry.
Sarsaparillian and Its Associates.
Changes as Seen and Felt as They Daily Occur after Using a Few Doses of
DR. RADWAY'S
Sarsaparillian Resolvent,
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

1. Good spirits, disappearance of weakness, languor, melancholy; increase and hardness of flesh and muscles, etc.

2. Strength increases, appetite improves, relish for food, no more sour eructations or waterbrash, good digestion, calm and undisturbed sleep, awakes fresh and vigorous.

3. Disappearance of spots, blotches, pimples; the skin looks clear and healthy, the urine changes from its turbid and cloudy appearance to a clear sherry or amber color; water passes freely from the bladder through the urethra without pain or scalding, little or no sediment; no pain or weakness.

4. Marked diminution of quantity and frequency of involuntary weakening discharges (if afflicted that way), with certainty of permanent cure. Increased strength exhibited in the secreting glands, and functional harmony restored to the several organs.

5. Yellow tinge on the white of the eyes, and the swarthy, saffron appearance of the skin changed to a clear, lively and healthy color.

6. Those suffering from weak or ulcerated lungs or tubercles will realize great benefit in expectorating freely the tough phlegm or mucous from the lungs, air cells, bronchi or windpipe, throat or head; diminishing of the frequency of cough; general increase of strength throughout the system; stoppage of night sweats and pains, and feeling of weakness around the ankles, legs, shoulders, etc.; cessation of cold and chills, sense of suffocation; hard breathing and paroxysms of cough on lying down or arising in the morning. All these distressing symptoms gradually and surely disappear.

7. As day after day the SARSAPARILLIAN is taken, new signs of returning health will appear; as the blood improves in strength and purity, disease will diminish, and all foreign and impure deposits, nodes, tumors, cancers, hard lumps, etc., be resolved away and the unsound made sound and healthy; ulcers, fever sores, syphilitic sores, chronic skin diseases gradually disappear.

8. In cases where the system has been salivated, and Mercury, Quicksilver, Corrosive Sublimate, (the principal constituent in the advertised Sarsaparillas, associated in some cases with Hyd. of Potassa) have accumulated and become deposited in the bones, joints, etc., causing caries of the bones, rickets, spinal curvatures, contortions, white swellings, varicose veins, etc., the SARSAPARILLIAN will resolve away these deposits and exterminate the virus of the disease from the system.

9. If those who are taking these medicines for the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous or Syphilitic diseases, however slow may be the cure, "feel better," and find their general health improving, their flesh and weight increasing, or even keeping its own, it is a sure sign that the cure is progressing. In these diseases the patient either gets better or worse—the virus of the disease is not inactive; if not arrested and driven from the blood, it will spread and continue to undermine the constitution. As soon as the SARSAPARILLIAN makes the patient "feel better," every hour you will grow better and increase in health, strength and flesh.

The great power of this remedy is in disease that threaten death—as in Consumption of the Lungs and Tuberculous Phthisis, Scrofula, Syphiloid Diseases, Wasting, Degeneration, and Ulceration of the Kidneys, Diabetes, Stoppage of Water (instantaneous relief afforded where catheters have to be used, thus doing away with the painful operation of using these instruments), dissolving stone in the bladder, and in all cases of Inflammation of the Bladder and Kidneys, in Chronic cases of Leucorrhea and Uterine diseases.

In tumors, nodes, hard lumps and syphiloid ulcers; dropsy and venereal sore throat, ulcers, and in tubercle of the lungs; in gout, dyspepsia, rheumatism, rickets; in mercurial deposits—it is in these terrible forms of disease, where the human body has become a complete wreck, and where every hour of existence is torture, wherein this great remedy challenges the astonishment and admiration of the sick. It is in such cases, where all the pleasures of existence appear cut off from the unfortunate, and by its wonderful, almost supernatural agency, it restores the hopeless to a new life and new existence where this great remedy stands alone in its might and power.

In the ordinary skin diseases that every one is more or less troubled with, a few doses will in most cases, and a few bottles in the more aggravated forms, work a permanent cure.

Those afflicted with chronic diseases should purchase a package containing one dozen bottles. Price $10 per dozen, or $5 per half dozen bottles, or $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

PENCIL AND SISSORS.

Have you any silver yet?

Tonic for spring fever is now in order.

Eat slowly and you will never overeat.

Large feet and hands are no disgrace to a true lady

The sun is up at eight minutes past five, are you?

Why does ones Sunday boots always squeak the worst?

A goodly number of shade trees have been set out in different parts of the city this spring.

Some of the people in the western part of town are disposed to question the legality of the ordinance taking them into the corperation. The matter will be decided at an early day.—[Waterloo Press,

Elect Democrat officers and then you be dealt with fairly.

Blain has been forced into the unpleasant predicament of making a scape goat of his brother. Belknap and wife, and Blaine and brother seems to have been prosperous firms in the past, but just now they are rather infirm.

Belknap has been indicted by the grand jury for accepting bribes while in office. If he should be tried and convicted and get the striped clothes on, maybe the Republican Senate would convict him before that body, but it is hardly to be expected otherwise.

The celebrated "mule case" is still before the Congressional committee. Mr. Groom, for whom Mr. Bristow acted, swindled the government, and Bristow and his friends are endeavoring to make it appear that Bristow was not advised that his client was a rascal—which is the way Grant gets out of tight places.

The Springfield (Ill.) Register says, that Morton's defense is that he stole the public money for fear the Copperheads would do something wrong. Like a host of patriots about Springfield he was so alarmed at the wicked designs of "the disloyal" that he thought he owned everything in sight.

The Washington Chronicle says that "the detective force of this city is one of the best institutions of the kind in the country." If the statement is true, how does it happen that Belknap, Delano, Williams, Shepherd, and others equally notorious, were never arrested and punished?

Barney Williams, the celebrated comedian, died at his home in New York. The dead actor was a native of Ireland. He came to this country when but a boy and took up his residence in New York City with his parents. He was in the 52d year of his age, and leaves a wife and one daughter. In his profession he earned a fortune that will keep in ease the lady and child who bear his name.

Congressional Printer Clapp has written a letter to the investigating committee, setting forth that inasmuch as he is an officer of the Senate the House has no jurisdiction over him and he defies what he terms their assumed authority. The realities of a cell in the penitentiary may perhaps cool Mr. Clapp's assurance.

Mr. Blaine has indulged in the luxury of another explanation. There is some danger of the ambitious member from Maine protesting too much and creating in the mind of the public an impression that there is really a foundation for the charges which he labors so industriously to refute.

The Goshen Democrat says the wheat crop between Peru and Indianaoplis, on clay ground—and there is a good deal of it—is almost entirely winter killed. From Peru north it presents a very favorable prospect for a full, grand old harvest. In fact the northern tier of counties across the state, contain the best farming lands in the state, and it will not be long before they will lead all others in population and wealth.

Bloomington Courier: A saloon keeper named Barker was arrested last week charged with selling liquor without license. On Thursday night he had a hearing before Squire Coffin, and during the progress of the trial, which was going strongly against him, he asked permission to take some fresh air. This was granted him, but he forgot to come back again to hear the case through. The next day he was found in a house down the railroad and had provided himself with a young arsenal for the purpose of defending himself against capture. He was taken in however, and lodged in jail, where he remained until Monday, and then was allowed to leave town.

"The South Bend Register says that the old Ninth Indiana regiment, which was the first regiment from this State on Southern soil, and one of whose members was the first man killed in the war, from this State—that man being John Auten, of South Bend—is to have a reunion at LaPort, Indiana, in August next, the day of its reorganization as a three years, regiment. Gen. Robert H. Milroy, Gen. I. C. B. Suman, Colonels Blake Moody, LaSalle, and other old officers of the regiment, as well as large numbers of comrades, have signified their intention to be present. It will doubtless be a very enjoyable occasion. It will be the first reunion of the veterans since they stacked their arms for the last time, long after the war had closed." And it will be good for us to be there.

The Hillidaysburg (Pa.) Standard very sensibly and reasonably says: With the opening of spring generally come the tree, patent right and other agents. There being so many persons idle, we anticipate an unusual number of traveling agents. Many of these persons are honest fair-dealing men whom you can trust. But while this is the fact, there are a host of dishonest scamps perambulating the country who are ready to take the advantage of everybody they can. These fellows are adepts at becoming acquainted and in making themselves familiar with your special wants. They spare no effort to gain your confidence and respect. When this is accomplished, they are ready to offer you a great bargain in a new kind of fruit patent right, or some other device. Look out for this class of sharpers they are after your money. Don't hastily sign any purported agreements or papers, that may be presented to you. They may be all right, and they may not. If the offer is worth anything a thorough investigation as to its merits (and the character of the agents) will be hardly accorded you before closing the bargain. Don't sign the paper first as too many do. To guard against being swindled only buy of well known and reliable agents or business houses.

WHY IS IT?

Why is it that so many of the young men who should ornament and adorn the best society are to be found spending their time, money and talents, and bantering away their honor in resorts of unreputable character, and associating themselves with those whose principle characteristics to say the least, are the very reverse to virtue and intelligence?

Why is it that they absent themselves from home night after night in order to seek recreation and amusement in the saloon or billiard hall, where loathsome language and strong drinks are in order?

Why is it that they will not be induced to spend their evenings at home—where a mother or sister's influence would be exerted over them?

Why is it that they prefer rather some isolated resort when they desire to amuse themselves with some game in itself perhaps perfectly innocent and harmless, but which contracts an unhealthy tendency by its secrecy.

Why is it that so many of our best families are so numerously represented in the low dancing hall, which should ever be avoided by all loyal and respectable people?

If these questions are founded on facts, and I make it as an inqualified assertion that they are, they are surely among the most important questions that can be propounded for the serious consideration of thoughtful parents.

But, says one, how can we induce our children to stay at home? I read the bible for them every night and have prayer, but still they are dissatisfied and go elsewhere for recreation (This might be taken as an illustration of the liberal views entertained by some very good meaning people on this subject.) And they fail to see why they are dissatisfied." The answer seems to me to be clear and unmistakable. Furnish amusements at home that will be as attractive as those sought abroad, and you will, in nine cases out of ten, keep your children at home; not in a sullen mood, but happy and contented. Were all the billiard players furnished with tables in their own private rooms, our now flourishing billiard halls would soon cease to be; the young men would play much less than they now do, and the evil that now attends the game (gambling,) would end. If the parents who, now weep and lament over the fact of their daughter's frequenting the public dance, where they know they are exposed to all the damaging and corrupting influences that the virus of libertinism can produce, would interest themselves in furnishing the means of enjoying similar recreation within the circle of home influences, what a happy state of things would result, how much better, both for parent and child, and if entered into in a right spirit, would be a benefit to the one and a pleasure to the other; and the places of vice and iniquity would soon be diminished if not altogether obliterated. But while we would encourage and foster every innocent recreation as a thing to be desired, we should strenuously oppose with a firm hand, any thing that involves the principle of right, in the least degree. The good old maxim applies as forcibly to recreation as anything else, "be temperate in all things."—[Hicksville Independant.

THE ATHEIST.

The fool hath said, "There is no God!"
No God! Who lights the morning sun,
And sends him on his heavenly road,
A far and brilliant course to run?
Who, when the radiant day is done,
Hangs forth the moon's nocturnal lamp,
And bids the planets, one by one,
Steal o'er the night vales dark and damp?

No God! Who gives the evening dew?
The fanning breeze, the fostering shower?
Who warms the spring morn's budding bough,
And plants the summer's noontide flower?
Who spreads in the autumnal bower
The fruit trees' mellow stores around,
And sends the winter's icy power
To invigorate the exhausted ground?

No God! Who makes the bird to wing
Its flight like arrow through the sky,
And gives the deer the power to spring
From rock to rock triumphantly?
Who formed Behemoth, huge and high,
That at a draught the river drains,
And great Leviathan to lie,
Like floating isle, on ocean plains?

No God! Who warms the heart to heave
With thousand feelings soft and sweet,
And prompts the aspiring soul to leave
The earth we tread beneath our feet,
And soar away on pinions fleet
Beyond the scenes of mortal strife,
With fair, ethereal forms to meet,
That tells us of the after life?

No God! Who fixed the solid ground
Of pillars strong that alter not?
Who spread the curtained skies around?
Who doth the ocean bounds allot?
Who all things to perfection brought
On earth below, in heaven above?
Go ask the fool of impious thought
Who dares to say, "There is no God!"

HARRY WINSOME.

How He Won His Epaulets.

CHAPTER THE FIRST—LIFE IN THE GUN-ROOM

Harry Winsome wasn't a model midshipman like those you read of in novels. There was nothing very wonderful about him at all, in fact. On shore, when he happened to go to a party or ball, he did not try to dance all the evening with the tallest and fairest for partners; he did not bully the blue-jackets and call them duffers when in charge of a boat; and on board he never shirked his work or "fudged" the sums the naval instructor gave him to work, and he never went on the sick-list with the tooth-ache, and he didn't spend one-half of his time at the masthead because he chose to spend the other half in playing tricks on his superior officers. But if Harry had nothing very brilliant about his character—and brilliancy, mind you, is a very dangerous thing for a naval midshipman to be possessed of—he had something that was far better: he had that plodding spirit so characteristic of the Saxon race, that indomitable perseverance which is inseparable from the true Englishman's nature; and so, from the very moment Harry became a naval cadet and floated away from shore, perched upon his sea-chest, to join his ship, although not enamored of his new profession, Harry "meant to go on with it." No one likes the sea at first—there is so much to endure, so much to conquer; but these same hardships, when overcome, naturally make us love old ocean all the more.

When Harry and his sea-chest were bundled—rather unceremoniously, it must be allowed—on board the gunboat Badger the first thought that occurred to him was that he had never seen such confusion in his life; for, although the vessel was under sailing orders, and in less than twelve hours would be south of the Needles, hardly any of the stores had as yet been struck down, and the deck was a perfect litter. Harry wouldn't have known what to do if it hadn't been for his friend and servant the coxswain. That worthy sailor touched him on the shoulder and told him to go and report himself to the tall officer who was walking the quarter-deck.

"That," added the coxswain, "is the commander—not a stricter officer in the service; t'other, the shortish gray-headed gentleman's the doctor, the kindest and best hearted that ever breathed. Sheer off, master, they be looking this way."

"And so, youngster," said the commander, who, to Harry's mind, couldn't have been very much shorter than the funnel of his own ship, "you've thought proper to join at last, have you? A fine lot of French leave you've taken."

Poor Harry felt as if he had a pincushion in his throat, which he could neither get down nor up, and it was only with difficulty he restrained the tears. The commander wasn't slow to note the lad's confusion.

"So—ho!" he continued, "going to cry, hey? Brought up at a ladies' seminary, hey? Pretty sailor you'll make."

"Excuse me, sir," said the surgeon, who had entered the navy rather late in life, and, although twenty years and over had elapsed since he left old Ireland, still retained the slightest spice in the world of the brogue—"Excuse me, but I cannot be mistaken, this is a grandson of my old and esteemed friend, Gen. Strathburn. There's a drop of the raal blood in him, sir. Trust me, he'll make a sailor right enough."

Dr. Fitzgerald's face was very homely and deeply pitted with the small-pox, and as brown as an old bo's'ain's, but Harry at that moment thought he had never seen such a pleasant man in his life.

"I'm sorry I spoke," said the commander, by no means angrily, as he pushed Harry over to the surgeon. "Take him and make a sailor or loblolly boy of him, just as you please."

The surgeon laughed. "Come along, me boy," he said, "and I'll show you your mess-mates, and a rough lot you'll find them. Can you foight?"

"I think I can," said Harry modestly; "but I never tried."

"Ha! ha!" laughed the old doctor; "very good indeed. Capital!"

A long, low, dark room on one side of the steerage, lighted only by two small ports—this was the gun-room. A table occupied nearly its entire space, leaving merely room, and no more, for the cushioned lockers, which served for seats. The surgeon knocked and entered, dipping his head as he did so, to allow a purser's shoe to whistle harmlessly over it.

"Oh! come away, doctor," said a voice; "I thought it was that beggarly steward; he has allowed Johnson to drink my rum again to-day."

"Well," said the doctor, "you drink his to-morrow."

"Never get a chance, sir, or I would every day. Has that young griffin come to join?"

The speaker was a tall, lanky, raw-boned youth, who sat in a corner with both legs on the table, a position he was justified by the rules of the mess in assuming, because he had been round both Capes.

"Oh! dear, dear good old doctor!" cried a young fair-haired middy, jumping up and throwing his arms caressingly round the surgeon's neck. "I'm so glad you've come."

"What's in the wind now, young cub?" asked the doctor.

"Oh! logarithms, daddy, logarithms and 'gebra; you'll do an equation for me, won't you?"

"Not this watch, my boy," said the surgeon; "ask your new messmate here."

"Can you do log's and 'geb?" This appealingly to Harry.

"I'll try," said Harry; and down sat the two together; away went the surgeon, and in less than five minutes the youngsters were as thick as thieves. Harry promised to do all his messmate's sums for him. "For you know," that youth explained, "I'm an awfully lazy beggar; Lawson's my name—Lazy Lawson, the instructor calls me; and can't he hit hard with the ruler! my word!"

Lawson also gave him a history of all his messmates, from the sub-lieutenant—who was quiet and allowed Hicks, the lanky youth and tyrant of the mess, to do as he liked—down to the young and inoffensive purser's clerk.

Thus far, reader, perhaps you have thought my little hero green. He wasn't, however. He was one of your quiet, considering English boys, who always think before they speak, who take things in at one glance, and who, no matter how soft they look, are not to be imposed upon.

The ward-room officers soon found out Harry's good qualities, and grew very fond of him, especially the surgeon, who invited Harry to make use of his cabin every day to read or study in. Like most of his class, the doctor was a good sailor; he could, so to speak, box the compass, splice a rope, steer the ship, or navigate her; and he often gave Harry what he termed a "hitch" out of a difficulty.

Harry's life in the gun-room was rather a rough one, but he soon settled down to it; not that he followed in the footsteps of the oldsters, mind you. He treated the steward politely, but he didn't pet him one moment and shy a boot at his head the next, neither did he bully his own servant—and honest Dan Williams would have done anything for him. But Harry had to submit to be bullied a good deal himself. Hicks took his rum regularly; Harry didn't mind. Hicks "borrowed" his pens, ink, and paper; Harry had plenty. The mildest name that ever Hicks called him was 'muff;' but even that didn't hurt Harry.

Harry didn't search his Bible to find the proverbial five-pound note, but he searched it to find something far better, muff as he was; and night and morning he knelt by the side of his sea-chest, and he never felt a bit worse for it.

Harry had been at sea for three years, and every day of those three years Hicks had had his rum; but one day poor Williams was so ill that he could hardly stand erect, and Harry did not hesitate to give him the rum that day.

Crash! That was a blow, and Hicks was the giver, and poor Harry lay stunned and bleeding upon the deck.

But that same evening, on the orlop-deck, Harry took of his jacket, which Lazy Lawson held, and told Hicks to stand up like a man.

I won't describe the fight. Suffice it to say that next day Hicks had to go on the sick list, and he couldn't appear on duty for a whole week. But nobody pitied Hicks.

And Harry's life in the gun-room was more pleasant after that.

CHAPTER THE SECOND—AT LAST.

When three years had passed away—and, oh, how quickly years do fly in the navy!—Harry felt he liked the service. When five years had come and gone he positively loved it, and wouldn't have changed places with a lord on shore. All this time Harry had never once been home, for when one commission was done he had volunteered for a second in the same station; and not only he, but his dearest friend, Lazy Lawson, and his faithful servant, Dan Williams, had all effected an exchange into the corvette Vengeance, just newly out from England. Harry was soon senior midshipman on that ship, and ere very long junior sub-lieutenant.

You would hardly have known Harry Winsome now. He was no longer the bashful boy, who rode on board his first ship ontop of his sea-chest, but a tall and handsome young man—still a little quiet-looking, and with a cast of care on his countenance, but with fair irrepressible hair that curled over his well-bronzed brow, and an eye that never feared to look you in the face.

"Heigho!" said Harry to his friend and chum one Sunday morning; "I wonder if there will ever be any fighting to give a fellow a chance to win his epaulets."

"Epaulets, indeed!" replied Lawson, who was still a middy; "I only wish I could win my scales and a stripe, let alone epaulets. But I suppose I shall never be anything but Lazy Lawson. I envy you Harry. How the dickens do you manage it?"

"I just keep pegging away," said Harry.

"Mind, I'm not jealous, Harry, but somehow I envy you."

"Why don't you keep pegging away as I do?" asked Harry simply.

"Oh, hang work and grinding!" said Lawson; "I can't do it, and there's an end. Besides, there's luck, you know. The skipper never fell into the hands of the natives and gave me a chance of saving his life. And I happened to be on leave when the ship was on fire. Williams told me, though, it was quite a sight to see you, all black and grimy, scuttling the decks with the carpenter's ax. But—by gum, Harry! I'll never forget the day you jumped overboard, in half a gale of wind, after poor Joe Emmett. It was so funny; because, when I saw you come up and the broken water all round you frothy and bloody, I made sure the shark had you instead of Joe; and you only brought up one-half of poor Joe after all—that was funny. Oh! you're a lucky, lucky beggar, Harry!"

"And so would you be, Lawson, if you would only just make up your mind to keep peg——"

"Strange sail on the lee bow, sir!"—this in stentorian tones from the man at the mast-head.

It was a sight to see the bright gleam that now shone from Harry's eye and illuminated his whole face; it was a sight to see the alacrity with which, glass in hand, he shinned up the rigging; and it was a sight to see poor little Lazy Lawson stick his hands deep into his peg-top trowsers-pockets and gaze upward after him.

"Lucky—lucky beggar!" said Lawson.

Harry came down almost as quickly as he had gone up, went below, and entered the commander's cabin. Shortly afterward, the order was passed to let the men have dinner half an hour sooner; and even a novice could have told, from observing the unusually beaming faces of both men and officers, that something more than usual was in the wind. The ship was kept away a few points in the direction of the strange vessel, which in less than an hour could be seen from the deck—a large three-masted ship, under every stitch of canvas she could carry, and keeping well in toward the land.

The Vengeance rose and fell on the long smooth rollers of the Indian Ocean. Which of us has not seen or read of the beauty of this romantic sea; of its bright pellucid waters, beneath whose depths are spread gardens of marine flowers, of colors as bright as the hues of the rainbow; of the little coralline isles that dot its surface, green-fringed with waving palm-trees; of its blue skies, flecked with fleecy cloudlets; of the strange sails that, birdlike, skim over its waters; and of the peace that seems to hang forever around it? For ever? Nay, not forever—for at night, when all is quiet, you can hear the cry of the tortured slave in the dark woods that line its shores; down among the flowers lurks the dreaded shark, the scorpion dwells on the coral islands, those strange sails are often pirates, and at times the cyclone careers across its waters, and many a gallant ship and many a brave sailor lie beneath its waves.

It was the rainy season. Instead of the bright blue sky usual in these latitudes, the sky was overcast and of leaden hue, the forked lightning played incessantly on the surface of the water, while any wind there was came in sudden gusts and wild, and had hardly come till it was gone again.

The Vengeance was in chase, and every eye on board was strained watching the great three-master, still a long way ahead of them, for, although the Vengeance gained upon her in the lull, with every squall the strange ship seemed positively to fly over the waters.

When, after a short twilight, night fell, dark and lowering, the Vengeance was still a long way astern, and the chase seemed all but lost. Down in the captain's cabin a council of war was held, at which Harry was the youngest officer. Jooma, the dark-skinned Arab interpreter, was talking as he entered.

"I tell you what, sar," he was saying, excitedly, "you wrong! Dat ship not go furder south; she cross the bar to-night, land slaves to barracoon, and then clear ship for the inspection of British officers!" And Jooma bowed low, in mock ceremony, to his audience.

"Well, after all, captain," said the navigating-lieutenant, "I think old Jooma is right. He talks like a book, and we are right off the Rangoona bar even now."

"Then, by heavens!" cried the captain, "where she goes my boats can follow."

"Hurrah to that, sar!" said Jooma.

"But, mind," continued the captain, "old friend as you are, Jooma, I'll hang you if you've deceived us!"

"Jooma live a long time yet, sar," said the Arab.

It was midnight when the Vengeance ceased to steam, and cast anchor outside the Rangoona river in five fathoms of water. Midnight, and intensely dark. Five boats were called away, yet it seemed like madness to attempt to cross that dreaded bar to-night, where the rollers ran mountains high, and broke in foam on every side. "Whatever a man dares he can do," was the motto of Capt. Cameron, of H. M. S. Vengeance. Jooma's boat went first, the rest following in Indian file, and all that even Jooma had to guide him was the constant tum-tumming in the Indian village and the occasional quavering shriek of an Arab sentry. The boats are among the breakers. Jooma's light, like a guiding star, is on ahead, now—now seen, now hidden, with the rise and fall of the boat. Heavens! how those mighty waves tumble and roar, and, like giant monsters of the deep, toss their foaming manes all around them!

Only in the wake of Jooma's boat there is no broken water. Well he knows the passage.

The last boat to pass is Harry's. He is half-way through, when swiftly up behind comes a great curling wave. Harry sees the danger.

"Lie on your oars, men!" he shouts; "steady!" The last word is drowned in the roar of breaking water. The boat is caught like a cork and hurled swifter than arrow from Indian's bow full fifty yards shoreward—shoreward and into smooth water—safe, but filled to the very gunwale with water.

As silent as ghosts glided the boats up the river. Suddenly a voice which seemed to come from the clouds:

"Boat ahoy! Stand off or I'll put a shot in you!"

"Dar she is, sar, Captain!" cried Jooma exultingly.

"Now, my lads, cried Captain Cameron, "you heard the threat! That's our prize. We've only got to take her. Mr. Lawson, sheer off a few yards with your boat, and keep the blue lights burning." A broad glare of ghastly light was the almost instant reply.

"Tumble up, men!" shouted the captain.

"Hurrah!"

What spirit there is in an English cheer, even from soldier-throats. But, ah! you should hear it as it comes from the lungs of our brave blue-jackets, when eager for the fray, when every pulse is bounding, and the foe is there before them.

It surely was not men they fought with on the deck of that slave-ship. Half naked they were, dusky-skinned, and slippery, with long hair and wild eyes—men who fought with brandished spear and broadsword. They were the northern fighting Arabs, half pirates, half slavers. How fiercely they fought, how bitterly they died, and how terrible was the fight that raged under the blue uncertain light! For fully half an hour, with clash and shout and cry and moan, the battle continued, then all was still save for the groans of the wounded. Harry had fought as only young Englishmen can and always do fight, and when it was all over he dropped apparently lifeless on the deck. It was his first fight, remember—he had fainted with excitement and fatigue.

It seemed a very long night to be alone with the dead and wounded, for both sides had suffered severely. At last, however, morning broke; the sun leapt up out of the sea, red and fiery, shimmering over the waters in a curtain of crimson.

There was still the barracoon on shore to capture, and the slaves, who had all been landed, to liberate, and Capt. Cameron lost no time in setting about it. The wounded and dead were sent over the bar to the ship, and then a landing was effected on the edge of a mangrove forest, and honest Jooma found a path which conducted them straight to the Indian village. Sailors, perhaps, do not look very soldier-like on shore, but nevertheless they can do their work, as witness the Crimea. Here, however, an unexpected difficulty arose. The village was surrounded by a high wooden palisade, and as they were wondering how to get over a pattering fire of musketry was opened on them and several men dropped.

"Let us pitch each other over! here goes, I'm first!" cried Harry Winsome.

"Hurrah!" and in five minutes, reader, there wasn't one man-Jack at the wrong side of the palisade except poor Dan Williams, who happened to be last, and had nobody to pitch him over, and what do you think he did? Why, lay down and cried for vexation.

The Somali Indians and Arabs made a stout resistance, and for hours the fight was hand to hand, from one burning house to another. * * *

Back again on board the Vengeance. An awning is spread amidships, and under it hangs many a poor fellow in his hammock, and among them Harry, who was grievously wounded in the late fray. * * *

Steaming onward at full speed through the Indian ocean, Bombay was reached at last.

When Harry was able to get about a bit in a palanquin and was feeling as if he had got a new lease of life, one day Capt. Cameron came on shore with a packet of letters.

All Harry's letters were paper but one—it was his commission as lieutenant.

Harry Winsome had won his epaulets.

When Harry read it his eyes sparkled, and the old pincushion came back again, and for a moment he thought he must make a fool of himself, but he didn't.

Harry is home again, and holding his mother in his arms. Home! Oh, reader! it is worth while going abroad for a few years, if only to know the meaning of that one word, Home.

"I tell you," said Gen. Strathburn (Harry's uncle), "that, peace or war, there is no better career in the world for a boy of spirit than the brave old English navy." The General is right.—Cassell's Magazine.

The Millionaires of America.

The New York World draws some entertaining comparisons between New York and California millionaires and the methods by which their wealth has been obtained. Vanderbilt is now the sole survivor of the three New Yorkers whose fortunes ranked with the great fortunes of the world. All this great wealth was the result of hard work, sagacity and economy, steadfastly continued during a long series of years. Nor can any of the great centers of civilization—London, Paris, Berlin, or Vienna—furnish the names of three men who have, unaided, achieved such enormous fortunes in the short space of a life. The realization of such exceptional conditions for all manner of commercial and industrial enterprises here in the eastern States during the remaining years of the century cannot be hoped for again. But over the mountains, on the shores of the Pacific, where untold wealth lies dormant in the bowels of the earth, only requiring the ingenuity and labor of man to bring it forth, there is opened a field for the rapid accumulation of wealth which bids fair to furnish us with California millionaires, some of whom are already among the rich men of the world. Senator Sharon, a man yet in the prime of life, is reputed to be worth $40,000,000. His colleague, Jones, of Nevada, is estimated at $30,000,000. O'Brien, Mackay and Fair all went to California without money or friends. It is estimated that each partner of this firm is to-day in the enjoyment of an income of over $1,000,000 a year. The Big Bonanza alone is computed to contain a mass of gold and silver valued at $300,000,000, and yields at present over $2,500,000 a month. The fabulous sums which are here regularly extracted from the earth every four weeks remind one of the fairy tales of old. The Consolidated Virginia mine produces $3,000,000 a month, while it is estimated by those experts now on the ground that the total product of the "Comstock" for the present year will exceed $75,000,000. With such examples as these before us we may confidently look for the great fortunes of the future among the merchants and traders of California.

Mammoth Engine at the Centennial.

The Corliss engine at the Centennial is thus described: It weighs 800 tons; will drive eight miles of shafting; has a fly-wheel 30 feet in diameter and weighing 70 tons; is of 1,400 horse-power; has 2 walking-beams, weighing 22 tons each; 2 40-inch cylinders, a 10-feet stroke, a crank shaft 19 inches in diameter and 12 feet in length; connecting-rods 24 feet in length, and piston-rods 6¼ inches in diameter. The platform on which it rests is 55 feet in diameter and composed of polished iron plates, resting upon brick foundations that extend far down into the earth. The height from the floor to the top of the walking-beams is 39 feet. Mr. Corliss is the inventor, patentee, builder, and owner, having had it erected for the double purpose of exhibition and furnishing motive power, which will be supplied gratuitously, but only for the purpose of exhibiting machinery in operation, no machinery being allowed to run longer than is necessary for that purpose, except by permission from the chief of the bureau. Of the 8 lines of shafting (4 on each side of the transept) 7 will have a speed of 120 revolutions per minute and 1 of 240.

LIGHT ON A DARK SUBJECT.

The Truth About the Black Hills—"Tell the Boys to Stay at Home."

(From the Cleveland Herald.)

At last we have received a genuine letter from the Black Hills. Our correspondent is a Millersburg man who was sent out to the Black Hills by a company at Scranton, Pa., to ascertain the exact facts. His letter is dated at Custer City, on French creek, which he says has 332 houses built or under construction. Eight of these are frame and the remainder of hewed logs, about ten feet high and roofed with poles laid close covered with dirt about a foot deep. About 3,000 persons are on this creek, which is a valley about a quarter of a mile wide, with a small, winding stream having scarcely a perceptible current, sometimes above and sometimes under ground. The bed rock of the valley is about twenty feet beneath the surface. At the top of the soil the finest particles of gold are found, but nothing more until the bed rock is reached, and then from "color" up to one dollar, by scraping the rock. The yield is more frequently the tenth part of a cent than over. Nothing has yet been discovered that will pay the miner's board. There is a good deal of mica rock. Three sawmills have been built but no market can be found for the lumber, which is offered at twenty-five dollars per thousand for pine lumber. The logs will average twenty inches and cut two twelve-feet logs to the tree.

Hill City, on Spring creek, has 120 log or pole houses, of which about a score are finished, and the remainder abandoned after the sides were up. Only about thirty persons remain in the place, and not a dozen miners are making their board. A large amount of work was begun and abandoned. The bed rock is about thirty-two feet wide, with but little gold. Cassel, Rosewood, Deadwood and Whitewood creeks and Bear Gulch—streams running north some hundred and fifty miles—have all been thoughly prospected, and but little gold found, or diggings that will pay a miner's board.

No snow exists to interfere with mining. Timber on the hills is of a better quality than in the valleys. The hills, instead of being a regular chain of snow-capped mountains, appear like a knot or snarl of detached and twisted elevations. Some break forth and run along a valley for about a mile, when the hills close in and the water disappears. Few valleys have water on the surface.

He says there are hundreds in the hills, "hardy and stout, with willing hands to work, who are begging to work for their board. It is heart-rending to meet old and tried miners, with from five to fifteen years' experience, who have spent from six to eight months in the hills and have not made enough to buy a pair of boots to cover their feet." He believes there are good quartz leads and some few placer diggings, but to take it as a whole he thinks there will be twenty dollars spent for every dollar taken out. The result of his experience has been the disbanding of his company and a report to those who sent him that they had better stay home.

The writer gives an unfavorable report of the attitude of the Indians. He says he helped to bury two men that were killed by the Indians on the Cheyenne route. Our correspondent dined with a prospector, and two days afterward his dinner companion was shot by Indians and his wagon and harness burned. The traveler, when he goes into camp, begins by throwing up rifle-pits for defense. Five men from Lamars, Iowa, were attacked, and after two hours fight, in which they were all wounded, were compelled to leave their wagons with $3,400 worth of goods and 1,500 cartridges in the hands of the Indians. Two men sitting on their mules in Deadwood creek were shot down by Indians, and one on Casse creek. Custer's expedition is looked upon as the cause of all the trouble. Everything is very high in the hills, and the Indians threaten to cut off all further supplies and then drive out the miners.

The conclusion of the letter is brief and to the point. We commend it to those who indulge in dreams of shouldering their picks and digging out a fortune in the Blacks Hills—"Tell the boys to stay at home."

Women will be Women.

There were many spirit-stirring incidents in the session of the centennial suffrage sisters on yesterday. Nothing, for instance, could have exceeded the effect upon the audience of Miss Anthony's noble forbearance when she declared that, for her part, she would counsel no mob violence on the part of the women in the assertion of their rights; rather than that, she would willingly work and wait for justice for another hundred years. Equally effective, though possibly a trifle inconsistent, was the generous concession of the sisters to the tyrant man, when, after exhausting the resources of the feminine vocabulary of villification upon his defenseless head, they politely borrowed his hat to pass around for contributions. Miss Anthony might have used her centennial sun-bonnet for the occasion, or gathered the "stamps" in her apron; but to show that the gentle spirit of forgiveness still reigns in the bosoms of the suffragists, and that they love whom they chasten, they just seized upon the most convenient piece of masculine head-gear and permitted the tyrant to help fill it for them.—Chicago Times.

A Whole Family Drowned.

A recent dispatch from Port Jervis, N. Y., says; "At about 10:30 a. m., to-day, while Orson Boyd of Reed's Creek was fording the Delaware river at Fisher's Eddy, one of his horses stumbled and pulled his mate down with him. By this accident the wagon was overthrown, and Mr. Boyd and his entire family, consisting of Mrs. Boyd and three children, were pitched into the river and drowned. The body of Mrs. Boyd has been found, and none of the others had been recovered up to 7:30 p. m. One of the horses swam ashore, but the other was drowned. Boyd and his wife had been to Fisher's to transact some business connected with the sale of some of his property at their home, and it is supposed that they had considerable money with them."

DON'T DRINK TO-NIGHT.

I left my mother at the door,
My sister by her side,
Their clasped hands and loving looks
Forbade their doubts to hide.
I left, and met with comrades gay,
When the moon brought out her light,
And my loving mother whispered me,
Don't drink, my boy, to-night.

Long years have rolled away since then
My jetty curls are gray,
But oh! those words are with me yet
And will not pass away,
I see my mother's loving face,
With goodness, radiant light,
And hear her words ring in my ears,
Don't drink, my boy, to-night.

My mother is now resting sweet
In the graveyard on the hill;
But her kind words come back to me
And haunt my memory still;
I've often, often passed the cup,
Oh! then my heart was right,
Because I've heard the warning words—
Don't drink, my boy, to-night.

I've now passed down the road of life,
And soon my race is run;
A mother's warning listened to,
An immortal crown is won.
Oh, mothers, with your blessed smile,
Look on your boys so bright,
And say, as you alone can say—
Don't drink, my boy, to-night.

These words will prove a warning, when
In the thorny path of life,
The boy is in the tempter's wiles,
And warring in the strife,
Thy words will stop the morning cup,
And revelry at night,
By whispering back a mother's voice—
Don't drink, my boy, to-night.

Pith and Point.

A HASTY man never wants woe.

IT is said the stomachs of persons living on the sea-coast, where oysters and clams are abundant, rise and fall with the tide.

"A ROMISH lictor," said Bates, whose historical information comes by detail on the fly, "a Roman lictor! Well I s'pose she deserved it. No one but the Roman knows."

IT takes a servant twice as long to bang the stove and scuttle, while putting coal on the grate, if you are trying to talk to somebody than if you are not. He does it for revenge.

AN undertaker at Providence didn't know whether a subject was dead or in a fit. He boxed him up to settle the question, but the man kicked his way out and then boxed the undertaker.

AN auctioneer, disposing of same articles, and complaining of the lowness of the price, said: "Gentlemen, if I sell any more at that money I'll get my head in my hand." Whereupon a weaver present observed, "It'll no burden ye, my man; it's gey licht."

WE passed the window the other evening, and they were having a little family jar. She called him "an old fool," and he called her "a teakettle." "You're a teakettle," he roared, vehemently; "you'll sing pleasantly one minute and boil over the next." We didn't stay to hear more.

IT is an edifying spectacle to see a cartman calmly smoking his pipe on the top of a load of household goods, his feet quietly reposing on the finest painting, or the new clock, while the head of the family sneaks along the fence with a market basket on his arm filled with old china and the silver spoons.

THE following is an inscription on a grave stone in the old burying ground at South Dennis, Mass.:

Of seven sons whom the Lord to his father gave.
He was the third who found a watery grave;
When fifteen days had passed this circumstance occurred,
His body was found and decently interred.

POLITICS are full of tricks,
Of politics beware;
A good stout spade ne'er yet betrayed
The man who used it fair.

NO CENSURE can be too harsh for that wretched man who, being married the other day, put the wedding ring into his mouth when the service began, that he might find it at the proper moment. The moment arrived. The minister motioned for the ring. The trembling bridegroom gave an obedient start, a sudden gulp, and the ring had disappeared down his unlucky throat.

A PORTSMOUTH (N. H.,) young man, who was inconsiderate enough to "come in" after he had escorted a girl home from prayer-meeting the other Sunday evening, was obliged to stop to family prayers, which came on very soon, but, when the pious householder prayed that "the young man who, for the time being, is one of our number, may be directed toward his Father's house," he took his hat and left without ceremony.

IT was a hard-fisted son of toil who entered a dry goods store on Woodward avenue yesterday and inquired: "What's the figure on calico now?" "About seven cents," replied a clerk. "Too high—too high—she'll never stand that," mused the farmer. "We've a very large stock to select from," put in the clerk. "Yes, I suppose so, but I won't invest. My wife wanted me to get her a calico dress with a small figger on it, but that figger is altogether too large!"—Detroit Free Press.

Changed Her Mind.

Clarence Smith, of Cincinnati, had $13,000 in United States bonds and a desire to marry Mary Kenning. The young woman engaged herself to him, and to further rid himself of anxiety he gave her the bonds to care for until they should become husband and wife. A few days ago she astounded him by saying that she had changed her mind about marrying. Nor would she return his property. A lawsuit has been commenced.

NARROW-GAUGE.

Narrow-Gauge Railroads as Compared with Broad-Gauge—Interesting Figures.

[Des Moines Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

Said the Hon. J. K. Graves, the Iowa railroad king, in the Legislature, last winter: Nine-tenths of all the railroads built in Iowa the next ten years will be of the narrow-gauge. As he is a broad-gauge man, there must be some good reason for his opinion so positively expressed. Practical experience is the best of all tests in any enterprise. The narrow-gauge from this city to Ames, in Story county, thirty-eight miles, has now been in operation two years, with a success greater than anticipated. From J. B. Bausman, civil engineer, the following details are gathered as to the practical operation of the road, which will be of interest to other localities where railroads are being projected:

There has been more difficulty in relation to locomotives than any other department of the business. After various trials of different engines, the conviction is settled that cylinders should be 10 by 16 inches; driving wheels, 42 inches; weight, 12 to 16 tons,—15 tons preferred. The weight of rails should be 30 pounds per yard. Of coaches, the weight should be 7 tons; length, 35 feet; width outside, 8 feet; capacity, 40 passengers; size of wheel, 26 inches. The average speed of passenger trains is 18 miles per hour, although 25 miles has been several times made. Of freight cars, economically considered, the length should be 24 feet width, 6½ feet; weight, 5 tons; capacity 8 tons, though 22,600 lbs. has been carried without appreciable effect. Of stock cars, the length should be 22 feet; width, 7 feet; capacity, 10 steers, or 40 to 45 hogs. Six cars will carry the same number as four cars of broad-gauge.

The rolling stock of this road now consists of 4 locomotives, costing $7,800 each; 3 passenger coaches, $3,600; 24 box cars, $425 each; 10 stock and 18 flat cars. Iron required, including side-tracks for main line, 51 tons bars, 30 feet long, per mile, at a cost of $56 per ton at present rates, delivered. The rails are as good as when laid. Ties in use, 5 by 6 inches, and 6 feet long; road-bed 8 feet, to protect the ends of the ties from unequal thawing and freezing.

The total cost of this or a similar road—the grading being mostly on the surface-soil—may be fixed at $9,000 per mile, including all cost of construction and equipment, with the road ready for business.

The records of this road show that last year its traffic was $1,800 per mile; its operating expenses, 65 per cent. of that. It is estimated that the addition of $5,000 would add to the capacity of the passenger rolling stock three-fold, and to the freight four-fold; and that the whole would be sufficient for a road 50 miles long.

It is hence deducible that a road of 50 miles, with maximum grades of 50 feet to the mile, easy curves, and a traffic of $1,800 per mile, can be operated with profit to its owners.

Comparing the cost of operation and construction with that of the Chicago and Northwestern, from or to which the narrow-gauge receives or delivers about one-half its business, for the same number of miles of road, the saving, including the cost of transfer, by the narrow-gauge system, is $17,975 per year, estimating the freight business at 150 tons per day.

Ravaged by the Plague.

Once more that mysterious and awful disease, the Oriental plague, is ravaging Asiatic Turkey. It seems to have taken its start in a locality about sixty miles south of Bagdad, and has now invaded the city, and is sweeping both sides of the Tigris, fatal in 60 per cent. of the cases, and fearfully rapid in its progress.

To all therapeutic processes the plague is as scornfully superior as hydrophobia, Bright's disease, or snake-poisoning from the bite of the cobra. Once in the grasp of the disease nothing can be done for the patient save to apply cooling lotions to the loathsome carbuncles and buboes which break out all over his person, and to assist his natural strength by such tonics as are at hand. The result is with Providence alone, and it takes little short of a special dispensation to save the unhappy sufferer.

The true remedy is prevention—a strict regard of the known principles of hygiene in daily life and habitation. The great power of this against the disease is clearly visible in its complete banishment from Europe. Up to the middle of the eighteenth century Europe was almost as subject to it as Asia. Its last visit to England was in 1665, but previous to that she had a terrible invasion of it almost every thirty or forty years. Marseilles was ravaged by it in 1720, and Moscow in 1771 and '72. Its last European stronghold was in the Neapolitan dominion, where it broke out so late as 1815–16. Since then it has been unknown to the Continent. The growth of civilization, the advancement of prophylactic medical science, the drainage of swamps, and the more rigid care of the health of great cities, have destroyed the materialout of which the disease was bred.

But in the far East the fearful scourge still flourishes with unabated vigor. The alluvial and marshy grounds; the hot, moist atmosphere; the low, unventilated, and densely packed houses; the rapid decay of vegetable and animal matter; the lack of nourishing food, and the filthiness of the inhabitants, are just the conditions which favor the development of the disease, and Asia affords them in abundance.—Cincinnati Times.

The Silver Currency Question.

[Washington Cor. New York Times.]

The officers of the Treasury department are anxious to do anything possible to relieve the stringency in fractional currency in New York and other places from which a stringency has been reported. The trouble is that they are completely tied by law, which requires that no silver shall be paid out except for fractional currency. The difficulty has been that scrip has not come in so rapidly as usual for redemption, and the silver has therefore been paid out much slower than was expected. Treasurer New is of the opinion that the current is now fairly started, and that a few days will solve all the difficulties. There is no hoarding of fractional currency for speculative purposes known to exist, except in the case of two or three individual banks. The silver coins, however, are supposed to be generally retained by those who receive them as long as possible, people for the most part paying out fractional currency and offering bills to be changed rather than part with their silver coins. On the other hand, many business men or consumers that were in the habit of paying out freely fractional currency as fast as received, are now keeping it over, from day to day, as much as possible, fearing lest by some accident the next day's supply may be short. It thus happens that in some large cities, chiefly in New York and Boston, both currency and silver are largely retained from circulation. This condition of affairs, as is supposed, will not be long continued, and the indications point to a more rapid exchange of coin for currency.

Sentenced for Ninety-nine Years.

On the 16th of April, 1875, Peter Brown, a negro, pounded his wife's brains out with a club in a little hut in Hog Hollow. He carried the body on the following night to the Missouri river and sunk it, and then burned his cabin and fled. He was arrested in Junction City, Kan., and having been convicted of murder in the first degree, he was sentenced to be hanged, but the case was taken to the Court of Appeals, and that tribunal reversed the judgment. This morning the prisoner pleaded guilty of murder in the second degree, and Judge Jones sentenced him to imprisonment in the penitentiary for ninety-nine years. There is State law that enables a man who has been sentenced for life to demand and receive his discharge at the end of fifteen years' imprisonment. Hence the term of ninety-nine years was fixed.—St. Louis Republican.

Destruction of Fractional Currency.

A Washington dispatch says the Treasury department officials are led to believe that fully one-fourth of the outstanding fractional currency has been destroyed and will never be presented for redemption, and that the total amount in existence at this time is not over $30,000,000. The basis for this belief is the total amount of old issues of fractional currency which have been redeemed and replaced by newer ones. In paying out silver coin for fractional currency, the amount of these old issues which has come in is found to be very limited, justifying the conclusion that fully $10,000,000 has disappeared from circulation and will never make its appearance at the Treasury again.

The great Empire of Brazil, with a spendid map of South America, is exhaustively treated of in the American Cyclopædia, together with a special notice of the Emperor, Dom Pedro II. This great work is nearly completed, the last volume being in press. The cost of this immense undertaking is over $450,000, exclusive of paper, printing, and binding. The publishers, D. Appleton & Co., New York, supply the work in monthly or bi-monthly volumes when desired. They will supply specimen pages, on application, gratis.

A Toast.

Two Important Discoveries! The discovery of America by Columbus, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; the one opening up to mankind a new continent, the other a fountain of health, which is indispensible to the full enjoyment of life and its blessings. In response to the above sentiment come the unsolicited attestations of tens of thousands of grateful patients, who have been relieved of chronic ailments through its instrumentality. Those voices are limited to no one locality, but from every city, village, and hamlet, in our broad domain, as well as from other climes, and in the strange utterances of foreign tongues, like the confused murmur of many waters, come unfeigned and hearty commendations. It is, in combination with the Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the great depurator of the age. Under its benign action eruptions disappear, excessive waste is checked, the nerves are strengthened, and health long banished from the system, resumes her reign and re-establishes her roseate throne upon the cheek. All who have thoroughly tested its virtues in the diseases for which it is recommended unite in pronouncing it the great Medical Discovery of the age.

Pimples on the face, rough skin, chapped hands, saltrheum and all cutaneous affections cured, the skin made soft and smooth, by the use of Juniper Tar Soap. That made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, is the only kind that can be relied on, as there are many imitations, made from common tar, which are worthless.

Decidedly the best remedy that has ever been discovered for rheumatism, swollen or stiff joints, flesh wounds, sprains, bruises, cuts, and burns, is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. We use it, and always recommend it to our friends.

We should not hesitate to recommend to any friend of ours, Parsons' Purgative Pills; they are scientifically prepared, and are adapted to all the purposes of a good purgative medicine.

Vegetine has restored thousands to health who had been long and painful sufferers.

The attention of all lovers of the horse is called to the advertisement of E. C. Stone, in another column.

To all, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated, and the system to remain in a disordered condition, until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all who are troubled with the complaints now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish skin—to take, without delay, Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action. It at once strikes at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they feel the first indications of the malady. Families leaving home for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the liver of surrounding bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

Ezekiel, 47th Chapter, 12th Verse.

"By the rivers upon the banks thereof shall grow all trees for meat whose leaf shall not fade, and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." Our great Redeemer has made a provision for the cure of diseases of man and beast, yet thousands upon thousands are overtaken with sickness without suspicion that it is caused by mercury or other subtile poisons that are so freely used in many medicines and remedies of the present day.

A Walking Miracle.

Mr H. R. Stevens

Dear Sir—Though a stranger, I want to inform you what Vegetine has done for me.

Last Christmas scrofula made its appearance in my system—large running ulcers appearing on me as follows: One on each of my arms, one on my thigh, which extended to the seat, one on my head, which eat into the skull bone, one on my left leg, which became so bad that two physicians came to amputate the limb, though upon consultation concluded not to do so, as my whole body was so full of scrofula they deemed it advisable to cut the sore, which was painful beyond description, and there was a quart of matter run from this one sore.

The physicians all gave me up to die, and said they could do no more for me. Both of my legs were drawn up to my seat, and it was thought if I did get up again I would be a cripple for life.

When in this condition I saw Vegetine advertised, and commenced taking it in March, and followed on with it until I had used sixteen bottles, and this morning I am going to plow corn, a well man. All my townsmen say it is a miracle to see me round walking and working.

In conclusion, I will add, when I was enduring such great suffering from that dreadful disease, scrofula, I prayed to the Lord above to take me out of this world; but as Vegetine has restored to me the blessings of health, I desire more than ever to live, that I may be of some service to my fellow-men, and I know of no better way to aid suffering humanity than to inclose you this statement of my case, with an earnest hope that you will publish it, and it will afford me pleasure to reply to any communication which I may receive therefrom.

I am, sir, very respectfully,
WILLIAM PAYN.

REGISTERED WISHART'S PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL FOR ALL LUNG DISEASES. TRADE MARK.

"NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY."

This Cordial is a CERTAIN CURE for Coughs, Colds, Inflammation of the Lungs, Sore Throat and Breast, Bronchitis, and if taken in time, will arrest that fatal disease Consumption. The basis of this medicine is a preparation of Tar obtained by a peculiar process from the sap of the Pine Tree, the medicinal properties of which are well known. With this powerful element are thoroughly incorporated several other vegetable ingredients, each of which possesses soothing and healing attributes, thus making it the most POTENT ANTAGONIST to all diseases of the pulmonary organs that has yet been introduced.

DR. L. Q. C. WISHART'S PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL is not a new remedy that has never been heard of before, but an OLD, RELIABLE, AND WELL-TRIED medicine that has been in daily use by families and intelligent physicians for the last sixteen years, and is spoken of in the highest terms by all who have used it, as thousands of UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIALS prove.

If you suffer from any disease for which this Cordial is recommended, we unhesitatingly say: "TRY IT, WE KNOW IT WILL DO YOU GOOD." A single bottle will demonstrate its valuable qualities.

that leak are costly property. You cannot afford them. The damage to your housed crops which results from one storm is often more than the cost of putting your Barn Roof in order. The yearly decay of agricultural machinery and implements, arising from leaky roofs on outhouses, would more than pay the cost of roofing every shed, crib and storehouse on your farm. Your stock suffer from the drippings of your stable roof and the necessity of their lying in wet stalls. These evils affect property, but when your house roof leaks it is worse yet; then comfort departs, and you have a garret full of pails and pans to catch the steady streams; there are wet ceilings and falling plaster; there is spoiled furniture, damp bedding and rheumatism; there is the anxious wife, wearied with running up-stairs to guard against new leaks; it is decay, and ruin, and property wasted. You cannot afford it. Our Slate Roofing Paint will end your difficulties and make your roofs water-tight. For new roofs, our Rubber Roofing Felt, covered with Slate Roofing Paint, will give satisfaction to any one. For full information in regard to Roofing and House Paints generally, send for our 100-page Book, which is free to all who write at once, and mention this newspaper. Address N. Y. "THE VIBRATOR"

1000 SOLD LAST SEASON WITHOUT ONE FAILURE OR REJECTION

This is the famous Threshing machine that has "swept the field" and created such a revolution in the trade, by its MATCHLESS GRAIN-SAVING AND TIME-SAVING principles.

THE NICHOLS, SHEPARD & CO.
"VIBRATOR"

THE ENORMOUS WASTAGE of grain, so inevitable with other styles of Threshers, can be SAVED by this Improved Machine, sufficient, on every job, to more than pay all expenses of threshing.

FLAX, TIMOTHY, MILLET, HUNGARIAN and like seeds are threshed, separated, cleaned and saved as easily and perfectly as Wheat, Oats, Rye or Barley.

AN EXTRA PRICE is usually paid for grain and seeds cleaned by this machine, for extra cleanliness.

IN THE WET GRAIN of 1875, these were substantially the ONLY MACHINES that could run with profit or economy, doing fast, thorough and perfect work, when others utterly failed.

ALL GRAIN, TIME and MONEY wasting complications, such as "Endless Aprons," "Raddles," "Beaters," "Pickers," etc., are entirely dispensed with; less than one-half the usual Gears, Belts, Boxes, and Journals; easier managed; more durable; light running; no costly repairs; no dust; no "litterings" to clean up; not troubled by adverse winds, rain or storms.

FARMERS and GRAIN RAISERS who are posted in the large saving made by it will not employ inferior and wasteful machines, but will insist on this improved Thresher doing their work.

FOUR SIZES made for 6, 8, 10 and 12 Horse Powers. Also a specialty of SEPARATORS, designed and made EXPRESSLY FOR STEAM POWER.

TWO STYLES OF HORSE POWERS, viz: our Improved "Triple Gear," and our "Spur Speed" (Woodbury Style), both "Mounted" on four wheels.

IF INTERESTED in Threshing or Grain Raising, apply to our nearest Dealer, or write to us for Illustrated Circular (sent free), giving full particulars of Sizes, Styles, Prices, Terms, etc.

AGENTS WANTED

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than 1,000 of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., and Wm. Beatley, M. D., writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:

Ferguson Station, Logan Co., Ky., June 6, 1872.

Dr. J. Ball & Co., Oculists:

Gentlemen: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too skeptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and indorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye Cups.

I am, respectfully, J. A. L. BOYER.

William Beatley, M. D., Salvisa, Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

Rev. S. B. Falkinsburg, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your name be enshrined in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

Horace B. Durant, M. D., says: "I sold and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small, catchpenny affair, but a superb, number one, tip-top business, promises, as far as I can see, to be life-long."

Mayor E. C. Ellis wrote us, November 15th, 1869: "I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

Hon. Horace Greeley, late Editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. Ball, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. Merrick writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am 71 years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

Adolph Biornberg, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. Ball & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss.

June 5th, '73, personally appeared Adolph Biornberg, made oath to the foregoing certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

WM. STEVENS, J. P.

Lawrence City, Mass., June 9th, 1873.

We, the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Biornberg for years, believe him to be an honest, moral man, trustworthy, and in truth and veracity unspotted. His character is without reproach.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Particulars of the Opening.

THE GREAT WORLD'S FAIR!

Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand People

WASHINGTON, May 13, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—The President and Cabinet, both Houses of Congress, Gen. Sherman and myself went down last Tuesday to Philadelphia, to be present the next morning at the opening of the great World's Fair. We may be justly proud of ourselves as a nation, for what we have done at the Exposition. Energy and a steady endurance have fought the good fight, and surmounted every obstacle, and the people may rejoice. It had rained through the day and night before, and the morning broke, somber and ominous, on still dripping flags and damp pavements and muddy streets, but even the elements threatening until the last moment, became gloriously benign and radiant; two hundred thousand people met under the dappled dome of the May-day sky, and with prayer, grand orchestral music, and still grander choral song, brief and fiting official formalities, and the closing jubilation of bells, cannon, instruments, and voices, the International Exhibition of 1876 was opened. It was a superb, a wonderful success. No such spectable has ever before been witnessed in this country—probably none grander in all the essentials of expressive show anywherein the world, since the triumphs of the Cæsars came to an end. Thus auspiciously begins the commemoration of the Centennial year.

THE MORNING.

Never were the aspects of the day so earnestly scanned. The great crowds of last night, as they gathered in the corridors of hotels, under awnings, and in the abundant places of refreshment near the grounds, talked of little else than the weather. It rained dismally, and the wind almost took on the rawness of a north-east storm. But at the Transcontinental (which was filled to their utmost capacity,) I met Probabilities, just arrived from Washington.

To my daring question: "What will be the weather to-morrow?" he answered in the calmest tone: "Possibly cloudy —certainly no rain."

The early morn was overcast, and the blithe music of the chimes floated far over the land in the damp air. But the veil slowly lifted; the wind came out of the west, and specks of clear blue began to brighten and broaden. By 8 o'clock the transformation was complete; the leaden canopy of the past two days receded into a soft pearlgray background of air, against which the sun-touched banners sparkled like tongues of flame There was no longer a doubt of the day People were already arriving from all quarters of the compass; in fact they seemed to spring up out of the ground in every variety of ready-made costume Every street car was bursting with its load; country vehicles decorated wagons and private carriages thronged Belmont-ave. Governors of States, officers of the army and navy, foreign and native exhibitors, happy guests with tickets and contented guests with silver half-dollars in their pockets, gentlemen, scholars, bummers, and adventurers jostled each other in whatever direction one looked. Every locality suddenly grew populous, and though every one knew, that the gates would not open until 9 o'clock, yet at early morn the tide of humanity found itself moving in that direction, and every body seemed to be there early, so as to avoid the crowd.

Invited guests were admitted at a special gate at any time, and being among the favored ones I passed in without that jam attendant upon those who had to wait for the grand admission The opening ceremonies were to take place north of the main building, in front of the Art Gallery. This point was early sought after, and by the time the exercise commenced, a sea of humanity occupied the ground for a half a mile in each direction. I was singularly fortunate in getting an admirable position, much better than Senators, Congressmen, and other great digitaries had below me, for I was at the window above where the large organ is situated in the north side of the Main Building, and had a full view of the picturesque scene stretched out like a grand panorama before me. As the hour approached for the opening the crowd grew into an army. Distinguished guests came one after another, most of them unnoticed, except when they wore uniforms, which only happened in the case of foreign diplomatists and officers of the army. Chief Justice Waite quickly strolled into his place, unknown and unhonored. When the noble form of Senator Conkling made its appearance, arm in arm with Senator Frelinghuysen a few New Yorkers cheered him. But the Senator came rather early, and the New Yorkers were not in force. But when the Mayor came, accompanied by General MacMahon, he received a hearty cheer, which broke into prolonged and continuous applause when brilliant little Phil. Sheridan, in full uniform, sprang up the steps. This had hardly died away when Mr. Blaine was seen with a lady on his arm. Some of the ex-Speaker's Philadelphia friends proposed in a loud voice three cheers for Blaine, which were heartily given. The truth is there was a disposition to cheer every one, but the crowd were at a loss to know which stars among them all were the shining planets. The gray head of Frederick Douglas was seen in the mob remonstrating with a policeman and it is feared he might have gone out with the crushed and fainting if Senator Conkling had not seen him, and, vouching for his identity, enabled him to pass the line. A moment later and the venerable form of His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, with the Empress on his arm followed by the Brazilian Embassy, was seen coming through the crowd. The people, as if by an instinct, recognized His Majesty, and cheer after cheer arose As he reached the upper step he turned and bowed to the gathering, who cheered again and again.

THE ARRIVAL AT THE GROUNDS.

If the Emperor was punctual we cannot say as much for the President. What with the delays on the route, arising from a slow military movement and other causes, it was ten minutes past eleven before the well-known form of the President was seen on the platform. Certainly the President might have decided the third term question promptly enough if he could have taken the voice of the people, as expressed by this shouting multitude, as an index of his strength. For some minutes the cheering prolonged and enthusiastic as the President stood calm, immovable, bowing to the right and the left, in a shy, modest, half frightened way, in marked contrast with the affable, cordial and easy manner of the Emperor. The scene which awaited him was a pageant worthy of an Emperor. There was the magnificent art gallery behind the Pennsylvania Memorall Hall, the background of the scene. In front was the main building, a vassi, graceful, noble edifice. To the right were the towers of the Machinery Hall, the Agricultural Hall and the hundred edifices beyond and around, which represent the taste and splendor States and nationalities. There was the beautiful Horticultural Hall, the gem of the fair. In front of the President's stand, distant several hundred feet, was the music stand, with a chorus of a thousand voices, Theodore Thomas leading. On the left was a raised dais, where thousands of the ladies were grouped, a mass of color and beauty. On the right was the beautiful Schuylkill River, and, as far as the eye could reach, the woods and ravines and green, flowery banks of the stream, rich in their spring attire, with the spires of the distant Philadelphia in the far horizon, and now and then the echo of a pealing bell to tell how the great heart of the city was throbbing with the joy of the hour. The oak trees which now rustle to the noise of the multitude and the music are the trees under which Washington and his friends were wont to sit during the anxious summer evenings, thinking, we well imagine, of one task imposed upon them, and never dreaming, we can well believe, of the glorious day which we were all celebrating, and of the mighty Centennial to our national life which the world had brought into the very lawns of these ancient homes. So far as the mere panoramic effects such a scene could be considered, it was what has rarely, if ever been seen in these United States. The crowd was probably the largest ever gathered on this continent at one time. I have to accept the figures that are given me as the exact numbers; but it is no extravagance to say that when Gen. Grant advanced to the edge of the platform to declare the exibition open, he looked upon 200,000 souls.

There was a pause after the President took his seat. Around him, in addition his Cabinet, were the chiefs of the Exhibition, John Welsh, the chairman of the Financial Board, upon whose shoulders rested the financial burden of this vast work, his fine face flushed with joy looking happy to-day as he says what he saw and thought of the cares and trials of the years work. There was General Goshorn, the Director General, as calm as the spring, a steady, well-poised, man no doubt who was never in a hurry in his life. There was the genial General Hawley, the official chief of the commission, as busy as a bee, his eye on every point of the ceremony, and directing all with millitary precision. As the President sat down Thomas raised his baton and we had Wagner's march. Gen. Hawley then arose and begged the crowd to keep as quiet as possible while Bishop Simpson invoked God's blessing upon the day and the event.

The prayer, long as it was, was heard in silence. Then Gen. Hawley twirled a white handkerchief as a signal to Theodore Thomas, who at once raise his wand and we heard the opening strains of Whittier's beautiful hymn, sung by eight hundred voices, the words of which are as follows:

THE HYMN.

Our fathers' God! from out whose hand
The centuries fall like grains of sand
We meet to-day united, free,
And loyal to our land and Thee,
To thank Thee for the era done,
And trust Thee for the opening one.

Here, where of old, by Thy design,
The fathers spake that word of thine,
Whose echo is the glad refrain
Of rended bolt and falling chain,
To grace our festal time, from all,
The zones of earth our guests we call,

Be with us while the new world greets
The old world, thronging all its streets,
Unveiling all the triumphs won
By art or toil beneath the sun;
And unto common good ordain
This rivalship of hand and brain.

Of make Thou us, through centuries long
In peace secure, in justice strong;
Around our gift of freedom draw,
The safeguards of Thy righteous law;
And, cast in some diviner mould,
Let the new cycle shame the old.

Then followed the Centennial Cantata, Mr. Whiting, of Boston, singing the bass solo. It seemed impossible for one voice to be heard by that immense throng, but all listened except those away on the outskirts, and when he had finished, cheer after cheer went up until he was forced to sing an encore when he retired amid re-newed applause from the "Messiah," was the last musical work performed. The chorus, orchestra and the great organ within the Main Hall joined in this immortal pæan, and the scene was indescribable. The air was filled with the grandest of musical measures, the vast crowd swayed beneath their influence, and the long, glittering array of international dignitaries passed down in procession while the "Hallelujah" chorus was sung. Then there was a touch of an electric wire placed on the conductor's stand, and artillery thundered forth from the adjoining hills, bells rang in every direction and steam whistles vied with each other for a half hour in deafening every ear present. The World's Fair was opened, and all that music—the noblest of arts—could do toward making the inauguration a success was accomplished. Then the exhausted conductor left the stand, Whitney packed up his bass solo, Buck went back to the organ and the chorus and orchestra folded their scores and cased their instruments and stole silently away.

THE HALLELUJAH CHORUS.

President Welsh, of the Board of Finances, presented the building to the Centennial Commission and Gen. Hawley presented them in turn to the President of the United States, who formerly declared them open. At six o'clock in the morning Mr. F. Widdows, the chime professor at the Metropolitan Church, Washington, rang in the Centennial. He has a chime of 18 bells, the largest weighing 3,000 pounds and the smallest 150.—He commenced with the "Star Spangled Banner," then rang salutes by striking all the bells at once, and followed the national anthems of the various nations of the earth.—From about nine o'clock the steady marching and massing of soldiery, the music of bands in the distance and directly at hand reminded one of the grand reviews of war time. The immense crowd in front of Memorial Hall, the jostling thousands moving in every direction, the picturesque surrounding scenery, magnificent buildings, all lent an enchantment to the scene that baffles description. The hills and housetops outside the enclosure were filled with thousands of curious people, who seemed deeply interested in the movements of the soldiery and citizens. At twelve o'clock there was a signal, as previously understood, to unfurl the flags of Machinery Hall and the government building. They all flew to the breeze at once showing the ensigns of all nations. It was fortune, too, that just then there was a stiff breeze, giving full vent to the effort at the display of bunting. About one o'clock the President and party moved from the main building to Machinery Hall. The crowd had been kept out of the latter building until after the procession filed in. There were probable a thousand people waiting around the Corliss engine, to witness the ceremony of the starting of the steam by the President This is the largest in the place It is a manufacturing engine of 1,400 horse power—an immense thing—capable of running up to 2,500 horse power, and doing the work of the largest engine in the world. The other ten engines in the place bring the steam capacity of the engines in Machinery Hall up to about 5,000 horse power.

The first to mount the engine's platform was Gov. Libbey, of Rhode Island with his numerous staff. Then followed Gov. Beadle, of New Jersey, and staff Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, and staff and Gov. Rice of Massachusetts, and staff; Mayor Wickham, of New York; George W. Childs of Philadelphia Erastus Brooks, Postmaster Fairman, Congressman Charles M. Adams of New York and a number of other citizens. Soon the President arrived escorting Her Majesty the Empress of Brazil, followed by the Emperor Dom Pedro escorting Mrs. Grant. Then followed Gen. Hawley, The Director General; Mr Welsh and others of the Commission. Then came Chief Justice Waite. Secretary Fish, Mrs. Fish, the Spanish Minister and his wife. The crowd had grown so large and dense as possible within the immense hall 1,402 feet long and 300 wide, when the order "Down in front," cleared the steps to the handles of the engine, and revealed on the platform President Grant, with his hand on one and the Brazilian Emperor holding the other. Mr. Corliss instructed them both how to manage the handles. Dom Pedro was told to start his first. This he did, and waited as if it was a mere matter of form, with no consequences. The President then turned his side and in a second the steam began to ooze and hiss. Than came the movement of the awful thing itself, an automatic and regular climbing up and down of many tons of iron and steel to accomplish a mechanical purpose. By this time the ladies had been seated (some very few ladies, by the way—say a dozen—but the most respected in the United States) and the President and Dom Pedro stood there, hardly knowing what to do or say. The revolution of the immense machine caused a vibration of the immediate vicinity and while the crowd cheered and became so enthusiastic that handkerchiefs waved and strong men were moved to tears of joy, although they had stood two hours waiting. But your correspondent happened to stand alongside the very few that hardly dare look up to see what was going on. All was convinced except upon the engine stand where the distinguished guests were. There was tremor among the ladies and the President and Dom Pedro was even disturbed to know what was going on in the movement of the machine that they had started. None of them however, curious enough to look up where the noise was; until a lady of the party, with the positive curiosity of her sex, boldly took a survey of the field, and then the whole party satisfied themselves that it was only a big engine going through its usual revolutions. The crowd still cheering and making the hall resound with various exclamations, was followed by the tinkling of a thousand bells and the clinking and thudding and hammering of thirteen acres of vast machinery, that created an excitement only kept down in the distinguished party by the pleasant faces of the multitude. Soon confidence was restored where there was a disposition to be frightened, and the hall and the big engine and the little engines, and all the clattering of shuttles and plumppings of frightfully strong machinery, were soon forgotten in the examination of the grand or the beautiful things they produced.

At twenty-five minutes after two, the President, having completed the formal duties attendant upon the opening entered his charge near Machinery Hall and was driven to his apartments in the city.

WONDER WORKS.

There is something wonderful about the completion of this machinery in the time, and the fact that it is so near ready now. For instance:—One year and twenty-six days ago the immense Corliss engine was iron ore, at the bottom of some mine in Pennsylvania. Now it is perfect and in position, tested and found fully competent to perform its task

Of the fourteen acres of space the machinery buildings covers, the exhibitors have occupied thirteen. All the space is allotted. There are eight thousand machines in position.

But you have not spaced and I have not time to give you all the particulars of this immense affair. I want to say a word to those who intend visiting the Centennial; as I made it a point to give as much information as possible in this particular.

I am under special obligations to Mr. Campbell, the Secretary, who, by the way, is from the Hoosier State, and I am well satisfied is one of the best representatives the State could have in a position so honorable and important. The COURIER was the only paper from Indiana represented at the opening, so far as the list stood at 9 o'clock in the morning.

INFORMATION FOR VISITORS.

I want to make a few suggestions for the benefit of those who intend visiting the Centennial. No one need have any fear as to food or lodgings. The city is amply prepared to accommodate all with perhaps the 4th of July as an exception The crowd with this exception will never be as large as on the day of the opening and a party of ten, the evening before, found good beds in one hotel. Good meals can be obtained anywhere, at fair prices, except on the ground. It will be very handy to have full lunch baskets within the enclosure.

As the grounds are about three miles from the principal part of the city, the matter of transportation from one point to the other is an important one. You can't walk, and street cars are generally crowded to suffocation. A party of four of us paid a hack to take us out, and that was simply extortion. I found by starting about seven in the morning, and by walking or street car reaching Reading depot, I could reach the ground at an expense of 15 cents including street car fare, and with less crowding than other ways. The only drawback to this arrangement was, that the gates do not open until nine o'clock, and you get there an hour in advance. I think the people, however, will demand the gates to be open at eight, and I am surprised at the judgment of the managers, in not adopting that hour at the start, but they claim they have not time to prepare the buildings for exhibition from the litter made the day before. No tickets are sold. Go well supplied with half dollars, either in silver or in paper. Two quarters will not do, neither will one dollar do for two. It must be a half dollar for each person. As you go in your body comes against the spoke of a wheel which you push around to get past, and that counts one, presenting another spoke for the next person to turn so the pieces of money in the box must tally with the number of persons registered by the wheel.

No fears need be entertained of any great crowd or jam, because the grounds are so large, about 420 acres, and the buildings so immense, that the great crowd of Wednesday was emptied into them, with but very little jostling. There is still considerable work to do, and he who visits it in the last days see the most Go with the intention of staying several days, if you want to see anything. There are large hotel accommodations near the grounds and by stopping there, you will avoid the expense of going to and from the city. Hotel rates run from $2 to $4 per day. And now if you want to see one of the grandest exibitions ever given on the Continent go and if you can afford it take your wife and children, as all can enjoy it.

What does "faber" mean? Send Billy after a Webster, for heavens sake.

It is not often we hear a joyous shout from the Radical organs and orators now. But whenever a Radical scoundrel slips through the meshes of the law or runs away to a foreign country they raise their voices in unison and sing: "Ah! you didn't catch him, did you.

In another place we have a lengthy letter from Mr. Mays, giving a full account of the Centennial opening. The letter will be read with interest by our patrons as it is finely written and gives good information to those who anticipate attending the great World's Fair.

I have 20 or 25 bushels of assorted peachblow potatoes, large fair potatoes. One bushel are worth more for eating than any two I see at the provision stores. If you want good potatoes for eating you will know where to find them, and you can have them at 25c per bushel.

WM. MALLORY.

The other day two boys while going down Main street, met an organ grinder with a little girl about 9 years. One of the boys said to the other, "Oh Jim! is'nt that a big one!" Jim stopped, looked at the girl about a minutes, then at his companion, and said, "You darned fool, that ain't a monkey, that's a girl." That boy happened to think his mother wanted some wood, and started down an alley on the full jump for home 1776 Centennial 1876.

Tomorrow (Friday night) will be a grand time for our citizens to enjoy themselves. The enterprising ladies and gentlemen of the Presbyterian church have gone to considerable expense to get up a "Centennial tea party" having procured all the different wardrobes suitable for the occasion. Geo. Washington will be there, Thos. Jefferson Payne and a host of others. You may think we're fooling and to satisfy yourselves that we're not, go to Ensley's Hall to-morrow night, give them 10c at the door, and you will come away satisfied.

The band boys have got together again and intend to "hang-out." Last Monday evening they played splendidly and attracted the attention of many people. Their room for practice is at the popular Hat store, of Wm. Lessig, presided over by that good looking fellow, Frank Culbertson.

A young boy who had been fishing in Cedar Creek all day was slowly wending his way through the city last evening when he was heard to complain: "If I was a horse, now, I'd be rubbed down and well fed; but I'm a boy and I've got to go home, milk the cows, bring in the wood, tote water and rock the baby for an hour and a half."

After an earnest discussion, in which both sides were fairly presented, it was finally decided by the Centennial commission to open the grounds to the public on Sundays, but to close all buildings, including the restaurants. Practically, it is now stated, liquor will be sold on the grounds on week days. If the matter is taken to the courts, a decision cannot probably be had till after the close of the Exposition.

Four years ago, when my name was announced as a anadidate for county recorder subject to the decision of the democratic convention, the story was started, thoughtlessly, I think, "that I wished the position, that I might substitute one of my sons." I then published a denial in the Courier. But this report has again been started and as there is quite an effort being made to give it currency, I now feel called upon to denounce it, as a base fabrication, which has had its only origin in the imagination of an overanxions competitor, and if my friends should favor me with the nomination, and election, I expect to perform the duties myself.

ANDREW BAXTER, SR.

The first pic-nic or basket meeting. It was more than eighteen hundred years ago. It was in the land of Judea, in a desert place, and a great multitude of people were there, and the disciples said to their Master, "send the people away that they might go and by themselves bread." But he said, "give ye them to eat," but said the deciples "we have but five loaves and two small fishes, what are they among so many." He commanded, and the people sat down upon the green grass buy hundreds and by fifties. Jesus took the loaves and fishes, looked up to heaven, blessed and break, gave to the disciples and the disciples to the multitude, and they did all eat and were filled The number of them were about five thousand. They gathered up of the fragments twelve baskets full.

The other day old man Smithers was sitting on the railing of the grave-yard bridge, watching some boys that were washing a couple of goats. One of the goats (named Billy) was a great enemy of Smithers. As quick as he saw the old man, he broke for the bridge. Smithers, was directing the boys how to manage the other goat, unconscious of the scene behind him. Billy would get off about ten feet from him, make a dash forward, then stop, and go back to take a longer run. The third time he struck him right under the coat-tail. Smithers turned a double sommersault in the air, and then struck on the broad of the back in the water. When he got out the goat made another charge on him, but Smithers beat a hasty retreat for home; vowing vengence on the goat for assault and battery, and on the boys for learning him bad tricks.

TO THE DELINQUENT
OF DeKalb County.

Be it known that the Delinquent List from the Tax Duplicate of 1875 is now in my hands for collection, and will pass into the hands of my Deputy, T. J. Saxton [who will collect the entire county]

On Saturday the 10, day of June '76

Until the taxes may be settled at the Treasure's office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added. Afterwards there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment be made to the Collector or in person, or at the Treasure's office.

There will be further charges in case of collection by the sale of Goods and Chattles, and the legal fees for posting notices. Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the deputy's hands.

In compliance with the late law of the State of Indiana, the Deputy Collectors will be compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists. The new law further provides that the Deputies as well as the Treasurer have the power at all times to levy upon personal property wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattle tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township, and again exposed to sale.

Deputies will be responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collected by law. The new law compels Treasures to collect the tax of Delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax.

Now let me kindly urge each Delinquent Tax payer to avail himself of this timely notice, and call and settle his tax account before the 10th day of June 1876 as the Treasure's are bound under the new law to show no favors to any one

Very Respectfully your obedient Servant

NICHOLAS ENSLEY.

May 9, '76 Treasurer, DeKalb Co. Ind.

CENTENIALTIES.

—The grounds are now thronged with visitors every day.

—The tour of the Centennial buildings will be eighty-four miles long.

—The committee on temperance has decided to allow the sale of liquor on the grounds.

—Twelve hundred special police officers will keep the peace at the Centennial.

—Congress adjourned from the 9th to the 12th, to attend the opening of the Centennial.

—Germany and Spain are badly behind in arranging the articles in their departments.

—It is claimed that the Swedish display of iron will be the finest from any foreign country.

—Norway begins to assume shape, its principal collection being beadwork and glassware.

—One hundred and fifty cars of Centennial goods were received and unloaded daily during the week ending, April 29th.

—Ohio and Michigan Free Masons have resolved not to visit the Centennial Exhibition, unless railroad fares are further reduced.

—It is estimated that as many as 25,000 Europeans will attend the Exposition, during the season; 10,000 are expected from England.

—A knife is being made by the Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, cutlery company for the Centennial. It will be nine feet long, and upon it will be a picture of William Penn.

—The 13 gates will all be closed at 6 P. M. Admission 50 cents and you must have the even change. A dollar will not buy two tickets, nor will two quarters be received for one.

—In the Agricultural Department 594 exhibits were in position at 3 o'clock May 3d, with others continually arriving. The Japanese section of this department is progressing rapidly.

—The Japanese dwelling now going up, attracts curious crowds daily who alternately admire and ridicule the methods of carpentry and masonry employed by the painstaking Orientals.

—Three thousand bushels of popcorn have been provided by the man who purchased the exclusive right of selling the same, which he estimates will make fifteen thousands bushels when popped.

—Sweden presents a most exraordinary display of porcelain ware. One of its finest pieces is a fire-place 12 feet in hight, most delicately wrought and colored from the great manufactory of Rorstrand, near Stolkholm.

—The Philadelphia Bible society have by a special fund contributed by a few friends, erected a pavilion on the grounds from which to offer for sale and distribution the word of God, in all the languages of the people who may be here.

—The question of opening the exhibition on Sunday, was referred to a committee. It was believed that while the exhibition would not probably be opened at first Sunday, it would have to be opened on Sunday later in the season.

—Patrons of Husbandry Camp at Elm Station will accommodate 5,000 persons of that order at $1,50 per day; three miles, by Pennsylvania railroad from Exhibition Grounds Fare, round trip, 15 cents Address V. E. Pioleti Elm Station Pennsylvania.

—The City of Brotherly Love is preparing to entertain 800,000 strangers-to take them in and "gouge" them. Hotel rates have been largely advanced. From $8 to $10 per day are asked for very ordinary accomodations—and other things in proportion.

Up to the 20th, ult. the total receipts from seventy-two counties of Indiana, on behalf of the State exhibit at the Centennial aggregated only $9,656,4:, and the executive Committee of the State Finance Committee have issued a stirring appeal for remittances.

—The Reading railroad has completed its arrangements for Centennial travel, and is prepared to transport to and from the Exhibition 80,000 people daily. One huuderd new passenger cars-first class in every respect are nearly completed.

—Of the Buildings, Horticultural Hall is in the best condition at present. It seems as if this would be the only portion of the Exhibition ready on the opening day. The exception if any, will be the United States Government building. Work on the others progressing slowly.

—"Old Abe," the famous Wisconsin war eagle who accompanied the Eighth Regiment during the war for the Union, has gone to the Centennial Exposition in charge of Johnny Hill, his bearer during the war, and who was shot through the body and left for dead on the field at Corinth.

—The space in the main hall allotted to Turkey is still unoccupied. The Turkish commissioners are on hand with about thirty cases of goods but they are doing nothing on account of a lack of money. The Home Government is too busy with war and too reduced in resources, to supply the necessary funds.

—The women's department at the Centennial will be the most interesting and beautiful part of the display. The variety and elegance of the articles forwarded are inconceivable. The women of the United States, will also be represented in such departments of labor as photography wood cutting engraving, sewing embroidering, weaving and the like.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THOMAS W. PIPER, now under sentence of death at Boston, has confessed not only that he murdered Mabel Young in the belfry of the Warren Avenue Baptist church, for which murder he is to be hung on May 26, but also that he murdered Bridget Landergan, at Dorchester, on the night of December 5, 1873, and that he was the principal in the mysterious and nearly fatal assault on Mary Tyner, in Oxford street, Boston, nearly two years ago.

MISS ANNA E. DICKINSON, the well-known lecturer, made her debut on the dramatic stage at the Globe theater, in Boston, a few nights ago, in the presence of a vast audience. She was called before the curtain at the end of every act, and four times after the play was over, retiring each time overburdened with flowers. Miss Dickinson's first appearance, says a correspondent, was disappointing in that it lacked originality, soul, and real instinct. Nevertheless, it showed that, with the energy and determination which she possesses to such a remarkable degree, she may become a successful actress.

OHIO, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Tennessee, Iowa, Missouri, New York, Pennsylvania, California, Arkansas, West Virginia, Mississippi, and Kansas all have State buildings at the Centennial. Of these Kansas has the largest and New York probably the handsomest.

PESACH N. RUBENSTEIN, who was under sentence of death for the murder of Sara Alexander, last winter, died last week, in his cell in the Brooklyn (N. Y.) jail.

A RAID was made the other day upon illicit whisky dealers in New York city. Six prominent dealers in the crooked were arrested and held to bail in sums varying from $10,000 to $20,000.

Two hundred and ninety thousand people attended the Philadelphia Exhibition on the opening day.

THE WEST.

GEN. CROOK'S second expedition will soon be on the war path. It will be divided into three detachments. The main one, under Gen. Crook in person, will leave the Union Pacific railroad; the second part, under Gen. John Gibbon, will move down the Yellowstone from Fort Ellis, Montana, and the third part will proceed from Fort Abraham Lincoln up the Yellowstone. A vigorous and active campaign will be prosecuted all summer.

A MINER has arrived at Cheyenne with $1,000 worth of gold dust from the Black Hills.... Advices from Fort Laramie report that Gwin's ox-train and May & Parrott's mule-train, of Cheyenne, were attacked by Indians in Red canon, while on route to the Black Hills. They made a strong defense, keeping up a running fight for some time, corraling their trains and fighting from behind the wagons and teams, and finally, reaching a good point for natural defense, they stopped there and succeeded in driving the Indians off. One man was wounded badly and fourteen horses were killed.

The new Common Council of Chicago has canvassed the vote cast for Mayor at the recent election in that city, and formerly declared the Hon. Thomas Hoyne to be the duly elected Mayor. H. D. Colvin, who wanted to hold on the office for another year, in defiance of the popular will, is thus forced to step down and out....A dispatch from San Francisco announces the arrival in that city of a gentleman having in his possession the head of Chavez, the banhit, for which the Governor of California has offered a reward of $5,000....A small force of effective Indian-fighters, about a hundred in all, left Fort Laramie last week to scour the hills and defiles along the roads to the Black Hills, which have been infested by hostile savages lately. The scenes of the recent horrible butcheries will receive the first attention of the party, and it is expected that this scout will render the road to the mines comparatively safe for a while.

GEN. CROOK left Omaha a few days ago for Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, to become acquainted personally with the feeling of the Indians there, which will, in a measure, determine his action during the coming campaign. If he finds the Sioux favorably disposed and can trust them, he will organize a body of 300 scouts; if not his intention is to raise them from the Snakes or Crows. Gen. Crook's expedition will start on its campaign against the red-skins about the 1st of June.

GEORGE VON HOLLEN, City Collector of Chicago, has defaulted to the amount of about $100,000, and fled to Europe....The trials of Lee and Dame, accused of the Mountain Meadow massacre, in Utah, have been postponed to August, and the prisoners admitted to bail.

SOUTH.

Two stages, carrying United States mail and fourteen passengers, were recently robbed near Seguin, Texas, by three highwaymen. The passengers were relieved of all their money, but were allowed to retain their watches and jewelry.

GENERAL.

G. S. ORTH, late United States Minister to Austria, and Republican candidate for Governor of Indiana, has arrived home.

IN the Methodist General Conference at Baltimore, last week, Dr. Lanahan presented a memorial charging that the Western Publishing House at Cincinnati is insolvent, and that the statement of the condition of its finances, published by authority, is not a fair showing, in that it omits from the assets over $500,000, most of which is in real estate. The doctor also charged that the records of the last General Conference were not complete; that an important document had been omitted, and that the object of this omission was to cover some unlawful act on the part of the managers of the New York Book Concern.

WASHINGTON.

THE President has given directions to have the original Declaration of Independence removed to Philadelphia and placed in Independence Hall in a safe made for the purpose. The document is nearly illegible, not because the ink has faded, but because much of it was removed on damp transfer paper by a heavy roller, and then retransferred to a copper-plate covered with a thin coating of white wax, through which it was traced on the copper and then engraved. The engraving is a perfec fac simile of the original as it was.

DOM PEDRO spent several days in Washington last week....When the original Resumption act was passed, last year, the silver coin in the treasury amounted to about $2,500,000. This sum the Secretary proposes now to pay out on ordinary warrants for current expenditures, it being held independent of the accumulation through sales of bonds for the purpose of resumption under the law. The disbursement of this coin is expected to largely relieve the inconvenience experienced from scarcity of small change.... The scientists engaged to make a report upon the sizing used in the fractional currency are not agreed. The majority of them, however, are of the opinion that the sizing is of no practical value....A Washington dispatch says: "Speaker Kerr's physicians have expressed the opinion that he ought, in justice to himself, to throw off entirely the labors of official life for the rest of this session, and his friends are looking for his resignation at an early day."

A TORNADO of unusual violence swept over the city of Chicago one day last week. Several houses were blown down, many unroofed, and church spires, chimneys, etc., without number were demolished. The freight depot of the Michigan Southern railroad was shattered by the wind, and several persons injured, one fatally. The total damage to property in the city is estimated at several hundred thousand dollars. The same cyclone swept over a considerable stretch of country, playing havoc with farm-houses, fences, etc.

A PROPOSITION has been submitted to Congress to have storm-flags carried by locomotives of passenger trains, and announced by three whistles every few miles. It is assumed that this warning would enable the farmers to save hay and grain which otherwise would be injured by the rain to the amount of several millions of dollars a year....It is said Mr. Kerr has decided to resign the Speakership of the House if he shall not improve in health within the next two or three weeks.

POLITICAL.

GEORGIA'S representation in the National Republican Convention is mixed in more ways than one. There are thirteen white and nine colored delegates, estimated to stand: Blaine, 8; Bristow, 6; Morton, 5; Conkling, 3....The Texas Legislature has elected Gov. Richard B. Coke, United States Senator, to succeed Hamilton.

A DISPATCH from Augusta, Ga., says: "The Democratic delegation is uncommitted, and will vote for any good man that can be elected The Republican delegation stands thirteen for Morton, seven for Blaine and Bristow, two for Conkling."

THE President has nominated Seth W. Clark, of New York, to be Recorder of the General Land Office; John Nazro, Collector of Customs at Milwaukee, Wis.; A. F. Rickard, Naval Officer at New Orleans, and William T. Jackson, Pension Agent at St. Joseph, Mo.... There was a meeting of the Liberal Republican National committee in New York a few days ago, at which it was resolved to call a national convention, to be held at Philadelphia on the 27th of July, but the call will be revoked if either of the old party conventions shall nominate a candidate acceptable to the Liberals. Their favorites among the Republican aspirants are said to be Bristow, Hayes and Washburne; and on the Democratic side, Tilden, Thurman and Bayard.

THE Republican State convention of Michigan met at Grand Rapids on the 10th inst., and chose delegates to the Cincinnati convention. Henry P. Baldwin, Wm. A. Howard, D. L. Tiles and J. A. Woodman are the delegates at large. No preference was expressed for a Presidential candidate....The Greenbackers of Wisconsin held a State convention at Madison last week, and elected delegates to the National convention to meet at Indianapolis. A resolution was adopted indorsing Judge David Davis as a suitable candidate for President.

THE Republicans of West Virginia, in session at Clarksburg last week, expressed a preference for Blaine for President, but left the delegates uninstructed.

FOREIGN.

FOUR of the crew of the ship Lennie, who were charged with mutiny and murder, have been found guilty at London, and sentenced to be hanged....Severe earthquake shocks were recently felt throughout South Australia and New Zealand.

THE Ruski Mir states that 30,000 Turks recently assembled at Merv and determined to solicit Afghan help for a holy war against the Czar of Russia....A serious riot took place in Salonica, European Turkey, last week, between Christians and Mohammedans. The trouble arose from the fact that a Christian girl wished to become a Mohammedan. She was forcibly taken from her Turkish friends by Greeks. During the riot the French and German Consuls were assassinated by Mohammedans. Further disturbances are apprehended. At last accounts the authorities had taken no measures to protect life and property, and no arrests had been made.

THERE has been fresh rioting at Barbadoes, and several more lives have been lost....An order has been issued by the Spanish Government permitting officers who joined Don Carlos to resume service in the royal army, with the rank that they held at the time. Twelve hundred officers have been thus restored....A letter from Port au Prince says, "The ex-President of Hayti, Dominique, who was taken on board the French man-of-war Sane, died from his wounds on board of that steamer."

SHIPS of war have been sent to the scene of the recent religious riot in European Turkey by all the great powers, and there is an evident disposition that the affair shall not be belittled through any lack of attention. The offer of reparation made to Germany has been accepted, with the condition that it shall be immediately fulfilled....Ninety members of the British House of Commons have signed a memorial asking for the release of the Fenian convicts....A Paris dispatch to the London Times says reports of the outrage at Salonica represent that the French and German Consuls were dragged from the street into the mosque, and there sabered. The Governor arrived at the mosque after the murders had been completed.

THE Prince of Wales has arrived home from his long voyage to India....A London paper says dispatches from the English Minister at Constantinople intimate the probability of an immediate outbreak of Moslem fury throughout Turkey, and that Christians even in Constantinople cannot consider themselves safe.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SATURDAY, May 6.—Senate.—Consideration of the impeachment articles was resumed. Conkling submitted the following questions to the managers: First. If two persons guilty of crime in office cease to be officers at the same time, one by removal and the other by resignation, is one, rather than the other, subject to impeachment afterward? If a distinction between the two cases exists, please state it. Second. Is a private citizen liable to impeachment under the Constitution of the United States, if his having previously held an office distinguishes him in this respect from other citizens? Please trace the distinction to a clause of the Constitution, or to the principle in which it is found. Mitchell, of Oregon, submitted the following question: The Constitution provides that when the President of the United States is tried on impeachment the Chief-justice shall preside. Suppose that a late President was impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, committed while he was President, and presented at the bar of the Senate for trial, who would preside, the Chief-justice or the President of the Senate? Owing to the continued indisposition of Manager Knott, he was granted leave to conclude his arguments on Monday. Manager Jenks then read a long argument in favor of the jurisdiction of the Senate, when a recess was taken. Upon reassembling Manager Hoar began his argument, maintaining the jurisdiction of the Senate.

House.—The Postoffice Appropriation bill was debated....Hewitt introduced a bill in relation to savings banks....The oath of office was administered to J. V. LeMoyne as representative from the Third Congressional district of Illinois.

MONDAY, May 8.—Senate.—The impeachment trial was resumed. Arguments on the question of jurisdiction were completed, and the counsel were informed that they need not appear again until notified. The court then adjourned until Monday, May 15....Sargent submitted a resolution setting forth the injury resulting from Chinese immigration, and instructing the Committee on Commerce to consider the subject and report a bill placing adequate restrictions upon the immigration of Chinese to this country. Agreed to.

House.—The bill to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty was passed—116 to 101....Hale offered a resolution directing the several committees of the House, charged with investigation, to conduct such investigations with open doors while any testimony is being taken. Rejected—69 to 91....An investigation into the management of the New York Custom-house was ordered.... Wells (Miss.) asked leave to offer a resolution directing the Secretary of War to issue 500,000 rations to sufferers from the late overflow in the State of Mississippi. Objected to....Randall offered a bill providing for the coinage of $25,000,000 additional silver coin to that already authorized....Conger was appointed on the Select Committee on Federal Offices in Louisiana, in place of Crapo, excused.

TUESDAY, May 9.—Both houses met, but, without transacting any business, adjourned over till Friday, the 12th. Nearly all the members left immediately, on a special train, for Philadelphia.

THE BIG SHOW.

Opening of the Great Centennial Exposition—Philadelphia Overflowing with Patriotic Enthusiasm.

PHILADELPHIA, May 10.

The morning was very rainy, with the prospect of a steady rainy day.

The city was crowded with visitors, trains last evening and this morning having come from all directions with crowds of passengers from abroad.

The streets were all ablaze with flags, and, notwithstanding the rain, the patriotic decorations were numerous and fine.

The Exposition opening was the only topic of conversation, and from early morning throngs of people, on foot, in street-cars, carriages, wagons, and steam-cars, were pouring toward the Centennial grounds, in anticipation of the opening of the gates.

This morning early, the military parade, comprising portions of the First division, took place, passing through the principal streets of the city. The display was fine, though not nearly so large as it would have been had the weather been favorable.

At 10:15 a. m., the sky cleared, and the weather was beautiful—sunny, but not too warm.

The grounds were in very good condition, in spite of the hard and long-continued rains, though there was much mud.

The gates were opened at a little after 8 o'clock. It is roughly estimated that 50,000 people were on the grounds at 10 o'clock.

A spacious platform had been erected at the side of the memorial hall, north of the center of the main building, and seats were arranged on the platform for official and other invited guests. At the right of the center were seats for the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, and further to the right were the seats of United States Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, the Governors of the various States, with their staffs, the Governor of this State and State officers, the Supreme court and the Legislature, the representatives of the army and navy, the Smithsonian Institute, United States judges, officers of the Executive office and the Bureaus, and the members of the Woman's Centennial Committee. On the left of the center were the seats of the United States Supreme court, and further to the left the seats for members of the Diplomatic Corps and members of the Centennial Commission, the Board of Finance, the Woman's Executive Committee, Foreign Commissioners, the Mayor, Council, and other officials of Philadelphia, Mayors of other cities, State Centennial Boards, the Board of Award, judges of yacht and rifle clubs, and along the front of the platform were seats for members of the press.

The orchestra, of 150 pieces and a chorus of 1,000 voices, under the direction of Theodore Thomas and Dudley Buck, were stationed directly in front of the platform, at the side of the main building.

The space in front of the platform, except that needed for passage-ways, was open to the public until after the inauguration.

The main building, machinery hall, and memorial hall were reserved for invited guests, and closed to the public. All guests passed through the main building, entering at the east and west end, or at the south side, and thence through the center door, at the north side, to the platform. The space about the platform, and for such distance that to see and hear were impossible, was crowded densely with people waiting for the opening exercises.

At 11 o'clock, the President and his party, accompanied by the officials previously designated, proceeded to the platform, the President having been escorted to the grounds by Gov. Hartranft, with a division of the military. The platform was at once crowded, and all the surrounding space and all the available points of elevation in the neighborhood were already occupied by crowds of visitors. The orchestra, while the seats were being secured, played national airs, and, after the party on the platform had arranged themselves, played Wagner's Centennial March, which was received with applause.

Bishop Simpson, of the Methodist Episcopal church, then offered up the opening prayer.

After the singing of Whittier's Centennial Hymn, the presentation of the buildings took place, the Board of Finance, with appropriate speeches and ceremonials, turned over the buildings to the Commission.

Next followed the singing of Sidney Lanier's cantata by a full chorus, accompanied by the orchestra. The applause of the vast crowd was enthusiastic, and portions of the music were enchored, especially the bass solo sung by Whitney, of Boston.

Joseph R. Hawley, the President of the Centennial Commission, made the presentation of the Exhibition to the President of the United States.

When President Grant rose to respond, he was greeted with enthusiastic and long-continued applause, followed by three cheers and a tiger, led by Gen. Hawley.

President Grant then read his response, as follows:

> It has been thought appropriate upon this Centennial occasion to bring together in Philadelphia, for popular inspection, specimens of our attainments in the industrial and fine arts, and in literature, science and philosophy, as well as in the great businesses of agriculture and of commerce, that we may more thoroughly appreciate the excellences and deficiences of our achievements, and also give an emphatic expression to our earnest desire to cultivate the friendship of our fellow-members of this great family of nations. The enlightened agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing people of the world have been invited to send hither corresponding specimens of their skill, to exhibit on equal terms, in friendly competition with our own. To this invitation they have generously responded, and for so doing we render them our hearty thanks. The beauty and utility of the competitions will this day be submitted to your inspection by the managers of this Exhibition. We are glad to know that a view of the specimens of the skill of all nations will afford to you unalloyed pleasure, as well as yield to you a valuable practical knowledge of the remarkable results of the wonderful skill existing in enlightened communities.
>
> One hundred years ago our country was new, and but partially settled. Our necessities have compelled us to chiefly expend every means and time in felling forests, subduing prairies, and building dwellings, factories, ships, docks, warehouses, roads, canals, machinery, etc., etc. Most of our schools, churches, libraries and asylums have been established within 100 years. Burdened by these great primal works of necessity which could not be delayed, we yet have done what this Exhibition will show in the direction of rivaling older and more advanced nations in law, medicine, and theology, in science, literature, philosophy and the fine arts. While proud of what we have done, we regret that we have not done more. Our achievements have been great enough, however, to make it easy for our people to acknowledge superior merit, wherever found.
>
> And now, fellow-citizens, I hope a careful examination of what is about to be exhibited will not only inspire you with a profound respect for the skill and taste of our friends from other nations, but also satisfy you with the attainments made by our people during the past 100 years. I invoke your generous co-operation with the worthy Commissioners to secure a brilliant success to this International Exhibition, and to make the stay of our foreign visitors, to whom we extend a hearty welcome, both profitable and pleasant to them. I declare the International Exhibition now open.

So great was the confusion in the crowd, and so low the tone of voice in which the speech was read, that people a few yards away could not hear what was uttered.

The close of the President's brief address was followed by the raising of the flag on the main building, the signal that the Exhibition was open.

Salutes were fired, bells commenced ringing, and the chorus began singing Hallelujah! The chimes commenced to ring various airs and the President and invited guests, amid cheers from the crowd, began a procession through the main building and machinery hall.

Two Orphans' Adventures.

On Saturday last conductor Ben Cole discovered, crouched under one of the seats in a smoking car, a boy and a girl. "Mister, is this the road to Haven?" said the boy, as he crawled out, and the girl said, "Mister, please don't put us off; our folks live there, and we ain't got any father or mother, and here's a letter," at the same time drawing from her faded calico apron a crumpled piece of paper and handing it to Mr. Cole. After looking at it a long time, for it was badly written, badly spelled and blurred, he made out this:

> "All good people: These children ain't got no father or mother. They died here in February, and I've been tending to 'em. They ain't got no folks here, and their folks live in Haven, Connecut. Is'e a poor nigger woman, and can't keep 'em no longer. Is'e got myself to support, and theyse a going back to their folks. They is good children, and don't do 'em no harm. JANE MAUPIN."

Mr. Cole sat down by the boy, who was about thirteen years of age, and bright. He learned that in the spring John Howell with his wife and two children left New Haven, Conn., for the West, and arrived at Pueblo, but that these both died, and during their sickness the old negro, Jane Maupin, was the only attendant at their bedside, and when the children were thrown out upon the world, orphans, friendless, and penniless, she cared for them as she would for her own children. But having learned from the father that they were from New Haven, and that they had an uncle there by the name of Martin Howell, she conceived the idea that they ought to go back, and she thought that the letter she wrote and gave them would be a passport to all the world. They started three weeks ago, taking the A. T. and S. F. train for Atchison, and a conductor had put them off near Pueblo.

But they had started for Haven, and they resolved that they would go. By "stealing rides," now in a freight car, now under the seats in the smoking car, and now in the caboose among the piles of trunks and packages, and begging their food, they reached Topeka, fifty miles from Atchison. They wandered around Topeka all day, and at night they hid themselves in a flat car laden with building stone. In the gray dawn they reached this city, begged a breakfast and dinner, and at 2 o'clock hid themselves under the seat in the Missouri Pacific car, where they were found by Mr. Cole.

Mr. Cole took the children to Kansas City, the end of his "run," cared for them there, telegraphed to Martin Howell at New Haven, Conn., and received an answer to send the children in care of the conductor to New Haven, and to draw upon him for the expenses of the trip. They are on their way.—Atchison (Kan.) Patriot.

"Oh! Shoot that Hat!"—A Remark that Caused Three Lawsuits.

Some time ago Mrs. Thomas I. Wilcox and her sister, Miss Cochran, were out promenading, when they met Mrs. Frances A. Douglas. The head of Mrs. Douglas was decked with a love of a bonnet, or more properly speaking a hat. The hat being rather conspicuous, by reason of its decorations, attracted the eye of Mrs. Wilcox and her sister, one of whom exclaimed, "Oh, shoot that hat!" Mrs. Douglas became indignant, and the result was she had the other two ladies arrested for insulting her. They were taken before a magistrate and bound over to keep the peace. Mrs. Wilcox then had Mrs. Douglas arrested on the charge of perjury, but at the hearing Mrs. Douglas was acquitted. Mrs. Douglas then brought suit against Mrs. Wilcox for false arrest, malicious prosecution, laying damages at $20,000. The trial in the Court of Common Pleas ended yesterday with a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $450. Two of the jurors, it was learned, were in favor of awarding $1,500, while several of them went as low as $100. Mrs. Douglas is a lady of very prepossessing appearance, and was dressed with much taste.—Baltimore Gazette.

A Live Yankee Abroad.

Believing that the cities of Lima and Callao, Peru, will grow toward each other, Harry Meigs has bought up all the land between them, and between the river Rimac, on the north, and the macadmized road on the south, amounting to nearly 4,000 acres. Through the center of this tract, and extending in a straight line from one city to another—a distance of six miles—he has laid out and donated to the public a boulevard 270 feet wide, divided into seven parts, each one separated from the other by row of blue gum trees.

NEW YORK rejoices in a lady patent right lawyer who is said to have a knowledge of and skill in her business that many of her masculine brethren of the profession heartily envy.

A GENTLEMAN near Palatka, Fla., has an orange grove of 6,000 bearing trees, which last year yielded $80,000 worth of oranges.

PASSING EVENTS.

GOV. TILDEN, of New York, has appointed a woman to be Commissioner of the State Board of Charities, salary $4,000 a year. The lady who has won this remunerative office is Josephine Shaw Lowell, a sister-in-law of George William Curtis.

JUDGE HOAR says he would jump out of a two-story window to make Blaine President, or out of a three-story window to make Bristow President. The Worcester Press suggests making it "Bristow and Blaine," so as to have the Judge jump out of a five-story window.

THE London Lancet fears that Western Europe will be visited by that terrible scourge—the plague—in its old virulent, loathsome form. During the last two years the disease has appeared now and again in the villages on the lower Euphrates, and it has since broken out at Hillah and Bagdad.

THE railroad and telegraph have fairly started upon their missions of service in the vast Empire of China. Fifteen miles of railroad are projected to unite Shanghai with Wasung, five of which have been completed, while the magic wires for telegraphic communication are keeping apace alongside. There has been some resistance to this innovation, but this has been overcome, even so staid a journal as the ancient Pekin Gazette referring to and favorably recognizing the twin projects.

THE Communists of France are being pardoned, exiles are returning, old political enemies are becoming reconciled, and an era of forgiveness seems to have taken possession of the entire French nation. This spirit was shown to a marked degree at a public meeting held in Lyons a few days since, when reference to a general amnesty was loudly applauded, and at a similar convention in Paris, when the warm advocacy of the subject by Louis Blanc and Victor Hugo was also received with loud demonstrations of approval.

AN English fleet has been ordered to assemble for the purpose of accepting the invitation of the King of Dahomey, who lately advised the Commodore to come to his capital and receive pay in powder and bullets for some indignity inflicted upon a British subject. A month will be allowed the black potentate in which to reconsider his insolence. If satisfaction is not given within that time, it is probable there will not be enough of the king's capital left when the English get through with it to construct a hen-roost.

THE new silver cion are so eagerly sought and tightly held by our people that there is already a dearth of small change. The demand exceeds the supply, and the coins are at a premium of two and a half per cent. This is owing in part to the hoarding of the new silver pieces as souvenirs. People show their appreciation of them by locking them up, and doubtless many keep them as souvenirs of the centennial year. This very eagerness is defeating the purpose of the measure and increasing the difficulty the issue was intended to remedy.

IT is stated in the Oregon papers that the graves of Capt. Jack and his Modoc companions, who left the country rather suddenly one day for the Indian hunting-grounds with halters round their necks, caved in recently, and resulted in the surprising discovery that neither the lamented Capt. Jack nor his companions, Shack Nasty Jim and the rest, were there at all. There were the holes in the ground and some wooden boxes, but Capt. Jack and Shack Nasty Jim had risen up and gone, and are now, like John Brown's soul, on their travels.

IN one respect—and that of a selfish kind—the American people may look with utter complacency on the growing prospect of fierce war in Eastern Europe. The great grain districts of Hungary and Russia, which compete so closely with America in supplying Europe with breadstuffs, are all so near the probable field of active hostilities that agriculture must necessarily be impeded, and a large share of the usual heavy crops fail. In that event the deficiency will have to be made up from this country, and our surplus corn and wheat will find a ready market at improved prices.

THE London Saturday Review has started a project for a novel society to be organized for the purpose of stocking uninhabited islands with pigs and rabbits, so that shipwrecked sailors who happen to reach them may find an abundance of food awaiting them. It also suggests that huts should be built and bailers deposited on them, just as similar conveniences are placed in the high Alps. The suggestion is a very humane and practical one, considering the numerous exigencies which are constantly arising in cases of shipwreck, and the actual cases of starvation that have occurred during the past year.

THE complications arising from the Herzegovinian insurrection grow thicker and more embarrassing almost daily. The movements of the pawns on the board, however, begin to lose interest in comparison with the operations of the larger pieces. The forthcoming meeting of the three great powers—Austria, Germany, and Russia—by their representatives at Berlin overshadow the petty fights between the Turks and the insurgents. As it is probable that the Emperor of Austria and the Czar of Russia will meet the Emperor of Germany in person, the conference evidently means business, and that business will not be so much the settlement of the trouble between Turkey and Herzegovina as the partition of the spoils. It is already intimated that the formation of Bosnia and Herzegovina into a vassal State, to be under the protection of Austria, will be discussed at this visit. Protection of this sort would be the protection a chicken has in the talons of a hawk. It means in reality the Austrianizing of these provinces, and that in turn means the Germanizing of Northern Austria. Meanwhile, England, having its clutches on Egypt, is reported to be contented with anything that the other powers may do.

AMPLE precautions have been taken to protect the Centennial buildings from fire. An effectively organized and thoroughly drilled fire brigade is on duty at all times of the day and night, and the number of steam fire engines, hose trucks and ladders, ready for service at all times, is sufficient for all possible exigencies. Beside these, there are almost innumerable fire plugs, and a large number of approved extinguishers.

A Young Woman Proposes.

A timid young man was visiting a beautiful young woman on one of our streets the other evening, when after a pause she said, looking at him closely: "Now, I want to propose to you—" "You are very kind," said this diffident young man, between gasps and blushes, "but I am not worthy of such happiness—and, in fact, none of our family are marrying people—besides my income is limited—my 'differences' are on the wrong side—I have to meet Mr. Smith, and I'm afraid I'll be late." Then, without waiting to put on his overcoat, he tried to make exit through the door of a cupboard. "Why," said the young woman, lifting her eyebrows in surprise, "I wanted you to accompany me to a friend's on Main street." "Oh, in that case," answered the swain, "if your head's level and the boot is on the other foot, I shall only be too happy; but I was afraid—that is, almost dared to hope—in fact I am subject to these seizures;" and he sat down on the coal scuttle, and said it was a very cold day—hadn't seen such weather since the Fourth of July.—Titusville Herald.

Trouble with Silver.

The St. Louis Republican mentions some of the troubles that will follow the new money: "When a man walks much the inside of his legs will be chafed raw. When less than a dollar is to go by mail it will have to be converted first into postage stamps. When you run for a street car money will fly out of your pockets at every jump. When you tell your wife that you have no money she will say that you lie, for she heard it jingle. It will be difficult to pay a man a quarter by mistake for a half. When you are in a hurry the storekeeper will have to weigh the coin in his hand and sound it twenty-five times on the counter before he can determine whether it is good. The baby will swallow a dime a day. A boy with a quarter will lose it in a crack in two minutes, from which no amount of coaxing with forks and chips can recover it. Sleepy men will put buttons and lozenges into contribution boxes as of yore."

Sailors' Rights.

The "sailors' friend," Mr. Plimsoll, of the British House of Commons, continues his labors for the seamen without abatement. He is now appealing to the influence of the pulpit in their behalf, having prepared and sent the following circular to the clergy of all denominations in Great Britain:

"I entreat assistance in getting redress for sailors' wrongs. My amendments provide survey of doubtful ships, carefully verified load line, no deck-loading, and survey of grain cargoes. Will you send up petition in support, and write letter to each of your members? Or, at least, do the last."

So universal an appeal cannot fail to advance the cause which is occupying the mind and heart of Mr. Plimsoll.

Sharp Logic.

"John," inquired a dominie of a hopeful pupil, "what is a nailer?"

"A man who makes nails," replied hopeful, quite readily.

"Very good. Now what is a tailor?"

"One who makes tails," was the equally quick reply.

"O, you blockhead!" said the dominie, biting his lips; "a man who makes tails! did you ever!"

"To be sure," quoth hopeful; "if the tailor didn't put tails to the coats he made, they would all be jackets."

"Eh!—ah!—well!—to be sure! I didn't think of that."

Collapse of Cotton Mills.

A Springfield (Mass.) dispatch says the heaviest mill failure that Western Massachusetts has yet seen is that of Harvey, Arnold & Co., of the North Adams print-works, shutting up their mills, that of Gallup, Houghton & Smith, and E. H. Arnold & Co., at North Adams; the Williamstown Manufacturing Company at Williamstown, the North Pownal Manufacturing Company at Pownal, Vt., and the Arnoldsville mill at South Adams, a total of six mills, with aggregate liabilities probably over $1,000,000, and assets, mostly unsalable property, amounting to $1,500,000.

A GENTLEMAN in New York advertised recently for board in the country. He received seventy-six answers by mail.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

To My Maples.

Your time has come, my tall and straight-limbed maples,
Whose boles the wrathful winds have bleached not bent;
We've done, at last, with frosts and snows as staples,
Or haled them for a while to banishment.

This is your hour; ye shall no more be flouted
With leafless fingers by the vaunting spruce,
Whose verdant arms old winter's legions routed,
While all your blazoned banners drifted loose.

Already have its growing shields grown dusky,
While emerald tints are deepening in the brake;
And odors, resinous no more, but musky,
Steal from the beds where the young violets wake.

I mark your slender twigs against the azure
Grow bossy with the rounding of their germs,
And soon soft leaves will veil each fine embrasure,
And crown your ample brows with diadems.

For every blast that through the spruce went crooning,
A gentle breeze your tender breasts shall stir;
Your grateful shade shall woo the lover's nooning,
When he will read sweet parables to her—

So sweet the mid-day silence shall be golden
Of thrush and oriole, in the morn that sing;
Less dear their notes than those, both new and olden,
Which love's young ecstacies to young hearts bring.

And so, my maples, tall and verdure-crested,
Ye shall fling back the floutings of the spruce,
Til the bright minstrels in your bosoms nested
With happy even-songs to strife give truce.

I love you all, O trees, that round my garden
Stand sentries 'twixt me and the common air;
Nor less the spruce than maple count I warden,
To shut without the ill, within the fair.

Grand winter trees that draw your fringy curtain
To shield my cottage idols from the snow,
I sing in strains nor grudging nor uncertain
Your somber vigilance while tempests blow.

And if I praise you, maples, in my rhyming,
And brush the spruce's light reproach away,
I bid you heed how gifts depend on timing,
And trees, like all our treasures, have their day.

Around the Farm.

Between hay and grass is a hard time for cattle. Corn is cheap and is well invested in good cattle.

As there is a surplus of horses in this country, a writer recommends that arrangements be made to furnish the French meat market with fat horses.

Mr. C. Thompson, in the Rural World, states that the hog product of Missouri is $6,000,000 annually, but that the cost of fencing against this same hog is $10,000,000 annually, being a loss on the hog of $4,000,000.

Mr. Holbrook, the originator of the Excelsior potato, has successfully used a composition in the cultivation of corn that is made as follows: To one barrel of ground bone take three barrels of ashes and three pints of common salt. Mix well, saturate with water, and let it stand three weeks, and dry off with one barrel of plaster and one barrel of loam.

The different breeds of dogs exemplify the hereditary instincts. We see the rat terrier grubbing in the earth in search of vermin; the untrained pointer often points when first taken to the field; the shepherd dog shows a disposition to guard stock; and the first instincts of hounds are to trail—which verifies the old saying that a good hound is bred so.

Washington tells us that when he superintended the care of his sheep the average weight of fleece was over five pounds, but after he had been absent from home for a few years the average weight was less than three pounds. Regularity in feeding sheep makes heavier fleeces and better wool than a feast on one day and a famine on another. A continual improvement should be taking place in the flock. At every shearing time old sheep, and all that produce an inferior quality of wool, or a light fleece, should be culled out of the flock and put up to fatten.

If land is to be pastured instead of having the crop gathered by the scythe or mower, it should be fed as it grows. It would not be profitable to mow a field every day; the harvest would be too small to pay for the labor, but cattle can gather the feed as it grows without much extra effort, while the grass will be in its very best condition. For the production of milk nothing has yet been found superior to the short, sweet, recently-grown leaves of grass. If pastures are understocked, or if they are turned into too late in the spring, the grass gets old and tough, and is rejected by the cattle unless they are very hungry.

Cows are not easly risers. Unless disturbed they will lie on a cold morning till the day gets well started; appreciating the cheap warmth of a comfortable bed as much as the farmer himself. The horse is quite different, and bestirs himself nobody knows when. It is not often that we catch him napping, unless he is very tired. He would look out every once in a while in the night, if he could, and see how the weather goes. Last night, for the first time this winter, I gave Ringbone the liberty of his box with an open east window twice as large as a horse collar. Rising at daybreak—for a wonder—I found the horse with its head out of that window, winking at the pleasant view, one might think, and calculating the charms of an early spring of grass like an old hay speculator.—Hartford Courant.

About the House.

In polishing or washing door knobs or other articles projecting from a painted surface, protect the paint by slipping over the articles a piece of stout pasteboard or cloth, having a hole in the center large enough to slip it on.

Cleaning Vessels.—All sorts of vessels and utensils may be purified from long-retained smells of every kind in the easiest and most perfect manner, by rinsing them out well with charcoal powder, after the grosser impurities have been scoured off with sand and potash.

Lemon Pie.—The juice and rind of one lemon grated into one cup of water, one cupful of loaf sugar, the yelks of two eggs, three tablespoonfuls flour. Frosting—Beat the whites of two eggs, add four tablespoonfuls white sugar, spread on the pie, and bake lightly in the oven.

Citron Cake.—Beat four eggs and add one pound and a quarter of sugar, three-quarters of a pound of butter, one and a half pounds of flour; dissolve one teaspoonful of soda in a pint of milk, and add one teaspoonful of lemon extract and half a nutmeg. Beat together, lastly adding one-half pound of citron, cut in thin pieces; bake in a quick oven, not too hot.

Fig Pudding.—Half a pound of bread crumbs, half a pound figs, six ounces suet, six ounces brown sugar; mince the figs and suet nicely; a little salt, two eggs well beaten, nutmeg to taste; boil in a mold four hours. Serve with wine sauce.

French Jumbles.—One pound sugar, one-half pound butter, five eggs, flour enough to mix so as to roll out nicely; flavor with two teaspoonfuls of vanilla; before rolling the dough sprinkle the board with powdered sugar; roll very thin and cut with biscuit-cutter.

Pork and Beans, Boston Way.—Three pints of beans, soak over night, parboil until quite soft, not to break up; add salt and two tablespoonfuls of molasses, three-quarters of a pound of pork; scarify the pork, fill up with boiling water; bake in an earthen pot in a good oven all day; keep adding boiling water; don't allow them to become dry.

A red ink for marking clothes, which is not attacked by soap, alkalies or acids, is prepared as follows: Enough of finely-powdered cinnibar to form a moderate thick liquid is very intimately mixed with egg albumen previously diluted with an equal bulk of water and beaten to a froth, and filtered through fine linen. Marks formed on cloth with this liquid by means of a quill are fixed after they have become dry by pressing the cloth on the other side with a hot iron. The ink will keep in well closed bottles for a long time without separation of the suspended cinnibar. A black indelible ink is made of one and two-thirds parts of nitrate of silver in sixteen parts of distilled water and adding two parts of gum arabic and one-third part of sap-green.

Small Conveniences.

It is quite astonishing how much comfort and satisfaction results from little causes. A box, bag, drawer, or basket for needles, thread, scissors, thimble, buttons of all sizes, tape, strings, wax, etc., and a vast amount of patience, for men-folks dislike to wait while such articles are being hunted up. Neatly trimmed lamps are another convenience, though some prefer to trim them just before lighting, as they become dusty before evening. This can be obviated by twisting a piece of paper tunnel-shaped, so as to cover the chimney and burner, or if durability is preferred, covers made of fancy paper with strips of gilt to cover the seams and edges are very pretty. The stocking bag or basket, with different colored balls, and different sizes of needles, can be hung under garments, and is always ready for use and not in the way. A place sacred to pens, ink, paper, envelopes, and pencils, where one can jot a thought without getting riled in spirit looking for material, thereby becoming debtor to our fellow-man for defrauding him of the useful idea that circumstances evolved for his benefit, come under this heading. Book shelves are another really sensible article, and if never so cheap are an ornament. Any storekeeper would reserve for you the pieces upon which cloth is wound, for the shelves; a piece of strong twine filled with spools will complete it. Stand the books edgeways, so that the titles can be read without needless handling. Lamp-lighters save the disagreeable smell of matches; an old basin with a mop or brush for stove-blacking; a can or jug, with scissors, rags and kerosene, for lamp-trimming, are convenient and essential. Save everything. No matter if it is old-fashioned, or you are tired of it. Lay it away, and in a year or two it will seem fresh and do a good service in another form, and save a few pennies, which put with other little savings will buy a nice book or pay the subscription for some desirable publication. I do not mean the inconvertible odds and ends that accumulate in a house, and fill it up needlessly, as some are, merely because they possess a passion for saving all things, but only such as taste and judgment can convert into useful and ornamental articles.—Maine Farmer.

Standard Weights and Measures.

The following tables are worth preserving:

Bushel.	Lbs.	Bushel.	Lbs.
Wheat	60	Peas	60

TO MEASURE CORN IN A CRIB.

Having leveled the corn in the crib, measure the length, width and depth, and multiply them together, and divide the product by one-fifth, and you have the number of bushels in the ear—for shelled corn take one-half. To be strictly correct, add a half bushel to every one hundred. Corn, approximately, one hundred ears to the bushel.

HOW MUCH SEED TO THE ACRE.

The quantity of seed sown broadcast to the acre is about as follows:

Wheat, bu	1¼	to	2
Barley, bu	1½	to	2½
Oats, bu	1	to	4
Rye, bu	1	to	2
Buckwheat, bu	½	to	1¼
Millet, bu	1	to	2
Indian corn, bu	1	to	2
Beans, bu	2	to	3
Peas, bu	2½	to	3½
Hemp, bu	1	to	1½
Flax, bu	½	to	2
Timothy, quarts	12	to	24
Mustard, quarts	8	to	20
Red top, quarts	12	to	16
Flat turnip, lbs	2	to	3
Red clover, lbs	10	to	16
White clover, lbs	3	to	4
Kentucky blue grass, lbs	10	to	15
Orchard grass, lbs	20	to	30

The quantity per acre, when planted in rows, is about this:

Broom corn, bu	1	to	2
Beans, bu	1½	to	2
Peas, bu	1½	to	2
Peanuts, bu	1	to	2
Onions, lbs	4	to	5
Carrots, lbs	2	to	3½
Parsnips, lbs	4	to	6
Beets, lbs	4	to	6

Griddle Cakes.—A perfect success will be found by following these directions: To one quart of milk add the yelk of an egg, a pinch of salt, and a tablespoonful and a half of baking-powder. Stir in it flour enough to make a batter. Then add the beaten white of the egg, stirring it a very little—just enough to mix the egg in the butter. The same recipe makes delightful apple fritters.

A beau knot is easiest to untie.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CANVASS.

What Has Been Done, and What Remains to be Done.

[From the New York World.]

Over one-half of the delegates of the Republican National convention, and over one-third of the delegates to the Democratic National convention, have now been chosen. The following is a resume of the work already done, and a tabular statement of the conventions yet to be held:

THE DEMOCRATIC CANVASS.

Democratic State conventions for the the election of delegates to the National convention have been held as follows, up to date: Massachusetts, Sept. 22, 1875; Louisiana, Jan. 6; Texas, Jan. 7; New Hampshire, Jan. 11; Connecticut, Feb. 23; Rhode Island, March 16; Pennsylvania, March 22; Indiana, April 19; Nebraska, April 19; Oregon, April 26; New York, April 26; South Carolina, May 4. In Georgia, conventions in the various Congressional districts chose delegates April 26.

The whole number of delegates thus chosen is 292. The Democratic National convention at St. Louis will be composed of 738 members.

But one delegation thus far chosen to St. Louis has been instructed. The Indiana delegation was instructed to present the name of, and vote for, Mr. Hendricks. The New York convention indorsed Mr. Tilden for the Presidency. Though the delegation were not formally instructed to vote for Mr. Tilden, it is known that they are nearly all for him, and, as the delegation were instructed at Utica to vote as a unit in the National convention, it is as good as settled that the thirty-five votes of New York, represented by seventy delegates, will be thrown solidly for the Governor. The Nebraska convention did not instruct, but the delegation is unanimously for Mr. Tilden. The conventions of Connecticut, Louisiana, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Texas expressed no Presidential preferences, and their delegations go uninstructed.

The following is a list of the Democratic State conventions yet to be held for the purpose of electing delegates to the National convention at St Louis:

Date.	State.	Location.
May 15	Nevada	Carson.
May 17	Ohio	Cincinnati.
May 18	Kansas	Topeka.
May 23	New Jersey	Trenton.
May 24	Colorado	Pueblo.
May 24	Michigan	Lansing.
May 24	California	Sacramento.
May 25	Kentucky	Louisville.
May 31	Maryland	Baltimore.
May 31	Alabama	Montgomery.
May 31	Virginia	Richmond.
May 31	Tennessee	Nashville.
May 31	Missouri	Jefferson City.
June 1	Minnesota	St. Paul.
June 7	Wisconsin	Milwaukee.
June 8	West Virginia	Charleston.
June 13	Maine	Bangor.
June 14	Mississippi	Jackson.
June 14	North Carolina	Raleigh.
June 14	Arkansas	Little Rock.
June 21	Florida	Quincy.
June 22	Illinois	Springfield.

THE REPUBLICAN CANVASS.

Republican State and Territorial conventions for the election of delegates to the Cincinnati National convention have been held as follows: Texas, January 12; Indiana, February 22; Wisconsin, February 22; Connecticut, February 29; Utah, March 9; New York, March 22; Rhode Island, March 23; Vermont, March 29; Ohio, March 29; Pennsylvania, March 29; Mississippi, March 31; Nevada, April 5; South Carolina, April 12; Virginia, April 12; Montana, April 19; Colorado, April 20; California, April 26; Massachusetts, April 26; Arkansas, April 27; Oregon, May 3; Georgia, May 3; Maryland, May 4; Michigan, May 10; West Virginia, May 11.

These conventions chose in the aggregate 432 delegates. The Massachusetts convention elected but four (the delegates at large), the others being left to the choice of the district conventions. The State Executive Committee of North Carolina has chosen four delegates at large, so that the whole number of delegates chosen to date is 436. The whole number of delegates in the Republican National convention will be 752.

The Pennsylvania convention instructed its delegates (58) for Mr. Hartranft; the Ohio convention instructed for Mr. Hayes (44); the Montana Territory and Maryland conventions instructed for Mr. Blaine (14); Mr. Blaine was also indorsed by resolution for the nomination for President by the conventions of Virginia, California, Oregon and Wisconsin, representing 60 delegates. Mr. Conkling has received the recommendation by formal resolution of the convention of New York; and Mr. Morton follows with the indorsement of the Indiana, Arkansas and Mississippi conventions. The conventions of Rhode Island, Texas, Vermont, Colorado, Nevada, Utah, Georgia, Michigan and Connecticut left their delegations to go to Cincinnati untrammeled.

The following is a list of the Republican State conventions yet to meet before the assembling of the National convention at Cincinnati.

Date.	State.	Location
May 16	Alabama	Montgomery.
May 17	Tennessee	Nashville.
May 17	New Jersey	Trenton.
May 18	Kentucky	Louisville.
May 23	Nebraska	Fremont.
May 24	Minnesota	St. Paul.
May 24	Illinois	Springfield.
May 24	Missouri	Jefferson City.
May 24	New Hampshire	Concord.
May 24	Alabama	Montgomery.
May 24	Kansas	Topeka.
May 30	Louisiana	New Orleans.
May 31	Iowa	Des Moines.
May 31	Florida	Madison.

It will be noticed that two Republican State conventions are set down for Alabama—that of May 16 being called by the Wickersham wing of the party, and that of May 24 by their opponents. In Maine the delegates are to be chosen by Congressional districts. In North Carolina the delegates-at-large have already been selected by the State Executive committee, and the other delegates will be chosen by the District conventions.

Horse Against Velocipede.

A large attendance of sporting men were in Deerfoot park yesterday, to see the trot of A. B. Williams' w. g. Whitecloud against David Stanton's ride on a bycicle. The distance was five miles. Before starting Stanton had the call at $50 to $40. He was allowed an eighth of a mile start on account of having to ride nine feet from the pole. The diameter of the wheel is fifty-eight inches. At the word horse and man went off at a rattling gait. Stanton led for the first half mile, but was easily passed by the horse within ten lengths of the score on the first mile; time 3:05. The second mile was finished by the horse in 3:21. Stanton completed two miles to the horses two miles and a half. At the two-and-three-quarter mile pole the horse again passed Stanton, making his third mile in 2:53. On the fourth mile the horse was going easy and well, while Stanton plodded pluckily on, but it was evident that he was beat. The horse crossed the score in 2:56. The fifth was the fastest mile, the horse trotting in 2:51, beating Stanton by a mile and ten yards. Total time of the five miles, 15:06.—New York Sun.

Boy Suicides.

A YOUTH HANGS HIMSELF BECAUSE HIS FORTUNE HAD BEEN SQUANDERED.

James M. Fair, a lad of fifteen years, a member of the family of Mr. Tyler Watts, living in Union avenue, Jamaica, hanged himself on Friday. Some years ago his father died at Stewart's Run, Pa., leaving young Fair $17,000. This was invested in bonds, and was in charge of an uncle. His mother contracted a second marriage. The uncle having occasion to go to Europe, and the stepfather appearing trustworthy, the securities were placed in charge of the latter. While the uncle was away the mother died, and Mr. Tyler Watts, who had married the mother's sister, took the boy into his family. It was found that the stepfather had been squandering the fortune intrusted to his keeping, and before Mr. Watts could stop it by appeal to the law about $15,000 was irrecoverably gone. It is believed that this loss preyed upon the boy's mind, as he is represented to have been very fond of money. It is understood that he, some days ago, made an attempt to hang himself, but failed in consequence of the too great length of the rope. He had repeatedly told schoolmates that he intended to commit suicide either by shooting or hanging.

On this occasion his preparations were very carefully made. He went into the coal house, a few steps from the back door of the main house, placed a door upon the top of some coal and wood, and arranging some wood on the top of this door, laid another door above this, making a scaffold. He then tied a strip of bed-ticking over a beam, making a noose at the other end, which he placed around his neck, and then jumped off the improvised scaffold—having a fall of about a foot. Some of the inmates of the house hearing a noise looked through the coal-house door and discovered the suspended body, with the legs and arms twisting convulsively. He was cut down as soon as possible and carried into the house, and restoratives were applied, but all in vain. Coroner Henderson impaneled a jury, and the verdict was "deliberate suicide."

Young Fair was a very handsome lad, disposed to be self-willed, and represented to be somewhat wild. It is said, in evidence of the fact that the hanging was not accidental and the result of a foolish experiment, as some supposed, that only a few days ago he had some cards printed, having on them only his name, which he distributed among his mates to remember him by, saying that he intended to kill himself.

ANOTHER BOY HANGS HIMSELF.

Charles Titus, aged sixteen years, in the employ of Nathaniel Philips, of Harbourtown, Mercer county, N. J., committed suicide by hanging himself in his employer's barn, on Friday. The lad had been in unusual good spirits all day, and Mr. Philips left him ploughing in the field while he took a drive to Lambertville. When he returned he found the boy's body.—New York Sun.

Historic Dates in May.

The month of May was a conspicuous one in our revolutionary and pre-revolutionary history. In May, 1765, the action of the Virginia Legislature, led by Patrick Henry, insisting upon the rights of that colony to make its own laws and impose its own taxes, exerted a powerful influence over the rest in shaping popular feeling into a settled purpose. In May, 1771, there was an outbreak in North Carolina caused by the tyranny of Tryon, the royal Governor. In May, 1774, Louis XVI. ascended the throne of France, and at the same time committees of correspondence, representing Boston, Dorchester, Roxbury, Brookline, Newton, Cambridge, Charlestown, Lynn and Lexington, met in Faneuil Hall, and proposed a general discontinuance of trade with England, and Boston appealed to the other colonies for aid and comfort in the straits to which it was subjected. South Carolina was the first to reply by shipping 200 barrels of rice, and promising 800 more. In May, 1775, a company of 170 volunteered from Connecticut and Western Massachusetts, now Vermont, led by Ethan Allen, marched to Lake Champlain, and captured in succession the important posts of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. At this time, also, the sturdy Presbyterians of Mecklenburg county, N. C., met in formal convention at Charlotte, and united in a distinct declaration of independent rights and powers. May 10, 1775, the second Continental Congress assembled in Philadelphia, and among other acts adopted the volunteers then encamped about Boston as a Continental army, of which Washington was Commander-in-chief.

In May, 1777, the Earl of Chatham entreated a cessation of hostilities, and Baron Koscinsko, Count Pulaski, and Baron Steuben offered their services to Congress. In May, 1779, the west coast of Africa and the Channel Islands were in turn the scene of conflict between Great Britain and France. In May, 1780, Russia, Denmark and Sweden united in a declaration of armed neutrality, in which other European nations joined, having for its object the protection of their commerce from British interference. In May, 1781, Gen. Green took possession of South Carolina. In this month, 1787, a convention of fifty delegates from the several States assembled in Philadelphia for a revision of the articles of confederation. Washington presided, and among its members were Franklin, Sherman, Hamilton, Morris, Madison and Pinckney. The Constitution they then framed in due course received the approval of the several States, and in 1788 went into effect. Under it Washington was elected first President of the United States, and John Adams, Vice-president. Upon April 30, 1789, Washington entered upon his first administration, and at this point the history proper of the United States begins.—Brooklyn Union.

Old workmen are being taken back to the bureau of engraving and printing in Washington at $1.50 per diem.

INDIANA ITEMS.

The Tippecanoe Poor-house has sixty-five inmates, quite a number of whom are incurably insane and hard to manage.

The Commissioners of Cass county have decided not to pay the board of prisoners who are able to pay it themselves.

The people of Mishawka are on unfriendly terms with the Lake Shore railroad, and make all their shipments over the Peninsular road, a rival line.

At Westville, Laporte county, one day last week, a brakeman on the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago railroad, named Patrick Conlon, fell from the top of a train between the cars, and the train passed over his leg, crushing it so badly that amputation was necessary below the knee.

R. C. McKinney, a young grocer of Evansville, eloped with a young lady named Mattie Martin, an orphan, prepossessing in appearance and the owner of considerable property. McKinney has a wife living, and is an infernal scoundrel, but Miss Martin would not believe any stories against him, and eloped with him contrary to the advice of all her friends.

The State Temperance convention met at Indianapolis last week. In the absence of Mrs. ex-Gov. Wallace, who was detained at home by the death of her sister, Miss Auretta Hoyt was elected to preside. Addresses were made by Mrs. Emma Molloy, Mrs. Robinson, and Luther Benson. Statistics for the years 1874 and 1875 were read, showing the number of saloons in fifty-five counties to be 1,325 in 1875, against 744 in 1874. In 1875, there were 2,213 licensed saloons in the entire State.

Dr. Strum, who has been examining the Indian camping and burying grounds at Horey's lake, Posey county, furnishes the following description of them in the Mt. Vernon Democrat: "I dug into quite a number of their graves. They appeared mostly to be walled in with rock, and varying from three to four feet in length, and each grave containing from one to four skeletons, doubtless put there after the flesh had been decomposed off them. The bones were found all mixed up together, crosswise and lengthwise of the grave. The graves are invariably arranged east and west. One grave I found floored with slate, and after removing the earth and bones that were in it I then removed the floor, and after digging down some ten inches I found another grave containing another lot of skeletons. In another grave I found three skeletons, one an adult, one a lad or half grown, the other a child. The arrangement of these was remarkable. The adult was lying lengthwise of the grave east and west, the lad lay head on the breast of his mother (perhaps), then the child lay in a rock coffin between the feet of the two. The grounds have the appearance of being very ancient; the bones that were exhumed were very much decomposed. Great quantities of broken pottery and flint are scattered over and intermingled with the earth to the depth of two or three feet."

The Indianapolis correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean writes: "It is doubtful if any inland town in the West has had as rapid growth as Indianapolis during the last five or ten years. Through the politeness of Auditor Sproule it is ascertained that the number of tax-payers in the corporation increases between 2,000 and 4,000 annually, a reliable test of the growth of the city. The number of persons paying taxes in 1873 was 23,813; in 1874, 28,424, and in 1875, 30,278, some in the last year being still delinquent. The census in 1870 fell a trifle short of 50,000; to-day it cannot be less than 100,000. The last city directory—not an infallible guide—indicates about 110,000. Indianapolis—purely inland, no lake or navigable stream within many miles—depends entirely on railroads to do its transportation; hence its progress is a marvel, or would be anywhere in the world except in the great Mississippi basin. Its ten great railroads afford easy and prompt communication with all the States of the Union, and are as perfect a system perhaps as the country presents. Among the little items of business which they do in the course of a year are the receiving and shipping of 10,000,000 bushels of corn, 2,500,000 of oats, 1,000,000 of wheat, 500,000 of rye, 375,000 of barley, and 1,000,000 barrels of flour. There are more than 100 large manufacturing shops here, and these railroads bring, in the raw material, 80,000,000 feet, and carry away 35,000,000 feet, and the manufactured articles. Indianapolis has become a great business center."

A Big Blast.

The rock-boring at Hell Gate is completed, and the people in the vicinity are waiting with painful interest the explosions which are to blow out of existence this time-honored obstruction to the entrance of New York harbor. There are 8,000 blasts to make, and the material to be used is English gun-cotton. The engineers in charge say there is no occasion for fear on the part even of those living on the bank of the river; but they are building a sea wall 150 feet wide by twelve feet high and eight feet thick to protect the shore from the current which will sweep against it after the explosion.

Don't be in a Hurry.

The Chicago Times thinks there is no need to be in a hurry about starting to the Centennial. The show will not be in fair running order before June; and, moreover, railroad fares will probably come down handsomely after the first rush is over.

A Southern paper reports that Mr. E. T. Fitch, said to be a son of the Treasurer of Yale college, murdered his wife at Tuskaloosa, Ala., recently. Young Fitch had been drinking hard for some years, and has suffered several times from delirium tremens, but at the time of the murder he was perfectly sober. His wife was a Southern lady. He cut her throat with a razor.

Here is woman's rights! Two hundred women of Guilford, Conn., turned out Wednesday, with hoes, rakes, spades and wheelbarrows, and cleaned up the village green in regular housekeeper style, while the men sat around grinning and whittling dry-goods boxes, and trying to look as though they were not ashamed.

Thoughtlessness.

He is not vicious, and he has no special malice in his heart, but his thoughtlessness leads to more human misery than results from the premeditated wickedness of a deliberate transgressor. On Saturday he scattered orange-peel on the stairs and lobby of our building, and continued this along down the street as he went, occasioning several strains and one severe fall as his victims incautiously trod thereon. He belongs to a large family, all of which throw banana skins and orange-peel upon the pavement, not for the express purpose of endangering the life or limbs of the wayfarers, but because they have in their hearts no thoughtful regard for human welfare.

His brother is the man who carries an umbrella over his shoulder, with the point well back, which describes an arc of three feet as he swings his body in walking. Several persons have been injured in the face, one nearly lost his eye, and a number of lesser grievances have been inflicted through his habit, but he didn't intend to injure any one, although he will not stop the practice unless it is made criminal by act of the legislature.

His own cousins, quite a number of them, are the men who cross their legs in the cars and omnibus, thus wiping their feet on the dresses and pantaloons of their fellow-passengers. One of them is generally found in the cabin of the ferryboat, either near the door or the passage by the wheelhouse, where his protruded boot trips every passer who does not go by him with great care. He would not put his feet on the floor and draw them in a little while the throng goes by, to procure a life-membership in any one of the great benevolent societies he so fondly patronizes in his Sunday contributions.

His more distant relatives who stand tattling with a friend in the middle of the sidewalk, thus greatly obstructing the travel, or saunter slowly up the street with curved elbows, or whisk through a crowd with a cane under their arms, are all readily recognized without any further description. They are a large family, and they are nuisances in whatever community they take up their abode.—New York Journal of Commerce.

Arkansas Hot Springs.

The decision of the Supreme court establishes the right of the United States to the Hot Springs property in Arkansas which has been claimed by squatters. The district in which these remarkable Springs are located lies among the Ozark mountains, and was laid out as a reservation when John Quincy Adams was President. When the earthquake depressed so much territory below Cairo Congress gave the settlers whose farms were untenable the privilege of pre-empting as much land as they had lost, not already taken up, within certain limits. A few of them suspected the prospective value of the Hot Springs and squatted near them. The Government hardly knew of the encroachment for years, but at length contested their claims. Within a few years the Springs have acquired great celebrity. Their healing and medicinal properties, which were known to the Indians and discovered by the Spanish and French explorers, are quite wonderful. They were visited by over 2,000 persons last year. Their recovery by the Government is a matter of some imporance. This reservation should be kept as a national park, and the Springs would afford an excellent site for a national hospital. Locations could be leased for hotels, and the whole property could easily be kept under wise and efficient regulation for the benefit of the people, rather than the profit of a few unscrupulous adventurers.

"Strict Discipline."

The steamer Crocus has landed 850 Chinamen in San Francisco. On the passage they were horribly ill-treated. The captain of the vessel, when questioned, churlishly remarked that "strict discipline" had been enforced. He said: "The fellows would be continually coming on deck, and wouldn't go below when ordered. So to make them go without too much violence I got some long pokers made, which I kept in the furnace red hot all the time. It operated like a charm. When the Chinamen would get obstreperous all I had to do was to order out my poker men, when they would scamper below very quickly. I did not have to touch the same one twice I can tell you." The captain laughed, says the reporter, as though remembering some ludicrous incident. The Chinamen thus kept crowded beneath the decks must have suffered terribly, and upon that point the captain said: "Most of the trouble we had on the trip was when the fellows were below. I turned hot water over them once or twice, but generally all that was necessary was to fire a revolver over their heads. They are a cowardly set, and heartily afraid of a revolver." The prejudice against Chinamen is so strong in California that the captain's brutality is not censured there.

A Sylvan Bootjack.

One day last week a young man in one of the rural districts went into the woods to do some work, and while there one of his boots felt uncomfortable, and he resolved to draw it off to see what was the matter. To do so he thought the crotch of a sapling that stood near him would answer the purpose of a bootjack. He placed his heel in the crotch and gave a pull, but he slipped and fell on the broad of his back, with one of his feet high in the air, sticking fast in his new-fashioned bootjack. From this uncomfortable position he was unable to extricate himself, and he lay there struggling until 10 o'clock the next day, when he was discovered and released by a party of friends who had been hunting for him all the previous night. Since his suspension, Lyman does not consider the sapling bootjack a great success, and he will hereafter draw off his No. 11's with a convenience that will not serve him such a dirty trick as the sapling did.—New Lisbon (Wis.) Argus.

In the Taunton lunatic asylum there is a patient who for one year refused to eat, and down whose throat were poured three quarts of milk daily during that time. On the last of the 365 days he said, "Well, it's just one year since I've been willing to eat. Now I guess I'll eat like other folks," and he did.

It is no wonder so many people are given to lying. It is taught to them even in the earliest childhood. What child believes the parent to be telling the truth when he says, "If you don't come into the house this minute, I'll take every bit of skin off of your back."

From the agonizing groans bowlings, and stomach-rendings renchings that came from the sidewalk in front of the Court House late last Saturday night; we concluded that smebody's stomach was rising inrighteous in-dignation against the whisky trade.

Poor Morton! Alabama could not give instructions for him and the delegation is understood to be for Bristow. If Morton can not carry the Southern negroes where do his friends hope his strength will come from? Did not the Journal make a mistake when it said that Hendricks had been withdrawn, meaning Morton all the while?

The much abused "General Fund" makes his complaint loud and bitter this morning. He has been terribly abused and defrauded. Let the citizens of Indiana read his expose of Republican rascalities. Would it be asking too much of the Journal to give a little space to the "sole proprietor" to vindicate himself against the charge of the General?

Auburn is one of the fastest growing towns in the Union, but it cant keep pace with several lads, whose father's furnish them jean suits, and lends them their pocket knife to whittle out a bass wood cane for Sunday. A young lady from the city asked us to warn the boys, not to let a $4 pair of box-toed Saratogas get away with their "organs" under their dollar hat.

The boys of Detroit seem to be going down hill in their morals of late. Sunday, one of the legion, who has always been noted for his respectful demeanor toward the great public, observed an old citizen yawning and gaping on a street corner, and said to him: "Better not open your mouth too wide." "Why?" was the surprised query. "There's a law again opening a saloon on Sunday!" continued the child as he slid for the middle of the street."

A method which will break the most vicious cow from kicking, and which should supersede the cruel practice of beating and whipping, and is the work of but a few minutes, is as follows: Take a strap about the size of a common bridle rein and buckle tightly around the cow (while milking) just forward of the bag. This practiced a few days will effect the desired result, as we are aware from actual experience.—Vermont Farmer.

A man who had climbed up a cheatnut tree had by carelessness missed his hold of one of the branches and fell to the ground with such force as to break his ribs. A neighbor going to his assistance, remarked to him that "had he followed the rule in these cases, he would have avoided the accident." "What rule do you mean?" said the other indignantly. "This," said the philosopher "never come down from a place faster than you go up."

The extraordinary flood in the upper Mississippi is becoming threatening at St. Louis. At eight o'clock last night the flood was only seven feet eleven inches below the extraordinary high water mark of 1844, when ferry boats sailed out to the bluffs a distance of seven miles and six feet eight inches below that of 1851 and two feet above high water mark of 1862, when most of the city was flooded. Information received is that the Missouri has commenced falling but that the upper Mississippi and Illinois are booming. About ten inches more are expected at St. Louis. Steamboatmen say that the water will spread out over the bottoms before reaching Memphis, and will not hurt the lower country.

A Voice from the Centennial

Mr. Henry Von Behren of the Manufacturing Company arrived on Friday from Philadelphia, whither he went to superintend the placing in order, at the Centennial exhibition some samples of bent woodwork and spokes made at the factory in this city. He reports the exhibition to be a grand success. The show is only half completed but large forces of workmen are kept busy night and day and it is expected to have everything finished by the first of July. The display of the U. S. Navy Department and of Brazil are in full readiness for spectators. The majority of the foreign nations have scarcely begun to arrange their departments. There is no room nor doubt however but that the exhibition will be a thorough success, and when complete the largest ever held in the world.—Logansport Pharos.

CELLARS.—There is no more fruitful source of disease in country houses than the cellar. Always more or less damp, containing vegetables in a partially decayed state, gases and vapors are generated which are very unhealthy, and and the only outlet of which is to often the living rooms of the house. Fortunately, in towns, the cellar is not ordinarily used to any great extent as a storehouse for vegetables; but is frequently made the receptacle of all kinds of rubbish, the accumulation of which is anything but wholesome to the dwellers in the house. Great care should be taken to ventilate the cellar thoroughly through windows opening out-of-doors. By placing them on the opposite sides of the cellar, and opening them warm days, the air within will be rapidly purified. It should be remembered that malarial diseases often proceed from decaying organic substances in the cellar.

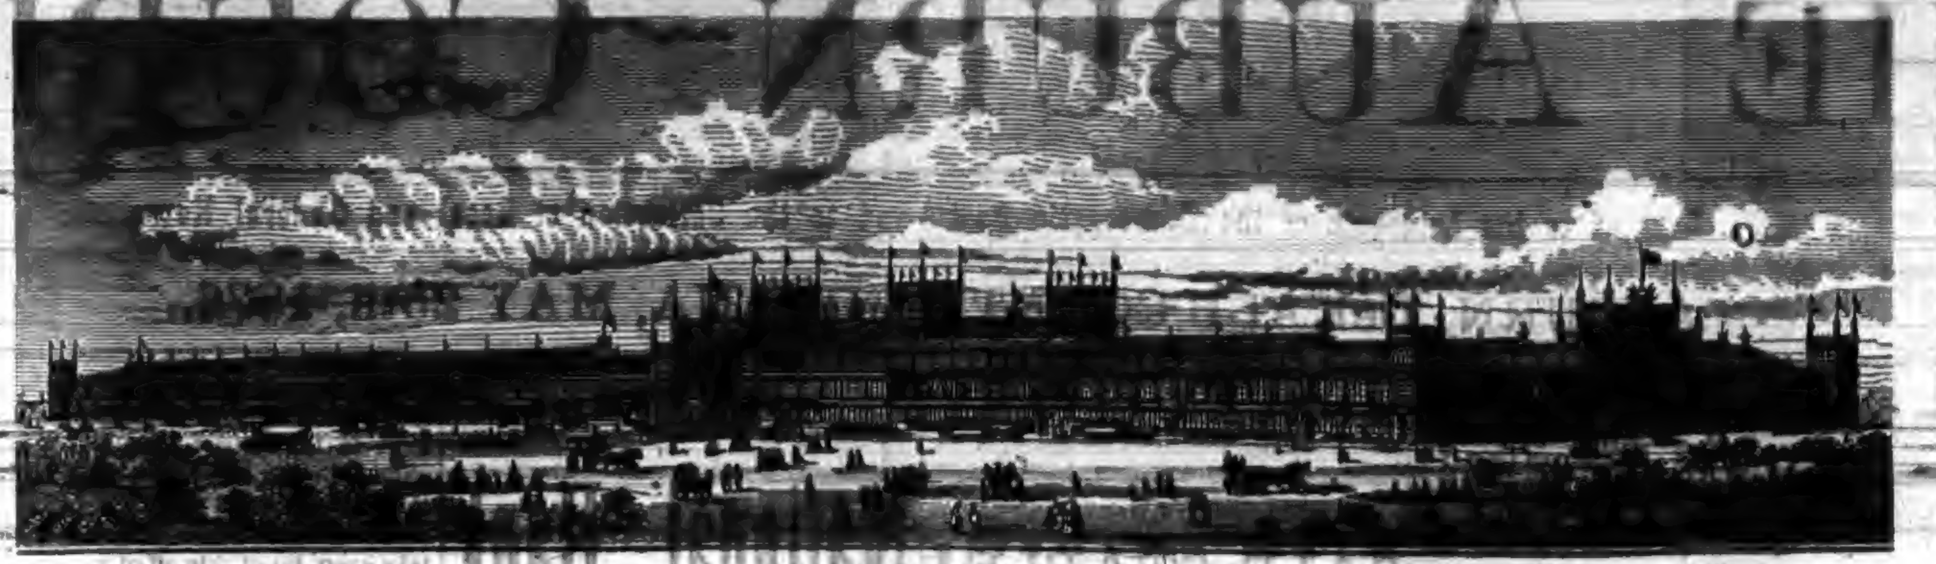
THE CENTENNIAL.

he Great Anniversary Exhibition in Philadelphia.

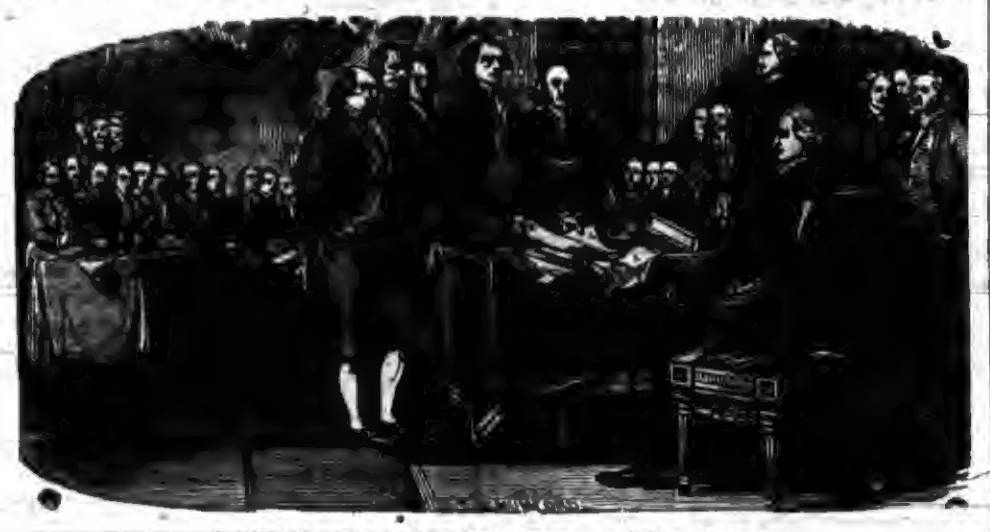
Views of the Exhibition Buildings and Full Descriptions of the Various Departments.



THE MAIN EXHIBITION BUILDING.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The act of Congress which provided for "celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of American independence, by holding an International Exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine," authorized the creation of the United States Centennial Commission, and intrusted to it the management of the Exhibition. This body is composed of two commissioners from each State and Territory, nominated by the respective governors, and commissioned by the President of the United States.



SIGNING THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

The enterprise, therefore, is distinctly a national one, and not, as has sometimes been stated, the work of a private corporation.

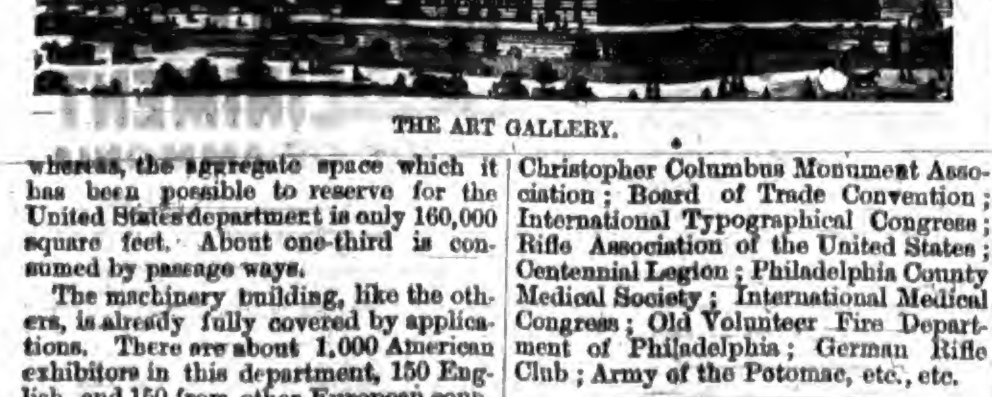
The Exhibition will remain open until November 10th. There will be a fixed price of fifty cents for admission to all the buildings and grounds.

The Centennial grounds are situated on the western bank of the Schuylkill river, and within Fairmount Park, the largest public park in proximity to a great city in the world, and one of the most beautiful in the country. The park contains 3,160 acres, 450 of which have been inclosed for the Exhibition. Besides this tract, there will be large yards near by for the exhibition of stock, and a farm of forty-two acres has already been suitably planted for the tests of plows, mowers, reapers, and other agricultural machinery.

The Exhibition buildings are approached by eight lines of street cars, which connect with all the other lines in the city, and by the Pennsylvania and Reading railroads, over the tracks of which trains will also run from the North Pennsylvania and Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroads. Thus the Exhibition is in immediate connection with the entire railroad system of the country, and any one within ninety miles of Philadelphia can visit it at no greater cost than that of carriage hire at the Paris or Vienna exhibitions.

The list of special buildings number from 200 to 250. Most of the important foreign nations—England, Germany, Austria, France, Sweden, Egypt, Japan, and others—are putting up one or more structures each, for exhibiting purposes, or for the use of the commissioners, exhibitors and visitors. Offices and headquarters of this kind, usually of considerable architectural beauty, are provided by the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Missouri, Kansas, Virginia, West Virginia, Nevada, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Delaware; and it is likely others will follow the example.

A number of trade and industrial associations are provided for in special buildings. Among these are the photographers, the carriage builders, the glass makers, the cracker bakers, the boot and shoe manufacturers, besides quite a number of individual exhibitors. The great demand for space renders this course necessary to a considerable extent, especially for exhibitors who have been tardy in making their applications. In the main exhibition building, for example, 333,300 square feet of space had been applied for by the beginning of October by American exhibitors only; whereas, the aggregate space which it has been possible to reserve for the United States department is only 160,000 square feet. About one-third is consumed by passage ways.



THE ART GALLERY.

The machinery building, like the others, is already fully covered by applications. There are about 1,000 American exhibitors in this department, 150 English, and 150 from other European countries—which is about 250 more than entered the Vienna machinery exhibition. Extra provision has been made for annexes to accommodate the hydraulic machinery, the steam hammers, forges, hoisting engines, boilers, plumbers, carpenters, etc.

Power in the Machinery hall is chiefly supplied by a pair of monster Corliss engines. Each cylinder is forty inches in diameter, with a stroke of ten feet; the fly-wheel is thirty-one feet in diameter, and weighs fifty-five tons; the horse-power is 1,400; and the number of boilers is twenty. This engine drives about a mile of shafting.

The art exhibition includes, in addition to the works of contemporary artists, representative productions of the past century of American art—those, for instance, of Stuart, Copley, Trumbull, West, Alston, Sully, Neagle, Elliot, Kensett, Cole. These, as well as the works offered by living artists, have been passed upon by the committee of selection, who visited, for the purpose, New York, Boston, Chicago, and other leading cities, in order to prevent the needless transportation to Philadelphia of works of art not up to the standard of admission.

A large number of orders and fraternities have signified their intention to hold gatherings at Philadelphia during the period of the Exhibition. Among those which may now be enumerated are the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; the Grand Encampment, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Grand Lodge, United States, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Grand Commandery Knights Templar; Grand Army of the Republic; Presbyterian Synod; Caledonian Club; Portland Mechanic Blues; Welsh National Eistedfodd; Patriotic Order Sons of America; California Zouaves of San Francisco; an International Regatta; the Life Insurance companies; National Board of Underwriters; State Agricultural Society; Second Infantry, N. G. of California; Philadelphia Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church; Cincinnati Society; California Pioneer Society; American Dental Convention; Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America; Independent Order of B'nai B'rith; National Alumni Association; Salesmen's Association; Fifth Maryland Regiment; Seventh New York Regiment; American Pomological Society; Malster's Association of the United States; Army of the Cumberland; Humboldt Monument Association; Christopher Columbus Monument Association; Board of Trade Convention; International Typographical Congress; Rifle Association of the United States; Centennial Legion; Philadelphia County Medical Society; International Medical Congress; Old Volunteer Fire Department of Philadelphia; German Rifle Club; Army of the Potomac, etc., etc.

THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

was written by Thomas Jefferson, at his private lodgings, in the house still standing on the southwest corner of Market and Seventh streets. He says: "I rented the second floor, consisting of a parlor and bedroom ready furnished. In that parlor I wrote habitually, and in it wrote this paper particularly."

The Hall of Independence, on Chestnut street, between Fifth and Sixth, was commenced in 1729, and completed in 1734, having been designed for the use of the Provincial Assemblies; and the long hall formerly in the upper story was often used for grand official banquets given to Governors, distinguished strangers and Generals, and to the members of the First Congress when they arrived in 1774. It was originally decorated with a stately steeple, which was taken down in 1774 on account of decay; only a small belfry was left to cover the bell until the year 1828, when the present steeple was erected as nearly like the ancient one as circumstances would permit. The ancient bell, formerly used for the clock, is remarkable for its prophetic inscription. Originally imported from England, in 1752, but cracked in its first ringing, it was recast in Philadelphia, and the inscription—"Proclaim liberty throughout the land, and to all the people thereof"—was placed upon it. This was more than twenty years before the independence of the colonies was dreamed of; yet, when the Declaration was signed, this very bell was the first, by its merry peal, to "proclaim liberty throughout the land." It now occupies a place in the south vestibule of the building. The Declaration of Independence was signed in the chamber on the left of the principal entrance. Some years since the antique architectural decorations and furniture of this room were removed, and their places supplied with new furniture and tapestry in modern style. This error has since been repaired, as far as possible, by restoring the hall to its ancient appearance. The portraits of nearly every one of the signers now adorn the walls. Open daily.

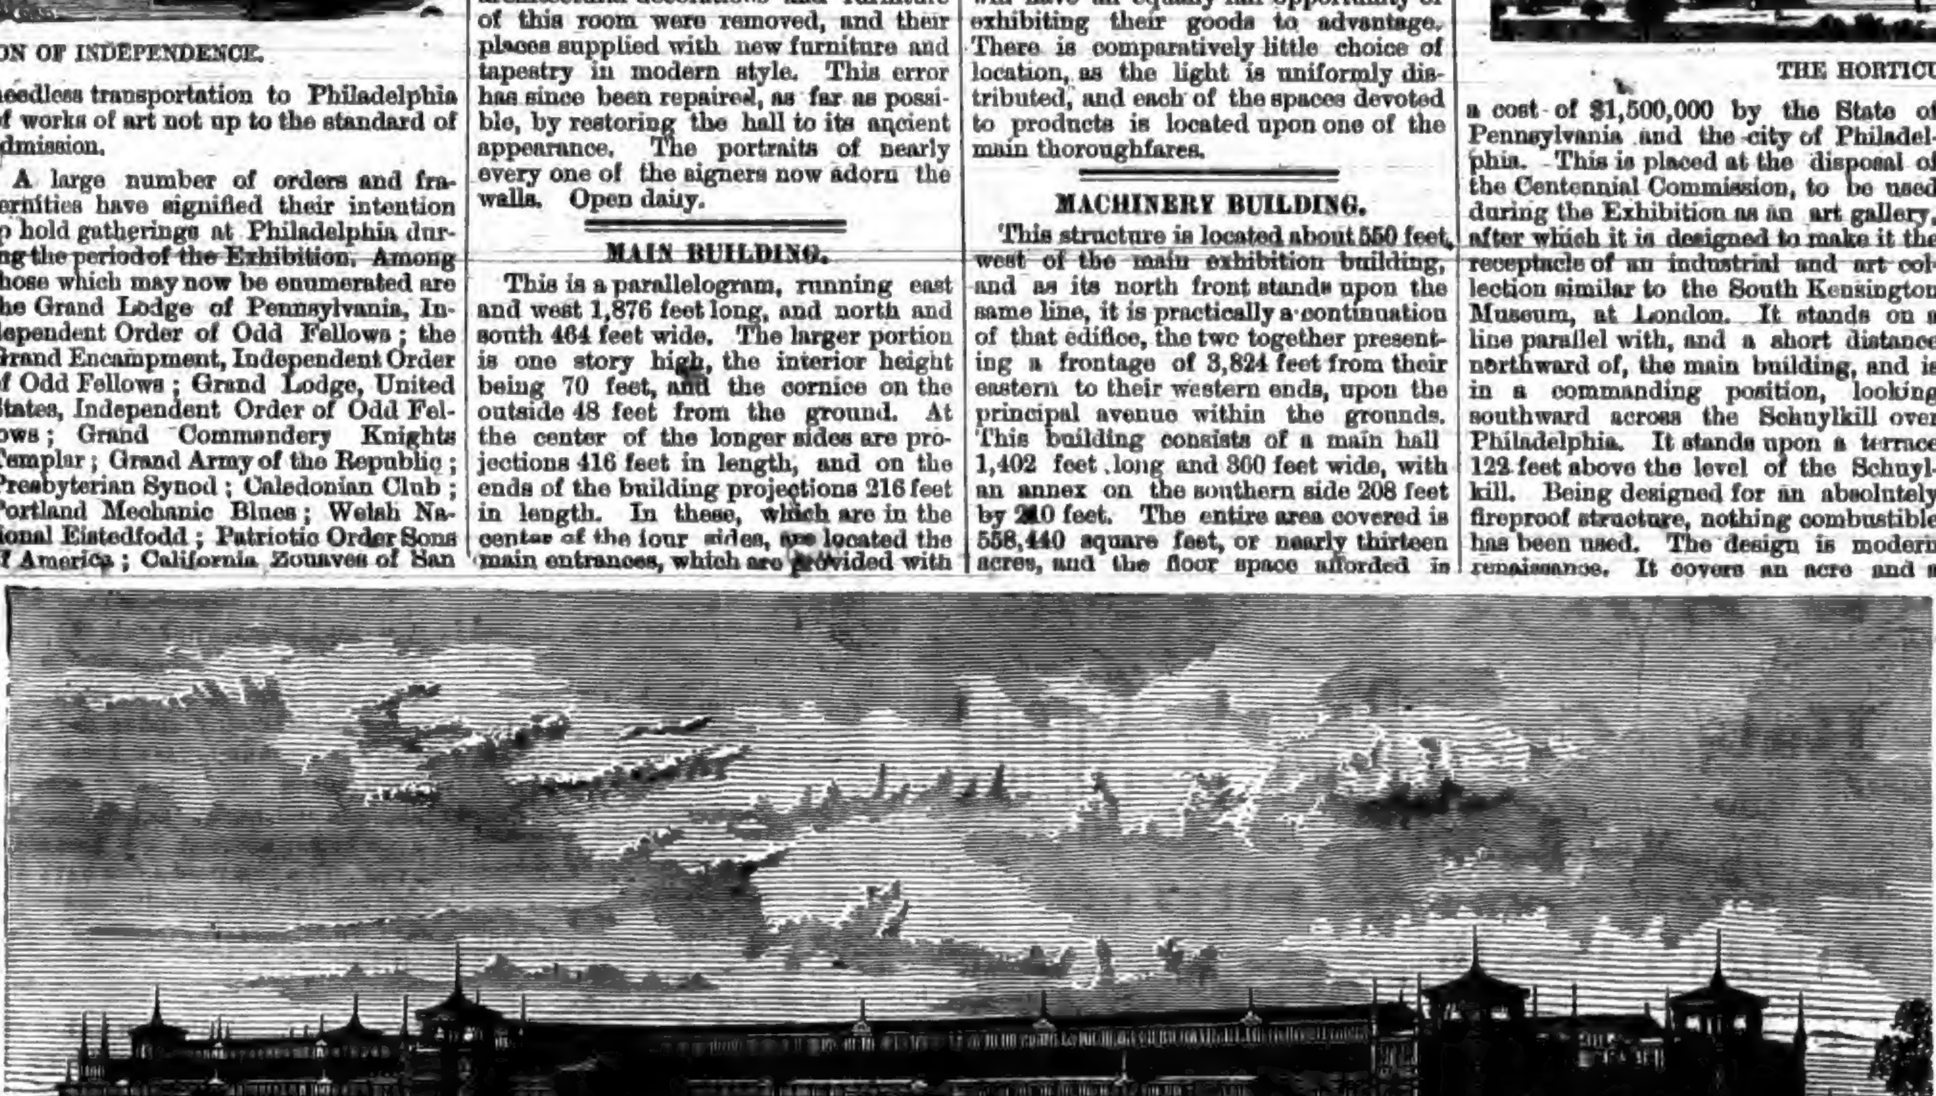
MAIN BUILDING.

This is a parallelogram, running east and west 1,876 feet long, and north and south 464 feet wide. The larger portion is one story high, the interior height being 70 feet, and the cornice on the outside 48 feet from the ground. At the center of the longer sides are projections 416 feet in length, and on the ends of the building projections 216 feet in length. In these, which are in the center of the four sides, are located the main entrances, which are provided with arcades upon the ground floor, and central facades 90 feet high. The east entrance forms the principal approach for carriages, visitors alighting at the doors of the building under cover of the arcade. The south entrance is the principal approach from railway cars. The west entrance opens upon the main passage-way to two principal buildings, the Machinery and Agricultural halls, and the north entrance to Memorial hall (art gallery). Towers 75 feet in height rise at each corner of the building. In order to obtain a central feature, the roof for 184 feet square at the center has been raised above the surrounding portion, and four towers 48 feet square, rising to 120 feet high, are introduced into the corners of this elevated roof. This gives ventilation, as well as ornament. The main building gives 936,008 square feet of surface, or nearly 21½ acres. Its ground plan shows a central avenue 120 feet in width, and 1,832 feet in length, which is the longest avenue of that width ever introduced into an exhibition building. On either side of this is another avenue of equal length, and 100 feet wide. Between the central and side avenues are aisles 48 feet wide, and on the outer sides of the building smaller aisles of 24 feet width. To break the great length of the roof-lines three transepts have been introduced, of the same widths and in the same relative positions to each other as the longitudinal avenues. These cross the building, and are 416 feet in length. The intersections of these various avenues make at the center of the building nine spaces, free from supports, which are from 100 feet to 120 feet square, and which aggregate 416 feet square. The general elevation of the roofs of all these avenues varies from 45 feet to 70 feet.

The building rests upon the ground, the land having been thoroughly graded and prepared. The foundations consist of piers of masonry, the superstructure being composed of wrought iron columns, placed twenty-four feet apart, which support wrought iron roof trusses. There are 672 of these columns in the entire structure, the shortest being twenty-three feet and the longest 125 feet long. Their aggregate weight is 2,200,000 pounds. The roof trusses and girders weigh 5,000,000 pounds. The sides of the building, to seven feet above the ground, are finished with brickwork in panels between the columns. Above this there are glazed sashes. The roof covering is of tin, that being the best roofing known in this climate to resist leakage. The flooring is of plank, upon sills resting upon the ground, with no open space beneath. Turrets surmount the building at all the corners and angles, and the national standard, with appropriate emblems, is placed over each of the main entrances. There are numerous side entrances, each being surmounted with a trophy, showing the national colors of the country occupying that portion of the building. In the vestibule variegated brick and tile are introduced. Louvre ventilators surmount all the avenues, and skylights the central aisles. Light, of which there will be ample supply, comes from the north and south sides almost entirely. There underlie the building two miles of drainage pipe, the water supply and drainage system being complete. Offices for the foreign commissions are placed along the sides of the building, in close proximity to the products exhibited. Offices for the administration are at the ends. The design of the building is such that all exhibitors will have an equally fair opportunity of exhibiting their goods to advantage. There is comparatively little choice of location, as the light is uniformly distributed, and each of the spaces devoted to products is located upon one of the main thoroughfares.

MACHINERY BUILDING.

This structure is located about 550 feet west of the main exhibition building, and as its north front stands upon the same line, it is practically a continuation of that edifice, the two together presenting a frontage of 3,824 feet from their eastern to their western ends, upon the principal avenue within the grounds. This building consists of a main hall 1,402 feet long and 360 feet wide, with an annex on the southern side 208 feet by 210 feet. The entire area covered is 558,440 square feet, or nearly thirteen acres, and the floor space afforded is about fourteen acres. The chief portion of the building is one story in height, the main cornice upon the outside being forty feet from the ground, and the interior height to the top of the ventilators in the avenues seventy feet, and in the aisle forty feet. To break the long lines of the exterior, projections have been introduced upon the four sides, and the main entrances are finished with facades extending to seventy-eight feet in height. The eastern entrance is the principal approach from railways and from the main exhibition building. Along the southern side are placed the boiler-houses, and such other buildings for special kinds of machinery as may be required.



THE MACHINERY BUILDING.

The plan of the machinery building shows two main avenues ninety feet wide, with a central aisle between and an aisle on either side, these being sixty feet in width. These avenues and aisles together have 360 feet width, and each of them is 1,360 feet long. At the center of the building there is a transept ninety feet in width, which at the south end is prolonged beyond the building. This extended transept, beginning at thirty-six feet from the building and extending to 208 feet, is flanked on either side by aisles sixty feet wide, and forms an annex for hydraulic machines. The promenades are: In the avenue fifteen feet wide, in the aisles ten feet, and in the transept twenty-five feet. The walks extending across the building are all ten feet wide, and lead at either end to exit doors. The foundations of this building are piers of masonry, the superstructure consisting of solid timber columns supporting roof trusses, constructed of straight wooden principal beams and wrought-iron ties and struts. The columns are placed in longitudinal lines, and in these rows stand sixteen feet apart. The columns are forty feet high, and support respectively the ninety-feet roof-spans over the avenues at a height of forty feet, and the sixty-feet roof-spans over the aisles at a height of twenty feet. The outer walls are built of masonry to a height of five feet, and above that are composed of glazed sash between the columns. Portions of these sashes are movable for ventilation, and Louvre ventilators are introduced in continuous lengths over both the avenues and the aisles. The building is entirely lighted by side light from the north and south. Space in Machinery hall has been allotted as follows:

	Square feet.
Great Britain	35,725
Germany	1,098
France	11,219
Belgium	9,379
Brazil	4,000
Austria	1,536
Sweden	3,168
Canada	4,300
Spain	2,448
Russia	1,500
Denmark	585
Chili	408
Norway	360

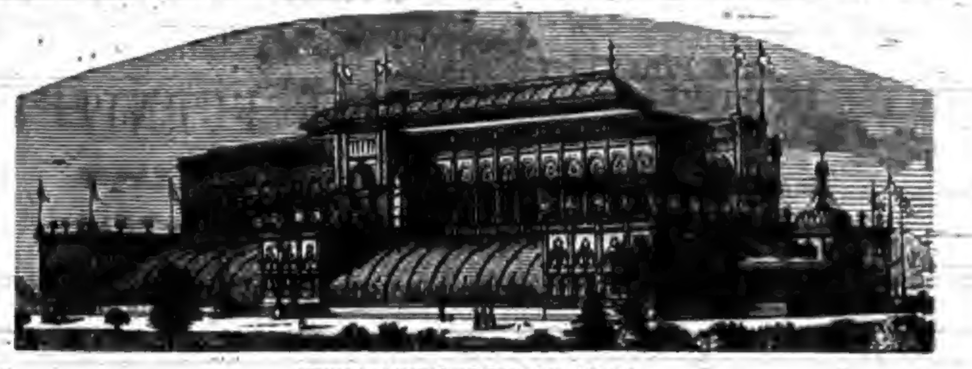
The United States occupies about 300,000 square feet.

THE ART GALLERY.

The most imposing and ornate of all the structures is Memorial hall, built at a cost of $1,500,000 by the State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia. This is placed at the disposal of the Centennial Commission, to be used during the Exhibition as an art gallery, after which it is designed to make it the receptacle of an industrial and art collection similar to the South Kensington Museum, at London. It stands on a line parallel with, and a short distance northward of, the main building, and is in a commanding position, looking southward across the Schuylkill over Philadelphia. It stands upon a terrace 122 feet above the level of the Schuylkill. Being designed for an absolutely fireproof structure, nothing combustible has been used. The design is modern renaissance. It covers an acre and a half, and is 365 feet long, 210 feet wide, and fifty-nine feet high, over a spacious basement twelve feet high. A dome, rising 150 feet above the ground, surmounts the center, capped by a colossal ball, from which rises the figure of Columbia. The main front of this building looks southward, displaying a main entrance in the center consisting of three enormous arched doorways, a pavilion on each end, and two arcades connecting the pavilions with the center. The entrance is seventy feet wide, to which there is a rise of thirteen steps. Each of the huge doorways is forty feet high and fifteen feet wide, opening into a hall. Between the arches of the doorways are clusters of columns, terminating in emblematic designs illustrative of science and art. The doors are of iron, relieved by bronze panels, displaying the coats of arms of all the States and Territories. The United States coat-of-arms is in the center of the main frieze. The dome is of glass and iron, of unique design. While Columbia rises at the top, a colossal figure stands at each corner of the base of the dome, typifying the four quarters of the globe.

In each pavilion there is a large window, twelve and one-half feet by thirty-four feet. There are altogether eight of these windows, which will be used for the display of stained glass, glass paintings, etc. Two of them have already been applied for from Munich, and application for space in them has also been made from England. The arcades designed to screen the long walls of the galleries each consist of five groined arches, and form promenades looking outward over the grounds and inward over open gardens extending back to the main wall of the building. These garden plats are each ninety feet by thirty-six feet, ornamented in the center with fountains, and intended to display statuary. The arcades are highly ornamented, and the balustrades of them and of the approaching stairways are also designed for statuary. The walls of the east and west sides of the structure display the pavilions and the walls of the picture galleries, and are relieved by niches designed for statues. The frieze is richly ornamented, and above it the central dome shows to great advantage. The rear or north front of the building is of the same general character as the main front, but, in place of the arcade, has a series of arched windows, twelve in number, with the entrance in the center. Between the pavilions is the grand balcony, a promenade two hundred and seventy-five feet long and forty-five feet wide, elevated forty feet above the ground, and overlooking to the northward the beautiful grounds of the park. On each front of the buildings the entrances open into halls eighty-two feet long, sixty feet wide, and fifty-three feet high, decorated in modern renaissance. These, in turn, open into the center hall, eighty-three feet square, the ceiling rising over it eighty feet in height. From the east and west sides of this center hall extend the galleries, each ninety-eight feet long, forty-eight feet wide, and thirty-five feet high.

These galleries admit of temporary divisions for the better display of paintings, and with the center hall form a grand hall 287 feet long and eighty-three feet wide, capable of comfortably accommodating 8,000 persons. This is nearly twice the dimensions of the largest hall in the United States. From the galleries doorways open into two smaller galleries, eighty-nine feet long and twenty-eight feet wide. These open north and south into private apartments connecting with the pavilion rooms, and forming two side galleries 210 feet long. Along the whole length of the north side of the main galleries and central hall extends a corridor fourteen feet wide, opening on its north line into a series of private rooms twenty-three in number, designed for studios and smaller exhibition rooms. All the galleries and the central hall are lighted from above; the pavilions and studios from the sides. The pavilions and central hall are designed especially for the exhibition of sculpture. This fine building gives 75,000 square feet of wall space for paintings, and 20,000 square feet of floor space for statues, etc. The skylights throughout are double, the upper being of clear glass and the under of ground glass.

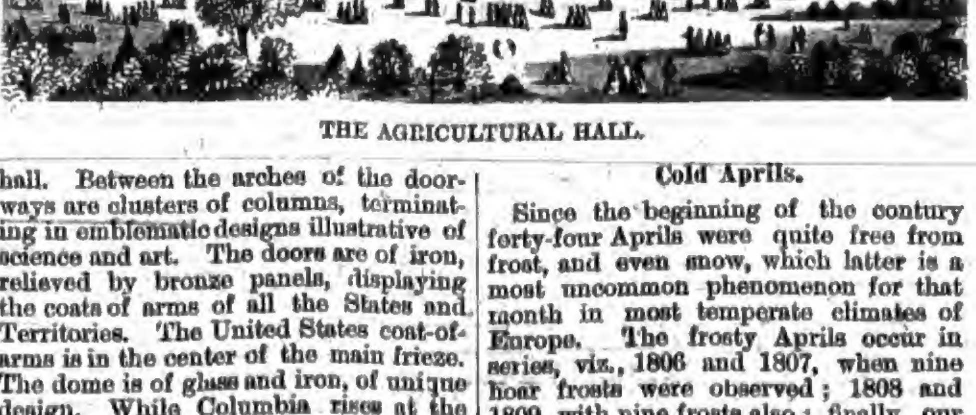


THE HORTICULTURAL HALL.

THE AGRICULTURAL BUILDING

stands north of the Horticultural building, being separated from it by a romantic ravine, and has a commanding view of the Schuylkill river and the northwestern suburbs of Philadelphia beyond. This building illustrates a novel combination of materials, mainly wood and glass, and consists of a long nave crossed by three transepts, each being composed of truss-arches of Gothic form. The nave is be 820 feet long by 125 feet in width, with a height of 75 feet from the floor to the point of the arch. The central transept is be 100 feet wide and 75 feet high, and the two end transepts 80 feet wide and 70 feet high. Its interior appearance resembles that of a great cathedral, and in looking from transept to transept, the vista extremely imposing. A portion of this building is supplied with steam power for the use of agricultural machinery. The four courts inclosed by the nave and transepts, and also the four spaces at the corners of the building, having the nave and end transepts for two of their sides, are roofed, and form valuable spaces for exhibits.

In addition to the grounds within the inclosure, an eligibly located stockyard, 22 acres in extent, has been provided for the display of live stock, which will be exhibited in a series of shows during the months of September, October, and November. Two farms, moreover, of about 50 acres each, have been suitably planted for the trials of agricultural machinery.



THE AGRICULTURAL HALL.

Cold Aprils.

Since the beginning of the century forty-four Aprils were quite free from frost, and even snow, which latter is a most uncommon phenomenon for that month in most temperate climates of Europe. The frosty Aprils occur in series, viz., 1806 and 1807, when nine hoar frosts were observed; 1808 and 1809, with nine frosts also; finally, our present series, which began in 1873. As another instance of the severity of this winter, it may be mentioned that the sea from Kertch to Tmutaracan has been frozen over this year for the first time since 1068.

A BAD era—cholera.

OUR CENTENNIAL.

BY E. NORMAN GUNNISON.

When freedom first her flag unfurled
  Across the land which now is free,
And struck its bright folds to the world,
  [illegible]
Her sons were faint, her ranks were few,
  Feeble her power and weak her hand;
The nursling up to manhood grew,
  And strode a giant o'er the land.

And now a hundred years have fled
  Since first the banner on the sky
Its glorious [illegible] outspread,
  [illegible] nigh.
Its constellation, burning bright,
  Has gained new stars from other spheres;
And caught the dawning of the light
  Which flames along the endless years.

Its sons have brought the lightning down,
  And harnessed it to do their will;
Its forts in every harbor frown,
  Its thunders sleep on every hill;
Its power is felt on land and sea,
  Its commerce sweeps across the tide,
And millions of the brave and free
  Nestle beneath its shelter wide.

The weary centuries effete
  Had grown through years of suffered wrong;
Before the march of Freedom's feet
  The Western world broke into song.
Art reared her temples in the land,
  The Christian's cross, the tapered spire,
Rose 'neath the touch of labor's hand,
  And glimmered in the sunset's fire.

The desert waste a garden grew
  In prairie land in tangled fen;
The world, astonished, paused to view
  The grand creative power of men.
Three millions saw the dawning light
  That bless'd the land with freedom's ray,
And forty millions hail the sight
  That breaks upon our eyes to-day.

The Old World brings her tribute here
  To lay before the New World's shrine;
The tropic's offering sincere—
  Its wealth of olives and of wine—
Is laid before our feet to-day.
  O happy omen, blessed sight
Where shone but dimly Freedom's ray,
  The world transfigured lies in light!

One hundred years of Freedom's reign!
  One hundred years of war and peace!
A golden century again
  Bourgeons and blossoms with increase.
Swift as the wind our couriers fly
  Across the land, from sea to sea;
In northern air, on tropic sky,
  Streams out the banner of the free.

And nestling 'neath each stripe and star,
  Atlantic waves, Pacific foam,
Viewing the nations from afar,
  Shout to their coming: "Welcome home!"
Welcome! Columbia's arms spread wide,
  She stands beside each busy mart,
And, thrilled with joy and touched with pride
  She folds the whole world to her heart.

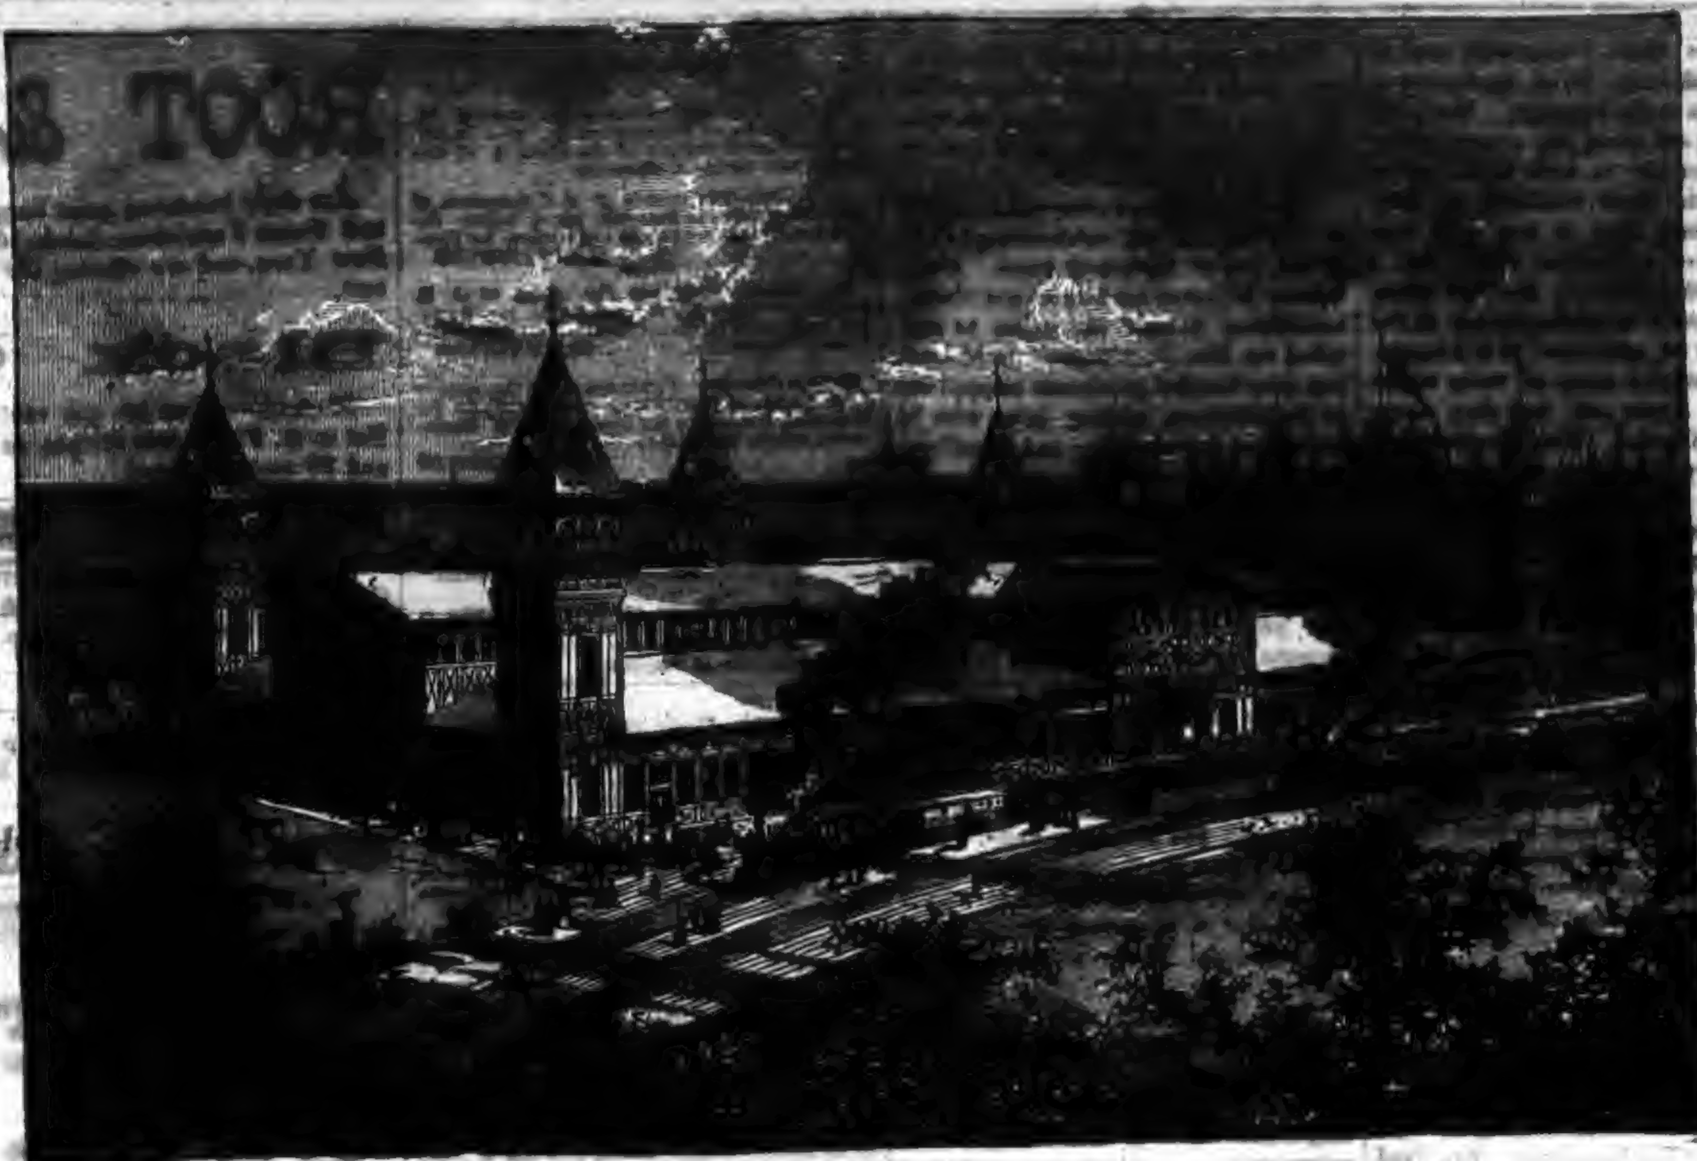
No bond of sect, no tie of creed,
  Can make or mar her generous plan;
The only plea that all must plead—
  The common brotherhood of man.
The diamond from Brazilian mines
  Gleams here by Afric's wealth of gold,
And silver from the long inclines
  Where Colorado's wealth is told.

And Asia lays her treasures down,
  Japan and India appear,
Bearing their offerings to crown
  The fullness of our hundredth year.
O Orient lands! where through the palms,
  With ceaseless tone, from morn till night,
The spicy breezes hymn their psalms,
  God give to you our boon of light!

And make you free as we are free,
  That, as the years shall disappear,
The West may reach across the sea
  To join in your Centennial year.
Your hundred years of freedom past,
  Your thousand years of peace to come,
Unbroken by the warlike blast
  Of trumpet, or the rolling drum.

O land Centennial to-day!
  God guard thee until time shall cease!
His blessings hover o'er thy way,
  And crown thee with His perfect peace!
O blood-bought land! Thy rocks and hills
  Are Freedom's birthplace; and the arch
Of heaven, that bends above thy rills,
  Is vocal with Time's grandest march.

For down the coming hundred years
  A hundred million unborn men
Close up each gap, where now appears
  A vacant spot by hill or glen.
A hundred thousand homes shall rise,
  With marts of trade, with lifted spires,
And in the light of Freedom's eyes
  Forever burn thy altar fires!



CENTENNIAL DEPOT, PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

The Pennsylvania railroad company, whose lines penetrate every section of the Union, and directly connect all important points with Philadelphia, has made magnificent preparations for conveying, with safety and comfort, the millions of people who intend visiting the Centennial Exhibition directly to the Centennial grounds. The location of the Exhibition made it impossible for any other railway to directly reach the Exhibition buildings and grounds, and the management, ever since the site was designated, has employed its gigantic equipments and unrivaled facilities to make the Exhibition a success, by providing the amplest accommodations at the minimum price, for both exhibitors and visitors. It was fitting that a railway company, national in its character and operations, should thus second the commissioners in illustrating our centennial history by demonstrating the high degree of excellence attained by the railway transportation system of America, in making the great thoroughfares uniting the Atlantic seaboard and the Mississippi valley, the West, Northwest and Southwest with the Centennial City, as perfect as possible in all its essentials and details.

Its routes follow the geographical channels of continental inter-communication, uniting most of the larger cities on the southern shores of the great lakes, on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, and on the Atlantic harbors. The main road from New York to Philadelphia, though passing through the principal cities of New Jersey, does not deviate six miles from an air line, and this deflection is due to the interposition of navigable waters. These routes not only excel in directness as well as in the number of important cities and towns they connect, but they are confessedly superior in construction and equipment. Between Pittsburgh and New York, 444 miles, the entire line is double track, laid with heavy steel rails with joints connected between ties by a process that gives the effect of continuous rail, on which there can be no unpleasant jarring. All bridges on the line are of iron or stone. A large portion of this distance is provided with a third track, which enables freight trains to keep entirely out of the way of passenger travel, and permits the express trains to run their allotted distance without interruption, and near Philadelphia, and other important terminal points, four tracks have, for considerable distances, been completed.

The Block signal system, exclusively used on the Pennsylvania railroad throughout its entire length, compels the engineer of a train to know whether the track is clear or not to the next station, be it one or ten miles, and every modern appliance for combining the highest speed with the most perfect safety has been adopted. The company has built 200 elegant cars, with engines of the first class ample to move all trains that may possibly be required.

Centennial visitors will find the Pennsylvania road the only direct route from the West, North and East to the Centennial Exhibition, the rates as low as by any other route, the time made by it the quickest, and the accommodations for comfort, luxury and safety unequaled. Careful agents, on all trains, will arrange for the prompt and cheap delivery of all baggage, and, for fifty cents, sell seats in a comfortable carriage to any point in Philadelphia.

Above all, these visitors will be landed at the very doors of the Exposition, in the beautiful Centennial depot of the company represented in the above cut. It stands opposite the open space separating the Main exhibition building from Machinery hall, facing the principal entrance gate and the Judge's pavilion, and in close proximity to several immense hotels and restaurants. It is 340 feet in length by 100 in width, two stories high, and surmounted by six towers. In design it is tasteful and ornamental, comparing favorably with the many beautiful strucures erected for the purposes of the Exhibition. The first floor contains a general waiting room, 130 by 100 feet, a ladies' waiting room eighty-one by 100 feet, a baggage room forty-nine by 100 feet, a ticket office thirty by forty feet, a package room ten by thirty feet, and a number of retiring rooms, all handsomely finished, and provided with every convenience. The rooms on the second floor are for the use of the railroad officials and employees.

This depot is reached by a circle of three tracks sweeping from the main roadway four-fifths of a mile long, and the diameter of the circle they describe is 600 feet. All trains will enter this circle heading west, and depart from the depot heading east. Three trains can be landing or receiving passengers in front of the depot at the same time, the entire tracks being floored over, and no matter in what direction the trains may come or go, they can be moved without confusion, delay or danger.

Seventeen additional sidings have been constructed, connected with this circle, of a length of 1,000 feet each, upon which waiting trains can be run and remain with engines attached, until the time arrives for them to enter upon the circle, receive their passengers, and depart for destination. This arrangement of tracks and sidings is novel, and affords facilities for the transaction, without detention or confusion, of an almost unlimited passenger business.

HORTICULTURAL BUILDING.

The city of Philadelphia made a liberal grant of money to provide for the Horticultural department of the Exhibition, an extremely ornate and commodious building, which is designed to remain in permanence as an ornament of Fairmount Park. This structure is located on a terrace bordering the Schuylkill river, a short distance north of Memorial hall, and has a commanding view of the Schuylkill river valley and the northwestern portions of Philadelphia. Romantic ravines running down to the river are on either side, separating it on the south from Memorial hall and on the north from Agricultural building. These ravines are spanned by ornamental bridges 500 feet long and 60 feet wide, for convenience of access. Carriage roads, a railway, and foot walks, pass over them. The Horticultural building is designed in the Moresque style of architecture of the twelfth century, the chief materials externally being iron and glass, supported by fine marble and brick work. The building is 383 feet long, 193 feet wide and 72 feet high to the top of the lantern. The main floor is occupied by the central conservatory, 230 feet by 80 feet, and 55 feet high, surmounted by a lantern 170 feet long, 20 feet wide, and 14 feet high. Running entirely around this conservatory, at a height of 20 feet from the floor, is a gallery five feet wide.

On the north and south sides of this principal room are 4 forcing houses for the propagation of young plants, each of them 100 feet by 30 feet, and covered by curved roofs of iron and glass, which, appearing upon the exterior of the building, present a very fine feature. A vestibule 30 feet square separates the two forcing houses on each side, and there are similar vestibules at the center of the east and west ends, on either side of which are apartments for restaurants, reception rooms, offices, etc. Ornamental stairways lead from these vestibules to the internal galleries of the conservatory, as well as 4 external galleries, each 100 feet long and 10 feet wide, which surmount the roofs of the forcing houses. These external galleries are connected with a grand promenade, formed by the roofs of the rooms on the lower floor, giving a superficial area of about 17,000 square feet.

The east and west entrances to the Horticultural building are approached by flights of blue marble steps, from terraces 80 feet by 20 feet, in the center of each of which stands an open kiosque 20 feet in diameter. Each entrance is beautified by ornamental tile and marble work, and the angles of the main conservatory are to be adorned with 80 attractive fountains. The corridors connecting the conservatory with the surrounding apartments open fine vistas in every direction, and the beauties of the surrounding park, with the river flowing in front and more than 100 feet beneath the building, add to the attractions. Extensive heating arrangements are provided in the basement, which is of fire-proof construction, and the restaurant kitchens will also be located there.

Surrounding this building there are thirty-five acres of ground, which will be devoted to horticultural purposes, and have been suitably planted. In this plot there is an extensive series of sunken gardens.

THE STATE BUILDINGS—A PLEASANT FEATURE.

A very pleasing feature of the Exhibition will be the number of ornamental and well appointed State buildings. Of these there are at least a couple of dozen—all in harmony with the great structures, and typical of the old and new commonwealths of the East and West, North and South, that they are supposed to represent. The first that claims attention is the ILLINOIS BUILDING.

It is without question one of the prettiest edifices within the inclosure, and in saying thus much, but feebly expresses the experiences of all who thus far have been fortunate enough to catch a glimpse of it. It is flanked by Indiana on the east and Wisconsin on the west, and the contrast is both agreeable and pleasant. The style of architecture can't be compared to anything else than one of the elegant cottages of one of the many beautiful cities and towns of the State. It is constructed entirely of wood, a story and a half in height, with a peaked roof; sloping at the four sides to the eaves, where it overhangs, or rather projects, beyond the sides. The projection is in the nature of fine scroll work—not gaudy or overdone, but at once attractive and pleasing. The crown or ridge of the roof is further ornamented with an elegantly wrought iron railing. In form it may be described as a parallelogram, and measures about sixty feet in front by some eighty feet in depth. There are no gaudy colors; the exterior is painted in white, while the interior, which, unlike many of the buildings of the sister States, is lathed and plastered, and is papered as well. In the finish there has been great good taste displayed. Wherever the eye rests there is an assurance of comfort. Everything suggests ease, and everything indicates the purpose for which the structure was erected.

KANSAS.

In going a little out of the natural course for the sake of taking up the description of a building which is second to no other, and which is in justice to the rapidly-growing young commonwealth of Kansas, the writer should be pardoned. It is in the Gothic style of architecture, quite imposing in appearance, being in the form of a cross. It is but one story in height, but is surmounted with a cupola, while around are numerous dormer windows. While being unpretentious in appearance, except it may be in its size, which is 160x 160 feet, there is that about the building, or rather the use to which it is to be put, is such as to give it a place of no mean consideration.

OHIO AND INDIANA.

The first State building, north of Belmont drive, is the pretty structure erected by the State of Ohio for the use of the Commissioners and for the accommodation of the guests from that State. The front portion is built of stone furnished entirely from the quarries of the State, and, as a consequence, there are numerous hues and colors. It is indeed a fine exhibit of the stone quarried in the Buckeye State. The rear portion is of timber painted to harmonize with the other part of the structure, and all the material used has been furnished by different parties throughout the State. It is essentially an Ohio building, as much so as if erected in Cincinnati, Columbus, or Cleveland. While accommodations of the best kind will be offered to all who may drop in, an opportunity will also be afforded to inspect the numerous and varied exhibits from that State. A few feet off is the building erected by the Commissioners of Indiana. Of the style of architecture but little can be said, as it would seem to any one that no attempt had been made in that direction, but that the idea rather was to provide a good, comfortable place for the people of that State, where they might rest and meet their friends. It may be said to consist of a center hall lighted by means of a skylight, with four smaller rooms, two on either side, designed for ladies and gentlemen, and each arranged so that the most absolute privacy may be secured. It is light and airy, and the fitting up has been done with a due regard to the tastes and wants of the people.

WISCONSIN, MICHIGAN, AND IOWA.

The next adjoining, or rather the next in regular order, is the structure erected by the Commissioners of the State of Wisconsin for themselves and their large and rapidly growing constituency which will during the next six months visit the great exhibition. It is a neat two-story building of the cottage style, with a veranda on its three sides. Hon. David Attwood, ex-member of Congress and United States Centennial Commissioner, has given the building his personal attention, and he assures all who may be interested in it that it is entirely up to the requirements, and that nothing is lacking in the way of comforts for the weary or those in quest of information.

Near by, not more than a dozen yards off, is the structure designed for the State of Michigan. As yet it is but half finished, but as no attempt is to be made at ornamentation the assurance is given that it will be entirely finished and ready for occupancy within a couple of weeks. What has been said of the above building may with equal truth be stated in reference to the Iowa edifice, with this fact in addition, that it is probably not so far advanced as the other. The style is of the simple kind of architecture, with no effort at ornamentation, but with the desire on the part of the Commissioners of the State to provide a structure that may be at once a means of accommodation for the people of the "Prairie State," and to place within their reach every information bearing upon the Exhibition that may be desired.

ECONOMIC VISITING.

A Boston woman, writing to a friend, says, "there is a large class of highly educated persons in New England and New York who would most thoroughly enjoy and appreciate the Centennial exhibition of some arrangement" like that which she suggests could be made. The plan is, without doubt, perfectly practicable, and might be taken up and crystalized by parties of ladies (or gentlemen) in other sections of the country to their advantage. While the charges for board and lodging in Philadelphia and vicinity during the progress of the Centennial exhibition will not be so exorbitant as some papers insist, there is still an opportunity for persons of moderate means who may desire to visit the Centennial, see everything worth the seeing and enjoy themselves accordingly, and that without the outlay of an extravagant amount of money. Not only in New England and New York, but throughout the entire country, there are thousands of highly educated and intelligent persons who will desire to give themselves the pleasure of a visit to the Exhibition. This pleasure they can give themselves if they are inclined to bestow a little care and thought upon the proper arrangements for a visit. We subjoin extracts from a private letter written by the wife of one of the Harvard College professors, in order that friends further away may take from it such hints as will be of service to them in arranging a visit during the summer.

The letter begins by speaking of the "money outlay" contingent upon a visit to Philadelphia, and then goes on to say: "If they could go somewhat in the way people go in summer to the seashore, on a sort of camping-out principle, they could form parties and share expenses, and so be able to go, when a regular boarding house or lodgings would seem too expensive to be thought of. The plan proposed was to take a house in some town or country village on some railroad, near enough for the fares to be cheap. A small, plain house, say parlor, dining-room, and kitchen on the ground floor, and perhaps one more room a bed-room—four bed-rooms above. Furnished very simply with tables, chairs, and cooking stove, and a few cooking utensils; tea-kettle, spider, kettle, dishpan, etc.; a little very plain crockery. The bed-rooms with bedsteads and mattresses and pillows; wash-stands, crockery, etc.; tables, chairs, and looking-glasses. Fuel and gas or lamps supplied. Then the house extensively advertised as to let by the week, parties wishing to engage the house have a list set them of the weeks free, that so far as they may choose their own time. Parties to bring their own bed and table linen and towels, forks and spoons and knives and their own provisions as far as they choose. Their dinners they can get in the grounds. In short, to live as people do in some of our seashore places, where a party of twenty will take a house for a week or fortnight, living in a picnic fashion, and at very small expense.

"Suppose such a house could be rented for $20 a week, that for six months would be $520. Divide the $20 among eight people, the smallest number should propose for a party, and that is only $2.50 a week for lodging, and a larger party, of course, diminishes the expense. Fuel and lights should be charged as a party use them. It would need some responsible person to certify that the house was respectable and fairly comfortable, and to see that between the different parties it was put in neat and decent order. And it should be advertised in papers with a good country circulation."

A plan very similar to that suggested above could be arranged with most satisfactory results.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITIONS.

It is a quarter of a century since the world's fair in the Hyde Park Crystal Palace set the fashion among the nations of the earth of meeting at intervals in the great capital cities to compare progress in art and industry and learn what they could from one another. The results of that experiment made by the London Society of Arts in 1851 were so valuable and so quickly apparent that the supreme importance of such exhibitions has ever since been admitted, and for the last fifteen years not a twelvemonth has passed without an international display of greater or less extent in some city in Europe. None of the larger fairs, except that of 1851, have paid their cost, in the shape of direct pecuniary returns; yet no one questions that the indirect profit has in all cases been enormous to every nation participating in the assemblage whether as host or guest. The French Government was so well persuaded of this that it appropriated 12,000,000 francs for the Exhibition of 1867, one-half to be paid by the State and one-half by the City of Paris, and felt itself justified in dividing an apparent surplus of receipts among the private guarantors, instead of applying it to the reduction of this appropriation, on the ground that the country had received more than an equivalent for its expenditure. Even the enormous deficit of $9,000,000 in the Vienna enterprise of 1873 is looked upon as the result of mismanagement and accident, and by no means shades the confident belief of the world that exhibits are worth all they cost.

The tendency of recent years has been to rely more and more upon the aid and direction of Government in carrying on these undertakings, and the sixth of the great world's fairs which opens to-day in Philadelphia presents some remarkable and instructive contrasts to the chief of its predecessors. It is by far the most imposing in extent, and in certain departments it is probably the richest of any that the world has yet seen. If we reckon in its total cost the sums which exhibitors and foreign Governments have spent for the transportation of their goods, the maintenance of Commissioners, etc., it may perhaps be regarded as more expensive even than that of Vienna, while it is more than twice as costly as the Paris Exposition of 1867. Yet it is the work of an association of private citizens who have had few opportunities to study the experience of other nations in such affairs, and who found nothing in the experience of their own country except blunders and discredit. The wretched failure made by the New York Exhibition of 1853 and the lamentable figure which America presented at Vienna certainly gave us no reason to expect a successful issue of the work just accomplished at Fairmount Park. But private citizens have triumphed where Government officials would have failed. private citizens, happily chosen, shouldered the responsibility, collected the funds, devised the whole scheme of organization, perfected the details of management, roused the interest of foreign nations, and stimulated the laggard enthusiasm of our own people. There is no parallel for such a work in the history of the world's great fairs. The Hyde Park and South Kensington palaces were not public enterprises, but they were undertaken by an influential corporation under Government patronage. Private companies had something to do with the two Paris Expositions, but it was really the state which managed and paid for them. Here, however, the co-operation of the Government was purely formal until the undertaking was substantially finished, and then Congress only contributed a moderate sum of money to cover deficiencies which would perhaps not have existed but for the recent financial disasters. The whole scheme springs right from the midst of the people; the great complicated work is improvised by a few bankers, merchants, editors, professors, manufacturers, and railroad men.

How to Get Rid of a Cold.

Few unimportant maladies are more disagreeable than a cold in the head, and how to get rid of it is a problem not always easy of practical solution. Some people resort to "sudorifics and lying in bed," others to large and frequent doses of quinine, and others to persistent and resolute dippings of their heads in cold water—the colder the better. But Dr. Ferrier, in to-day's Lancet, recommends a novel cure, which he has tried with excellent effect in three cases—his own and those of two other persons. The local symptoms of cold in the head—namely, watery eyes, running nose, sneezing, and nasal speech—are, as Dr. Ferrier says, the chief source of annoyance and discomfort. Local treatment, therefore, seems to him to be the most rational. In the catarrh of alcoholism, and in more chronic forms of gastric catarrh, bismuth alone or in combination with morphia acts almost like a specific. Dr. Ferrier came to the conclusion then that in nasal catarrh—i. e., cold in the head—the same drug by itself or with others would prove efficacious. On a certain evening recently, Dr. Ferrier says, "I began to suffer with the symptoms of cold in the head—irritation of the nostrils, sneezing, watering of the eyes, and commencing flow of the mucous secretion. Having some trisnitrate of bismuth at hand, I took repeated pinches of it in the form of snuff, inhaling it strongly so as to carry it well into the interior of the nostrils. In a short time the tickling in the nostrils and sneezing ceased, and next morning all traces of coryza had completely disappeared." Dr. Ferrier adds: "The formula which I find on the whole the the most suitable combination of the ingredients of the snuff is as follows: Hydrochlorate of morphia, two grains; acacia powder, two drachms; trisnitrate of bismuth, six drachms. As this is neither an errhine nor a sternutatory, but rather the opposite, it may be termed an anti-errhine or anti-sternutatory powder. Of this powder one-quarter to one-half may be taken as snuff in the course of twenty-four hours. The inhalations ought to be commenced as soon as the symptoms of coryza begin to show themselves, and should be used frequently at first, so as to keep the interior of the nostrils constantly well coated. Each time the nostrils are cleared another pinch should be taken. It may be taken in the ordinary manner from between the thumb and forefinger, but a much more efficacious and less wasteful method is to use a small gutter of paper, or a 'snuff spoon,' placing it just within the nostril and sniffing up forcibly so as to carry it well within. Some of the snuff usually finds way into the pharynx, and acts as a good topical application, should there be also pharyngeal catarrh. The powder causes scarcely any perceptible sensation. A slight smarting may occur if the mucus membrane is much irritated and inflamed, but it rapidly disappears. After a few sniffs of the powder a perceptible amelioration of the symptoms ensues, and in the course of a few hours, the powder being inhaled from time to time, all the symptoms may have entirely disappeared." This is worth knowing and remembering in the present season of hot sun and cold winds.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Austria Preparing for War.

The Government here is preparing for the gravest eventualities. It knows that among the Bulgarians Panslavic agitators are actively at work, and that soon the revolutionary fires may break out in the ravines of the Balkan. The false news of the abdication of the Czar Alexander was received with the greatest joy by all the Austrian and Turkish Slaves; the contradiction of it is not believed, and as the Czarowitz, without or with reason, is regarded as the head of Panslavism, the revolutionary fire increases among the Austrian Slaves. Almost daily fresh measures taken by the Administration of War become known to the public, each one in itself insignificant, but altogether affording a proof that every preparation is being made for a rapid movement of the troops; and all the details of organization necessary for an army in active service are being arranged, in case Austria should be compelled at last to proceed to extremities. In the arsenals at Vienna and Pola work is carried on without intermission. Both the Danube monitors have been armed and will go to Semlin, opposite Belgrade. The formation of a corps of messengers on horseback over 3,000 men strong from the cavalry regiments has been ordered, and it has been decided that the Austrian Landwehr and Hungarian Honveds shall be attached to the standing army, so that each regiment will be at least stronger by a battalion when it takes the field, and besides these sufficient troops remain in the depots and garrisons to man the fortresses. Austria, as I have said, has not yet drawn the sword, but her hand is on the hilt.—Vienna Cor. London Standard.

Cash Value of an Optic.

The value of an eye in California seems to range from $299 to $500. A man in Santa Clara recovered $299 from a barbarian who carried his umbrella on his shoulder and punched out his eye, and a lecturer on chemistry in San Francisco, who destroyed the eye of an auditor by an accidental explosion, has been mulcted in the some of $500.

LIEUT. ERTEL, of the Austrian army, who sold official documents to the ambassador of a foreign Government, has been tried as a spy and condemned to dismissal from the service, loss of nobility, and ten years' imprisonment, with one day's fasting every month.

Township Caucuses.

MR. EDITOR—At the meeting of the County Democratic Central Committee, April 8th, at which I acted as the chairman, it was recommended that there be held in the several election precincts of the county township caucuses to select the delegates to which they are entitled in the County Convention on the Saturday preceding the convention, unless a different time be chosen by the township organizations. Therefore the several township caucuses will be held at the usual place of holding elections on Saturday June 3rd, 1876, at 2 o'clock p. m. (unless as stated as above.)

W. H. DILLS, Chairman Pro tem.

☞ The County Convention will be held June 10th, 1876.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C. May 22, 1876.

DEAR COURIER—These hot mornings, a walk along the Avenue to the Capitol, reveals the fact that the sun is directly in advance of you, and there is no possible chance to escape his presence, hug the buildings as close as you may. I sometimes think this street was laid out with special reference to mark the course old Sol should take, as he never varys, in the summer, in taking the center at the Capitol in the morning, and keeping it all the live-long day until he goes down behind the Treasury building at night. The only comfort I now enjoy, besides those usual to a virtuous life, is to wander into the lobby and gaze wistfully at the signal service report from Dakotale territory, whence the blue and black discs represent snow.

But I must not forget the claims of your lady readers, who are not generally interested in the perusal of facts connected with these political times, so I purpose to give them the benefit of part of this letter. It is interesting to see a lady read a newspaper. She takes it up hurriedly and begins to scan it over rapidly, as though she was hunting some particular thing; but she is not. She is merely taking in the obscure paragraphs which she half believes were put in the out-of-the-way places for the purpose of keeping her from seeing them. As she finishes each one, her countenance brightens with the comforting reflection that she has out witted the editor and the whole race of men, for she cherishes vague belief that newspapers are enemies of her sex, and editors its chief oppressors. She never reads the headings, and the huge telegraph heads she never even sees. She is greedy for local news, and devours it with the keenest relish. Marriages and deaths are always interesting reading to her, and advertisements are exciting and stimulating. She cares but little for printed jokes, unless they reflect ridicule upon the men, and then she delights in them and never forgets them. She pays particular attention to anything inclosed by quotation marks, and considers it rather better authority than any first-handed. The columns in which the editor airs his opinions in leaded hifalutin she rarely reads. Views are of no importance in her estimation, but facts are everything. She generally reads the poetry. She doesn't always care for it, but she makes a practice of reading it because she thinks she ought to. She reads stories and sketches and paragraphs indiscriminately, and believes every word of them. Finally, after she has read all she intends to, she lays the paper down with an air of disappointment, and a half contemptuous gesture, which says very plainly that she thinks all newspapers miserable failures, but is certain that if she had a chance she could make the only perfect newspaper the world had ever seen.

I trust, however, they will be more lenient toward a poor correspondent, and look upon his imperfections with a more liberal heart.

I wish all of your readers could have seen this city last evening. There were just enough clouds to prevent the sun from being too conspicious, and the gentle breeze from the historic Potomac made the heat more bearable to the dense throng that lined the avenue. Activity generally begins about four o'clock in the afternoon. Then the Treasury girls, swarm from their cool neat rooms in that building, and soon a line of gay colors stretches away down toward the capitol. All the departments in fact empty their loving contents upon the streets, and three thousand young ladies form a pageant, which susceptible young man always pronounces "perfectly splendid," and I fear it is not confined to young men in this city. Many of the girls are pretty, in fact, I am ingenuous enough to say that many of them are indebted to their beauty for their positions. When members are sent here who ignore female comeliness, then this order of things may change. Such a rule as that, however, would forever prevent your humble servant from having any aspirations in that direction.

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead" would then be as applicable to the ladies as to his country. Well, the girls string out along the avenue, stopping occasionally to look at the pretty things in the show windows, as they saunter along arm in arm, and they seem to have a pleasant life. But, I doubt whether it would prove so pleasant as it seems, if one could get at the real history of each one. It is a thorny path at best, and many of them would have been better off, had they never seen the Capitol. The Marine band plays every Saturday evening at the President's ground, and thousands go there for enjoyment. The first blush of spring, gorgeous in its beauty, captivates the eye, and soft sweet music floats entrancingly upon the ear. The soft green grass is now mown, and the balmy air laden with perfume intoxicates the senses. The scene is made still more beautiful with brilliant toilets and handsome women. But the most charming feature to me, was, the enjoyment of the little folks in their sports and gambols on the green. On these occasions they are allowed the freedom of the green lawns and their enjoyment is simply delightful.

The presidential family generally favor these levees with its presence, by occupying the semi-circle balcony on the east of the White House. Last evening Mrs. Grant was the center of the group, and seemed entirely at ease on her cushioned tete-a-tete. Mrs. Fred Grant, in light blue silk, looked as affable and smiling as ever, while the ever-sad face of Mrs. Morton, at her side looked passively down on the scene below. The President sat there with a plug hat on, smoking the inevitable cigar, and seemed to enjoy conversation with one or two gentlemen friends one of whom, by his gray hairs, I discovered to be Zach Chandler.
